Koosman gave up only three hits and three walks in six and two thirds innings before being lifted in favor of McGraw who set down the only Athletics threat in the seventh and went on to clinch the shutout.

The Mets first drew blood in the second when Cleon Jones, who played the entire game while ill with the flu, drove a Vida Blue pitch over Joe Rudi's head into deep left field for a lead-off double. John "Hammer" Milner followed with a single past Dick Green to drive Jones in. The other Met run came in the sixth when Jerry Grote hit a two out single to center and Don "Hondo" Hahn followed with a triple to left-centerfield. Both runs came off A's starter Vida Blue.

The only threat the A's could muster came in the seventh. Gene Tenace lead off with a walk. After Jesus Alou fouled out to Grote, Ray Fosse got his second hit of the series, a double in the left-field alley. At this point, Met manager Yogi Berra took Koosman out of the game and sent in his ace reliever, McGraw. After a walk to pinchhitter Deron Johnson, Angel Mangual, batting for reliever Darold Knowles, popped up to Met shortstop Buddy Harrelson and Campy Campaneris ended the inning by taking a called third strike.

With this victory, the Mets did what they felt they had to do, so far, to win the series. They lost the first game, 2-1, on two unearned runs. They almost blew the second game when McGraw gave up two runs in the ninth to give Oakland a 6-6 tie, but the New Yorkers came back in the twelfth inning to win that game 10-7.

Two seeing eye hits and a stolen base by Campaneris gave the Swingin' A's the third game of the series. In that game, Met ace Tom Seaver struck out twelve but grew weak in the eighth, giving up the tying run. A missed third strike by Grote set up Campaneris' single scoring what proved to be the winning run in the eleventh.

Then the Mets came back Wednesday night with Rusty Staub driving in five of the six Met runs while Jon Matlack pitched a beautiful game, bringing the Mets even in the Series.

And now the Mets have last night's game in the bag with Jerry Koosman showing how good he can be by leading the Miracle Mets to a 2-0 shutout.

The World Series will now move to Oakland for at least Saturday and game six. The Mets need win one out of two while Oakland must win two straight games to defend their World Championship title. The pressure squarely rests on the Oakland A's, a dissention-torn team. Will they do it or will they not? It will be interesting to see, as this is an interesting Series.

Gone Is The Glory

Where has all the glory gone?

It used to be that the World Series was one of, if not the most exciting spectacle in all of sport. This is no longer the case.

Throughout the years the series has declined in impact to the point where it is now just another championship series, no better or worse than the Super Bowl, Stanley Cup, or NBA playoff.

The situation is blatantly obvious in this year's Series. The controversy surrounding the Athletics and the play of both teams have been nothing short of bush.

The insanity of Charlie Finley has indeed been a blow to the World Series image. His treatment of the Mike Andrews incident was degrading to Andrews, the Athletics, and all of baseball.

Dick Williams talk of resigning has come at a most inopportune time. It merely draws more attention to the A's off-field antics and squabbles with their owner.

The play itself, by both teams, has not even begun to approach major league caliber. Outstanding execution is not necessarily a prerequisite for excitement, but this year's Series has been a showcase for the mediocre.

Errors were the deciding factor in the first three games. A Felix Millan miscue opened the door for the two Oakland runs in the first game. Mike Andrews, in the situation that spurred the controversy, made two errors in the twelfth inning of the second game, allowing the Mets to escape with a 10-7 victory. Jerry Grote's passed ball set the stage for a run scoring single in the third game, also in extra innings.

Another disturbing occurence took place in Tuesday's third game. Cleon Jones, suffering from the flu, was shown getting sick on national television. If that wasn't enough, NBC color man Tony Kubek asked for, but thankfully didn't receive an instant replay.

Neither the Mets or the A's have that one outstanding player who has stepped to the front to lead his team through the Series. Tom Seaver can't do this as he is a pitcher who will only see action in two games. The only Met player who comes close to the ideal Series hero is Rusty Staub, but he lacks the flair and total game-breaking controls exhibited by heroes in the past.

On the Athletics' side, Reggie Jackson and Sal Bando both have the tools, but, as of yet, neither has assumed the hero's role.

The last great player to dominate a World Series was the late Roberto Clemente. In 1971, Clemente single-handedly led the Pittsburgh Pirates over the Orioles.

In the '73 World Series, the biggest hero so far has been Yogi Berra. Between every inning, NBC gets Yogi in the field of view and Curt Gowdy extols him and all his great Series accomplishments. This only increases the sense of loss and disappointment we get from watching the ineffective failings of the two opposing teams.

Which Way Did They Go

The South Deerfield And Belchertown Buses

by Ed Cohen

The parking controversy is a storm that rages on. Caught in the middle of this maelstorm are the commuters living in Belchertown and South Deerfield. They're suffering right now because their bus routes were axed to service the new parking system.

For those not familiar with the bus story, let us turn the pages of time back a few years. Originally, the new bus system was first conceived of in 1970-71 to resolve problems in parking and traffic congestion. There was already a plan for a pedestrian core campus and increased mass transportation at that time, so a federal research grant for a demonstration bus system fit right in with administration timetables. The grant was announced in April of 1972 to begin in the Spring of 1973.

The original Belchertown Center and South Deerfield routes were experimental in nature, since they were not included as part of the transportation proposal, that immortal document, DMG6. "The only thing that we've actually added on", stated Bob Godding, Transit Operations Manager, "was the distance from the end of these Sunderland and Belchertown Road routes out to Belchertown Center and South Deerfield. We decided that we had the money, so we'd try it out."

So try it out they did. And according to Godding, it seemed to work out pretty well.

On February 28, 1973, the night service to the outlying routes was begun in response to requests from women's groups and others concerned about rapes and attempted rapes of hitchhikers in the U.Mass. area. The Student Senate at this time voted to pick up the tab for the drivers' salaries of the entire evening service, with fuel and maintenance costs supplied by the grant. Godding estimated the costs to be about $60 per night for drivers' salaries and fuel.

These services continued relatively smoothly. Then came the decision to cut the two routes from the service. A

Memory Fades With My Flesh

by Carolyn Merriam

A sliver of light appears along a wall, I squint at the brightness and catch sight of an eye peering into the dark. Obligingly I cough, give them a sign that I still live, and the eye and light disappear into the wall. Their concern for my well-being is overwhelming. Every so often the cyclops peers in at me, and once in what I assume is every twenty-four hours, I find thin gruel in my wooden bowl. I don't remember how long this has gone on, my only perception of time is the melting away of my flesh. My body was healthy and strong, now it is thin and ulcerous. I have lived, if this is living, in this space of blackness for perhaps, seventy pounds.

I spend some of my conscious state wondering what has happened to the others. Are they encased in a cement block without the comforts of another human being, light, or warmth? Are they tortured by the loneliness, dark, and cold? Perhaps they no longer enjoy the wonders of living. I worry if it is day or night, the darkness merges all time into unmeasurable oblivion. I try to sort out each day in my mind, but my memory fades with my flesh. I work elaborate fantasies in the void, and am uncertain if I see them with my eyes or my mind. They remind me of dreams — could it be that they are dreams and not the fantasies of a conscious mind? I brush this thought aside, I concentrate on the sound of rain. No it isn't rain, it's the sound my tears make as they puddle on the floor. Tears. My only companions; gentle, tender souls. Perhaps this is death, this emptiness is immortality, and this cement that envelopes me is my coffin. Oh God, trapped in this cold, bleak box forever. No, no don't let this be the afterlife, don't let this be my eternity, my forever and ever. Oh, God; oh, God! Stop it, you're losing control of yourself! I'll be all right now, I won't think of it like that, I'll think of something else. I'll think of blue skies, sunshine, flowers, trees, anything but death and blackness. I'll close my eyes and picture everything beautiful. Maybe I'll fall asleep and dream delightful dreams. But what if I'm sleeping now?

Getting Involved

by Jim Lavrakas

After ten minutes the screaming became too much, Steve was in the bathroom for about five minutes and could hear Bob banging the girl's head against the door, bang. She screamed and continued. Things were being broken in the room.

"Isn't there anyone on this floor who will help me?"

Steve was six three but still respected Bob's short bearish build. He looked for someone else on the floor to go to Bob's door but could turn up no one. So he called the police. The police came and while the two Southerners down the hall peeped in and out of the proceedings, the police took the girl from the room.

Steve had been friends with this fellow Bob for a few months. Bob was a bastard, the son of a whore from Worcester, and had been adopted by a wealthy Black couple. They had adopted other children. One of the other children Bob found out was his real brother. Bob claimed that he always beat his girlfriends. He sometimes pimped them.

Two days after Steve called the police he went over to Bob's room. Bob offered to smoke some dope. Steve said okay. Steve wanted to see something. You're my friend he told Bob. I know who called. Bob was interested. I was one of the people.

Chris had called the police too. Steve had missed him or they would have gone to Bob's door. Steve said that he couldn't give the other guy's name. Bob grew silent. Then, do you know what it's like to be able to say that you helped kill a man? Steve didn't understand. Bob explained. He and some friends rolled a man one night on their way back from a club downtown. They were really drunk. Drunker than they thought. They hit the man too many times too hard. When they finished, the man was dead.

Steve understood. Bob said that he had until nine-thirty to give him the name of the caller or he would have to find out for himself. Steve left the room. The girl who had been beaten limped up the hall and kissed Bob as she slipped into the room.

Steve left the dorm that night and didn't come back until the next morning.

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor:

I was insulted to find that it was stated in Nick Apostola: The Student Trustee by Barbara Voorhees in the Poor Richards of Oct. 12, 1973 that prior to last May's SGA convention I had gone to the Bluewall; such a statement I take as a scurrilous lie. In fact I went to the Drake and not with Henry Ragin "and another friend" (R.D. Dinkin). But rather I drank with John Coffin (fellow senator from Pierpont at that time), and his roommate. It is my sincere request that any statements made with respect to me be factual and accurate, any further statements which are as defamatory as the statement that I drank whiskey in the Bluewall after 7—72 will make me exceedingly annoyed.

If it seems odd that I consider the Bluewall an insult let me explain that I see the Bluewall as a major contributing factor to a large part of the alcoholism on campus (cheap drinks near at hand).

Amherst Towing: "We Want To Be Your Friend"

By Barbara Voorhees

Like thieves in the night!

Or in the morning, or the afternoon, or whenever you have to leave your car someplace — well, you know it's an illegal spot, but it's just for your 9:05 or just for the night.

They won't catch you.

But then — it's GONE! Where in hell is your car?

Amherst Towing Incorporated is about a mile and a half hitch from the Campus Center. Just north of the North Amherst Post Office on Old Sunderland Road. Next to Puffer Construction Company.

There are no signs on the building identifying it. But then they don't like attention too much. Especially from the University.

Tex is the boss there. Or so the other guys that work there and the secretary tell you.

"This is a corporation," Tex tells you. "There is a president, a vice president, a treasurer and a secretary."

He won't say what his position is but to everyone there he's the boss.

Tex is a big guy. A burly guy. Ruddy complexion. Attractive in a strong, big guy sort of way.

He doesn't want to talk.

"No comment. No comment. I know which way you're going to slant the story. There's been lots of stories. We can't even do business with that Collegian. We took out an ad last year and they wrote all over it," Tex tells you.

On December 1, of last year the Collegian carried an ad for Amherst Towing Inc. Across the ad a member of the Collegian staff had written, "We want to be your friends." Tex didn't think it was too funny.

"No, I don't want to give you any names of people who have had their cars towed from the University. What person wants the whole world to know that he's stupid?" Tex says.

Another burly guy in the office tells you about the experiences he and other crew members have had at the University.

He says that once, while towing a car, one of the guys was smacked across the face with a tire iron. And the guy who smacked him wasn't even the owner of the car.

He says that when towing from Southwest members of the crew are often greeted with obscene shouts from all around and chairs and beer bottles thrown from 22 stories up.

And when University students come to pick up their cars they are usually feeling pretty punchy.

"They come in here swinging and threatening to blow the place up. About eight like that came in here today, just this morning," the guy tells you.

A number of customers have also tried to drive through the fence which surrounds the lot in which towed cars are stored he says.

"And just this morning I asked a guy driving out to slow down cause he was gonna hit my dog. And he stepped on the gas. Hit my dog."

Rocks and bottles have been thrown through the office window he tells you.

"They blame us. They don't realize it's the police who decide which cars are to be towed. We don't just drive around the University and tow any old car."

He says that, in fact, the University is not the biggest source of business for the corporation. They tow from accidents and do road service.

In 1965 the police and administration of this University decided to contract a towing company to tow illegally parked cars from University grounds. Apparently, they felt that it had become a necessity for the good of the University public to have a regular towing service.

Each year a new contract is made, always with the lowest bidder for that year; the one that will tow your car for the cheapest amount.

Amherst Towing Inc. was awarded the contract for this year. They charge $14 for towing and $1 additional for each day of storage.

As part of the contract agreement Amherst Towing Inc. will not tow a car from University grounds unless asked to do so by the campus police or the owner of the car.

David L. Johnston, director of UMass security, says that most parking violations are discovered on routine patrols but he also receives a number of calls from heads of residence and students asking that cars be towed from certain lots.

All cars parked near fire hydrants or without warrant in handicap slots, fire zones, loading zones, service zones or emergency zones are ticketed and towed without question.

Cars parked in numbered lots which they are not assigned to between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. are also towed.

Cars parked at meters which have run out are ticketed. If the ticketing officer checks with the police station and finds that it is the fifth parking offense which this car has been involved in the car will be towed.

When you car is towed the parking fine is $10.

If the car is towed, the ticketing officer will note the condition of the car, dents or other damages, on the ticket.

When asked to give an average for number of cars towed from the University, Johnston says that on Friday 21 cars were towed during a 24 hour period.

If you feel that your car has been wrongly towed you can appeal to the Parking Appeals Committee.

Doris Dec, a member of the committee, says that the committee is not really in operation right now because of lack of members but she and others are working on getting the committee together.

The committee will be made up of various members of the University community excluding police officers.

If you feel that your car has been damaged in the towing process you should confront the guys at Amherst Towing Inc. The corporation is insured for such things. You may not win your case but you can at least file a claim.

Johnston says that the towing company has special tools to get in locked cars and a flat bed if it is necessary to tow a car in the horizontal position.

Down at Southwest a ticketing officer finds an illegally parked vehicle and calls into the police station for a tow truck.

"I'd hate to be a visitor at this University," he tells you. "There's no place to park. And sometimes the no parking zones aren't marked that clearly. If you know about them you're o.k. — but if not......"

The car which he has ticketed is a new model.

"This is an easy one," he tells you. "There aren't any damages on it to write down on the ticket."

The owner of the car arrives about the same time as the tow truck. She will not have to pay for the tow but the ticket is still hers.

If the hook had been attached to her car she would have been charged.

"Look at this place," the ticketing officer tells you as he points over towards the horseshoe. "It's cleaned out. Empty of parking violators."

He's got nothing else to do.

notice went out saying that the routes were cut because of a lack of patronage. "There were quite a few people that rode these buses," said Godding, "and the letter that went out with the parking brief that said the services were cut because of a lack of patronage wasn't really correct. They didn't want to use passengers per vehicle mile, so they used lack of patronage.

Passenger per vehicle mile is computed by dividing the total number of miles by the number of passengers carried. It is an economic measurement more than anything else.

"Our system average was 4.5", described William Goss, Project Director. "Belchertown Road going out to Rolling Green and Amherst Center was around 3.0, Sunderland was around 2.5, mainly because it's a longer distance, about six miles, the one going into South Deerfield was around 1.0, and the one into Belchertown Center was around .5. They were inefficient from that particular measure, but it's sort of an inhuman type of number and is really meaningless when talking about people needing a service.

The problem was this: because of administrative plans for the pedestrian core, peripheral lots had to be serviced very regularly. Even though an additional grant of three more buses was received, there were still not enough buses to go around, so the two routes were cut.

Right now, at the peak times of 7:30-9:30 a.m. and 3:30-5:30. 15 of 16 buses are scheduled for service, with one bus remaining as backup for the others. "We're spread pretty thin at peak times", said Godding. "In a normal transit type operation, or any kind of fleet operation the figures you use are 20 per cent of your fleet is scheduled down during a day. We perform services at night, whenever we can get the things free for a few minutes."

UMASS
Belchertown or Bust

There still remain the possibility of the runs being re-instated. The major problem deals with who will fund them. Student Speaker Booker responded to Student Senate funding by saying, "......We're getting very tight. Over the summer we bought two new buses for the transit system, the loan coming from the senate to replace two school buses that were dying. We have bought another vehicle for the Student Senate auto pool. We really haven't begun the academic year yet and we're almost broke in money that we can use to fund new programs. It's going to be difficult for us to fund the bus service."

Danny Friedmann of the commuter assembly emphasized the need for the two bus routes. He said that because the buses were running out to South Deerfield and Belchertown Center, many people moved out to these outlying areas relying on the buses to bring them into the university. Now that there are no buses, these people are stuck.

Being unable to fully fund at present time the two outlying runs for a whole year, the Commuter Assembly and Student Senate have agreed to fund a four week trial period, which Friedmann estimates will cost about $25 a day and which Godding estimates will consist of 6 or 7 non-peak runs; two morning runs, a midday run, and two evening runs. The only vehicles which could be used for peak runs would be two school buses needing just under $1000 worth of repairs.

"I think that we really get a rotten deal on this thing", said Joe Commuter. "It hasn't really gotten cold yet, and already my left big toe is starting to turn green from the frostbite I got when hitchhiking to campus last week. Not only that, but my girl friend was almost beaten, raped and robbed last night. And she was on the Sunderland bus!" If the administration was so concerned about pedestrian safety, then why did they stop the two routes, that's what I'd like to know."

Whether or not Whitmore will agree to shell out the $7500 needed for the night and outlying runs remains to be seen. Student support is definitely needed. There are petitions circulating now for the bus routes. If anyone is interested in somehow helping out, the people to talk to are Danny Friedmann or Tom Coffey at the Commuter Assembly office, down the hall from the pool room in the Student Union. Sooner or later the answers will present themselves. For the people living in those areas, let's just hope that it's sooner.

(Ed. Note: As reported in yesterday's Collegian, the Student Senate, Wednesday night, voted an appropriation of $300 to the Student Senate Transit-Service to fund an experimental bus service. The service will follow routes similar to those used last year and will resume the South Deerfield and Belchertown routes for commuters from these areas.

If the experiment proves successful, as determined by the Transit Service, a motion will go before the administration to fund the added routes.

Groucho, Harpo, Chico & Sometimes Zeppo

GROUCHO, HARPO, CHICO & SOMETIMES ZEPPO
BY JOSEPH ADAMSON

Reviewed by: Frederic C. Weiss

What is the mystery of the Marx Brothers? Why have their movies despite their relative antiquity achieved a contemporary renaissance? Joe Adamson's book is a brave and extensive attempt to examine the careers of the Marx Brothers, and has given us a well documented, thoroughly researched book adding insight into the characters, but suffering from an obsession with the topic.

Webster's dictionary defines "obsession" as "The persistent and disturbing intrusion of, or anxious and inescapable preocupation with an idea or emotion.". Adamson suffers from such an obsession with the aura surrounding the Marx Brothers. This enthusiasm results in a over-drawn, minutely detailed 464 page book on the topic. As a "source material" for further explorations into the Marx brothers, it is excellent. For any members of the "cinematic Marxist cult", who are addicted to any and every bit of trivia, every whim of anecdote concerning the talented family, and scratch of detail, it is a superb "fix". However, as relaxed, humorous, and informative reading, it fails because it is too drawn out, takes too little for granted, and provides needless detail of insignificant situations.

Despite its failures, the book does have much to offer. The photographs sprinkled liberally throughout the text are aesthetically and emotionally enjoyable. Aesthetically the photography is excellent; taken from various collections it shows the Marx brothers at different stages of their careers, and in various movies. Emotionally it seems to let one feel more about the Marx Brothers than all of Adamson's words put together.

Adamson has done a very fine job in searching out these pictures. He has also given the book a bit of class by adding in numerous excerpts from the Marx Brothers films and plays.

One such excerpt from Horsefeathers, in which Groucho played a College President goes as follows:

GROUCHO: Where would this college be without football? Have we got a stadium?

PROFESSORS: Yes.

G: Have we got a college?

P: Yes.

G: Well, we can't support both. Tomorrow we start tearing down the college.

P: But......where will the students sleep?

G: Where they always sleep. In the classroom.

Another great scene is when the College President is talking to his son, played by his younger brother Zeppo.

Groucho: You're a disgrace to our family name of Wagstaff, if such a thing is possible. What's all this talk I hear about you and the college widow? No wonder you can't get out of college. Twelve years in one college! I went to three colleges in twelve years and fooled around with three college widows! When I was your age I went to bed right after supper. Sometimes I went to bed before supper. Sometimes I went without my supper and didn't go to bed at all! A college widow stood for something in those days. In fact, she stood for plenty!

Zeppo: There's nothing wrong between me and the college widow.

G. There isn't, huh? Then you're crazy to fool around with her.

Z: Aw, but you don't......

G: I don't want to talk to you again about this, you snob. I'd horsewhip you if I had a horse! You may go now. Leave your name and address with the girl outside, and if anything turns up we'll get in touch with you......Where are you going?

Z: Well, you just told me to go.

G: So that's what they taught you in college. Just when I tell you to go, you leave me!

The temptation is to go on and on. To write down more excerpts from Horsefeathers. To go on and show Groucho trying to steal the college widow away from his son through his comical charm. The temptation is to go on and give excerpts from Duck Soup, and all of the Marx Brothers other films that are broken down into various chapters in the book. However I will resist the indulgence that Joe Adamson could not.

In describing why the Marx Brothers were so popular, the book quotes Harpo Marx and says "People all have inhibitions and hate them. We just ignore them. Every man wants to chase a pretty girl if he sees one. He doesn't — I do. Most people at some time want to throw things around recklessly. They don't — but we do. We're sort of a safety valve through which people can blow off steam."

Such self-descriptive quotes are "gems" among the pile of myriad words filled into the 400 plus pages of Adamson's book. Sure, he tells us things about the brothers that we didn't already know: Tells us about Groucho's frugality, Chico's squandering; Helps us understand Zeppo's alienation from the other three performing brothers: Lets us understand the unpredictable complexity that was the Marx Brothers.

On page 341 there is a blank page entitled: V-Intermission. Perhaps Adamson got closer to the truth concerning his own book than he would have liked to believe.

The book rambles on, like a overdrawn cinematic documentary, or a professor's lecture; so over-enthused and mixed with facts and trivia that it is hard to sustain the attention, much less the interest of the class. Such a lecture would need an intermission. In fact only someone as fanatically absorbed with the topic as the Professor is, can truly enjoy the entire lecture.

This analogy points out Adamson's greatest problem. the book, has an intermission!! While Adamson seemed to feel that the page set a mood, or was cute, in reality the word "Intermission", magnifies the simple thought — the book is too long......it needs one.

In describing one of the Marx Brothers last films Go West, Adamson wrote: "......the movie is most like the Grand Canyon: It's peaks are generally awe-inspiring, but at times it sinks to depths that are unbelievable."

The same can be said for Joe Adamson's book.

Mayall and Fat in Tank Town

By Kevin Mack

In Concert:

John Mayall, Fat

Julia Sanderson Theater, Springfield

"We play whatever we feel like playing — whatever the audience wants to hear. I never know in advance what we will play". That's what John Mayall said when I asked him at last Sunday's sell-out concert at the Julia Sanderson Theater in Springfield. What Mayall and his band felt like playing ranged from the blues to "new wave" jazz; from excellence to crap.

When I arrived at the theater, Fat, a local group had already started playing. They played for about an hour and a half — a set of loud funky music, the type which the audience of seventeenish, dungaree-jacketed Springfield people were there to hear.

Backstage before the concert, Mayall, eating Swiss cheese and drinking expensive Beaujoulais, was cool but tired from the long flight from L.A. Mayall, who is approaching 40, betrayed his age by several grey hairs and the beginnings of a middle-aged paunch. Up close, he looks his age, which is more than double that of a great majority of the audience.

Mayall's set started with a directionless jam, featuring, at different times, each member of his band, while Mayall introduced them. His band is a marvelous conglomeration of divergent musical styles. Freddie Robinson, the lead guitarist looks like a South Chicago pimp. While Red Holloway and Blue Mitchell are jazzmen all the way, Keef Hartley, the drummer is every bit the British rock and roll star. And let's not forget Mayall himself, the man who gave England the blues. Somehow this diverse band really works, and when they are cookin', as they were for a while on Sunday night, they are excellent, playing such old numbers as "Dry Throat", and several new songs, like "Driftin' ", featuring Red Holloway on flute. Mayall even played "Room To Move" (the crowd demanded it). It sounded a lot different from the "Turning Point" version, with added drums and Freddie Robinson's funky lead guitar.

Towards the end of the concert, the magic fizzled. Mayall started fucking around and playing trashy music, (he even switched instruments with Hartley) and the band lost its impetus. As I left the theater, during Mayall's last number, there were people sitting around the balcony stairs, smoking joints and looking bored.

Sex and Excrement: What Else ?

In Concert:
Inside Outside
Amherst College (Theta Zi)
13 October 1973

Although they've only been together for about five months, Inside Outside has already developed into an exciting and tightly knit unit. Their ability to perform contemporary jazz pieces in a rockable and danceable format shows a musical sophistication lacking in many local groups. Their choice of material ranged from Charles Mingus' "Boogie Stop Shuffle"; Miles Davis' "All Blues"; Aretha's "Baby I Love You" to a fine revival of Lambert, Hendricks and Ross's "Twisted" and the 150 people at Theta Zi never stopped dancing. Lead singer Mary Lee DeRose (who's listened to a lot of Lydia Pense and Janis Joplin in her day) has a spine tingling vocal style which is good enough to make a modern jazz fan out of the least suspecting rocker. Her amazing treatment of Zappa's "Road Ladies" made it the night's standout, but there were many memorable moments. Each member of the group performs with versatility and spontaneity, adding up a very mellowed sound. Steve Catalano's sax playing shone (especially on Coltrane's "Naima") while Norman Lotz's string bass work and Jay Conway's drumming provided more than a rhythm section. Group leader Carl Ellsworth's honky-tonk piano playing rounded out the sound. All together, Inside Outside put on three hours of complete entertainment and people at Theta Zi acknowledged their enthusiasm by demanding an encore.

Inside Outside are a local band with a future. Don't miss them.

In Concert:
Tom Willits
Hampshire College, Oct. 10
Globe Theater, Northampton, Oct. 11

Tom Willits, billed as "the best unrecorded artist in the New England area", performed last week at Hampshire College and at the Globe in Northampton.

Willits has appeared with the likes of Tom Rush, Jonathan Edwards and Jaime Brockett, playing dozens of colleges and clubs throughout New England. He has a tremendous voice, and a knack for writing songs that just about everyone can identify with. His sideman, David Brown, a well-known and widely respected Boston musician, accompanies on bass, piano and backup vocals. Together they're dynamite.

Willits was preceded by Peter Johnson and the Manic Depressives, who play everything from country to jazz expertly, although their last set lost some of their fire due to the crowd's desire only to boogie to blues. By the time Tom and David were ready to play, the crowd wasn't ready to listen, so most of their efforts fell on deaf ears. Congratulations, Hampshire, for turning a folk concert into a high school dance.

Tom Willits appeared the next night after the showing of Monterey Pop at the Globe, and it was a really rewarding concert. Bear in mind that the Globe, while not exactly beautiful by any means, has a certain atmosphere about it — a thoroughly likeable place — and stage performances take on a personal meaning.

Most of Tom's lyrics are autobiographical, and his voice control reveals the sensitivity with which each song was composed. His music reflects happiness, and a peacefulness often settles on the people who listen.

Tom Willits has something for everyone. He speaks of sacrificing principles in "Tryin' To Be Myself" of those bummer days when you just can't manage to keep your head above water in "Somedays", and a dislike in "Crazy Flying".

After the show, I went down to Tom's dressing room to see how he felt about his performance, and discovered that the straightforward honesty evident in his stage talk and lyrics is genuine. It seems he was disappointed that such a small group of people attended; he hates the 'Show' pretentousness that performing before a small audience necessarily brings.

Tom Willits and David Brown entertained and the Globe people went home happy. What could be more natural? Too bad the audience at Hampshire missed out.

In Concert:
Charles Mingus
Amherst College, Oct. 14

Mixed reviews from Our Staffers:

St. Andrew had a hard time coping, and walked out at the intermission. "It's not that the music was bad," he explains patiently, "It's just that I couldn't take any more."

Indeed. Kostek found the performance disjointed, with perhaps three divine minutes all night that the band got together and took off. Aside from that, we had only the fine solos by everyone in the band (except Mingus) to keep us interested. Unfortunately for St. Andrew, the second half was a quantum leap over the first, but it was brought to a crashing half with a stupid twenty minute version of "Willy And The Hand Jive", which is not the best vehicle for solos. Duller than dull.

Charles seemed to be fighting and blinking his way out of a fog of bats and lizards all night long, and never made his bass fly or dance even once.

The most disheartening aspect of Charles Mingus' Amherst College concert was his obvious lack of enthusiasm toward what he was playing, who he was playing with, and those he was playing for. The atmosphere which was already strange before the concert began (possibly due to the hetrogenaity of the audience agewise, and the strange setting, a gym) became embarrassing when the performers took the stage and spent five minutes preparing to do their first piece. Throughout the course of the evening, the music became more spontaneous and polished and Mingus' musicians loosened up, wailed, and soloed, but Mingus himself didn't. Saxaphonist George Adams was spectacular on both sax and flute and drummer Doug Hammond was downright inspiring, but Charlie Mingus, the Man we had come to see, was somewhere else and it was sad.

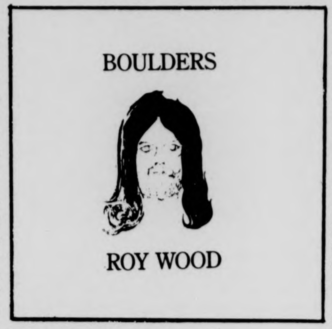
Wizzard Wood Makes His Move

by David Sokol

Boulders
Roy Wood
United Artists LA 168F
Total Playing Time: 39.40

The name Roy Wood conjures up all sorts of visions and is associated with the magical English Rock scene which brought the world the Who, Marriott and Lane's Small Faces, the Kinks and the Move. Wood has always been first and foremost, a musical innovator and has never allowed himself to become restricted by the boundaries which other rock masters have accepted. Like Frank Zappa, Wood is an experimenter, inventor, and satirist in addition to being an excellent musician.

Roy Wood's evolution has been a bizarre concoction of maturation and degeneration. He formed the Move during the mid-sixties and at the time they were a musical and visual outrage (imagine performing unnatural acts with a television set). His music was commercial and avant-garde at the same time and no two Woodsongs sounded alike. The Move eventually broke up due to lack of interest, and Wood started the Electric Light Orchestra, from which he soon departed, leaving them in musical Lynnbo.



Whether or not he's reached greener pastures with his current Roy Wood's Wizzard (star syndrome) which had three monster (schlock) singles in England with "Ball Park Incident", "See My Baby Jive", and "Angel Fingers", Wood has managed to assert his musical prowess with his first solo album. Truly a solo album, Boulders features Wood doing everything, including production of what could be considered the most entertaining record in recent memory. From the immaculate sensitivity of "Dear Elaine" to the olde English flavouring in "Irish Loafer" to the vocal lampoon of his Beach Boys and Everly Bros. sound-alikes, he never lets his imagination obscure his ingenuity, and perhaps, that's the beauty of Roy Wood.

Wood's sophistication is manifested in his musical craftsmanship, in his ability to play a vast array of musical instruments (from oboe, cello, and bassoon to guitar, bass and drums), write music of all genres (classical, C&W, rock, humour) and sing in a variety of voices. His sped up vocal harmonies with himself on "Song of Praise" is a fine example. With all the musical freedom which his talent allows him, Wood exercises moderation. His use of rock and roll saxes which tended to be somewhat overbearing on Wizzard's Brew, is here tasteful. Wood has mixed Boulders to give it a full range (room filling 360 degree sound) effect with each instrument sounding clear, yet integrated into the totality, and it's all him.

In every sense of the word, Boulders is an English record with the wry humour and sheer eclecticism which is uniquely British. So, cast off your inhibitions (and your new Stones and Dead records) and give Boulders a try. It's both a monolith and a delicacy.

"Words Don't Talk, Actions Speak"

PAT GARRETT & BILLY THE KID — BOB DYLAN (Columbia KC 32460) You must remember that this is a soundtrack, and that your enjoyment of it will increase greatly if you see the mediocre film. Once you've seen the movie, certain scenes help illustrate the music. The "Knocking' On Heaven's Door" scene, for example, stands out as one of the best movie-soundtrack combinations in memory.

Even so, the album has problems, mostly with undistinguished music. The three workings of the "Billy" theme are well done, but too much of the rest is merely pleasant, or downright dull. B

MY MERRY-GO-ROUND-JOHNNY NASH (Epic 32158) Quite a battle going on here. Several terrific songs ("My Merry-Go-Round", "What A Feeling", "Loving You" and "Salt Annie Ginger Tree") fighting the forces of strings and sappy overarrangements.

The results will sit nicely with Carpenter fans, uneasily but tolerable for Who nuts, and unacceptable to Cecil Taylor fans. B minus.

Revolutionary Ensemble Vietnam 1&2 (live at Peace Church)

The Revolutionary Ensemble are all members of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM) of Chicago, which spawned such noteworthy musicians as the Art Ensemble of Chicago, Anthony Braxton, and Maurice McIntyre. Leroy has played with Archie Shepp and Braxton, and Maurice McIntyre. Leroy has played with Archie Shepp and Braxton, to name a couple, and has one of the strongest violins in the world, combining a surfeit of technique which would make a Heifetz blush, along with the visionary playings of people like Ray Nance (from Ellington's band) and Ornette Coleman. Sirone, the bass player, has one of the most outstanding feelings for the bass I've ever heard. His solo treatment and cure of the instrument on side one is one of the most outstanding these ears have ever listened to. Jerome Cooper is an exceptional drummer, demonstrating his dexterity on side two (he's also featured on Alan Silva's Celestrial Communication Orchestra on Actuel (Byg 529342-43-44) — if you really want your head blown off, seek out Alan's triple record set), as well as the sensitivity to sound that Mr. Cooper has.

For those of you who saw the Revolutionary Ensemble at the Black Musicians Conference, praise of this group might seem unnecessary, and you've probably already got the album. For those of you who didn't see or hear about them yet, this incredible extract from the Ensemble will be a revelation to match the highest of heights. This album is a beauty — a black beauty, in the extreme. For the sake of your sanity, go into town and order it, or pick it up wherever you can. One God and the Spirit of the Truth marches on. Album Rating: A (double plus).

Roger Ruskin Spear-Electric Shocks (United Artists UA-LA097-F).

Listening to this album, and then to the Spearless Let's Make Up and Be Friendly by the Bonzos, shows how much Spear contributed to the Bonzos. On this album you get a treatment for the twelve-bar blues with "Dr. Rock", and an excursion into unwanted orchestration on "All By Yourself in the Moonlight", which finishes with an encounter with "one of those horrible New York Policemen", plus "Mattress Man" featuring Spear on Mattress. Perhaps the finest spot is "Happiness Pie", which features Stephane Grappelli-Dan Hicks licks on violin, joined together with sound effects, and one of the honkiest lyrics ever written ("Happiness Pie" was written in the Thirties, I believe), and it seems as though Ruskin Spear found an outlet for his insanity (actually, he's sane . . . in the extreme). The album cover is another bonus, taking into consideration all the puns thrown on it. A-minus

STILL-Pete Sinfield (Manticore Records) time 39:36

Pete Sinfield has been floating around the English rock scene for a while producing, writing lyrics, and doing art work for his old group — King Crimson. Not until only now has he decided to do an album on his own — and it's a good one.

Co-produced with Gregg Lake, of EL&P, the disc shows an interesting variety of music. With the exception of one song that has a country rock flavour, most cuts sound like off-shoots of King Crimson material. There's a number of musicians here, ex-Crimson members Mel Collins and Ian Wallace, current KC bassist John Wetton, as well as the already mentioned Lake.

The opening track, "The Song Of The Sea Goat", is a good number if you like a multitude of strings and the like. It's probably the only song which might get a negative reaction because of its somewhat "Overproduced" sound. From here on though, the album gets better and better. The title track is a pretty cut, featuring Pete and Lake exchanging vocals. "Wholefood Boogie" concerns itself with Pete's not wanting to eat ". . . stricken chicken from an ultraviolet prison cell "and the like. A nice rocking tune.

Side Two is superb. The best song on this side is "The Night People". Sinfield's vocal work here is at its best and the backup band really cooks on the rockin' parts. "The Piper" is a short, pastoral ditty with Sinfield on acoustic guitar. "A House Of Hopes & Dreams" contains some of the best lyrics on the album.

STILL is about as good as some of King Crimson's stuff. Old friends like Mel Collins, excellent flute-sax production, help Pete create an album which surprises. Will be looking forward to his next effort. A minus

FULL MOON — Kris Kristofferson & Rita Coolidge (A&M)

Maybe I am too influenced by my roommate's opinion but she is painfully honest about the albums I drag into our hole in the wall. So I decided to ask her opinion one rare, study-filled evening. She looked up from her organic chemistry and replied, "If you like Rita Coolidge and Kris Kristofferson . . ." and was lost in her isomers. I tend to agree.

Full Moon, Rita Coolidge's and Kris Kristofferson's new album is a little heavy on depressing thoughts and could probably succeed in bringing you down on your best day. The music is sickeningly predictable, the kind you could hum without missing a note the first time you heard it.

Don't, if you're not into country-western. Do, if you're avid fans of either Rita or Kris.

LOVE DEVOTION SURRENDER — CARLOS SANTANA & MAHAVISHNU JOHN MCLAUGHLIN (Columbia KC 32034)

Mahavishnu John McLaughlin teamed up with Mahavish-nouveau Santana and some back-up musicians from the groups of each to produce this energetic if grating exercise in Kundalini-rock.

Both McLaughlin and Santana are musicians in their own right (although McLaughlin has always been far superior in my book), both have produced well-composed, tightly structured works in the past and I suppose Santana's conversion to McLaughlin's guru, Sri Chinmoy, was an event sufficiently worthy of bringing the two together for an album. The results, however, are disappointing: Two guitars screaming back and forth at each other over the most tedious of backgrounds, with a couple of empty acoustic duets sandwiched in for contrast.

I'd be interested in hearing what McLaughlin and Santana could do as co-composers but not another jam album like this. The pyrotechnics are impressive but it's not the kind of album I'd play more than twice a year. C-

ROUND ONE — SCRUBBALOE CAINE (RCA APL1-0263)

It's a good thing there are more rounds to come, for this round did not score many points for Caine. There appeared to be much arm waving and loud shouts, but little which could be called quality punches.

The disc runs mainly on guitar and drum work, and the lead singer's (at times) slurpy voice. There is a diversity in the kind of music offered in this record. It goes from blues to hard rock to a weird form of country music.

The volume of the music is at times so loud as to drown out comprehension of the lead singer's lyrics and it is not quite clear whether or not this is intentional. The music is not profound in even the loose sense of the word, but if you're looking for very light entertainment in the form of a revolving record, Round One may fulfill your desire.

-- John Dean

BELLY UP — DR. HOOK AND THE MEDICINE SHOW (Columbia 32270)

My, my, these fellows certainly do know how to live. Besides "bending a couple in the Doo-Dah Room" on the outside cover, check out their gettin' together with their old ladies (no slang) on the inside. Yeah, loads of laffs and it comes through on most every groove of Belly Up, as Dr. Hook continues its existential quest into the simple pleasures.

Musically speaking, the emphasis on Belly Up is on the vocals, which is appropriate for a band known primarily for the, uh, nature of its lyrics. But there's no reason to slight the group's playing; it's always just what is needed, and more than a couple of notches above merely competent. And the more I sit here and type, the more I realize that this album is gas - uncontrived, unforced, unselfconcious. Give it a try.

I Like Southwest

by Sherman Boyson

Walk up to anyone on campus and ask them what they think of Southwest. You can bet money that the word ''zoo'' will be mentioned. Everyone who doesn't live there, and a good portion of the persons who do, will tell you that Southwest is the worst place to live on campus. Reasons vary from the size of the population to the supposedly high crime rate. It has been compared to the ghettos of New York and Boston. The opinion of Southwest is far from favorable.

What I'm about to say will probably prove what everyone already thinks, (that I am insane) but I like living in Southwest. If that doesn't give you the urge to call out the guys in the white coats — I like living in a tower.

In the few moments I have before the truck from the state institution comes to get me, I'll try to explain my abnormalities. First and foremost is the view. Two summers ago another kid and I broke into John Quincy Adams and spent two nights on the twenty-second floor. We were caught, but it was worth the capture to enjoy the view we had. Since then, that view from up there has always fascinated me. When I returned last summer for the orientation the fascination was still there. I looked at other areas, but nothing could beat the feeling I got when I looked out my window. I always liked heights. Anytime I went into Boston, I would go up to the top of the Prudential Building. Heights just turn me on I guess.

I purposely sleep on the top bunk, so I can look out my window when I wake up in the morning. Of course, the fog and clouds can be a problem sometimes. The first time it was cloudy out I woke up and looked for my usual view. I was scared out of my mind that I was blind, for when I looked out the window I couldn't see anything. I'm used to it now, and it is a small price to pay for the view.

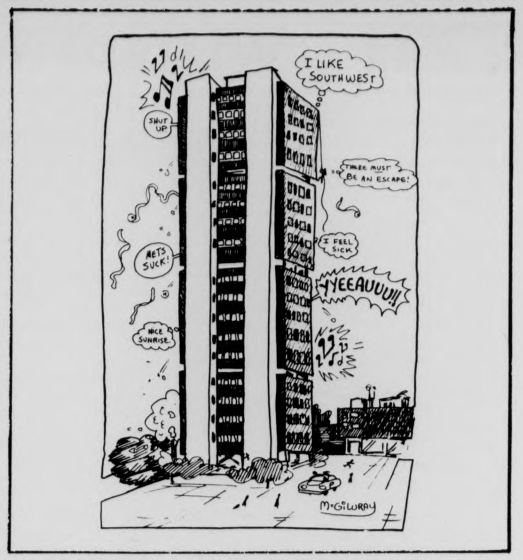
Second reason for my feelings is the close proximity of my dorm to several things. The dining commons is right beside Washington. I can get to the commons in two minutes if I time the elevator right. How many persons in Sylvan can make the same claim? Then, after the meal, I can go right to my room and wait for my stomach to settle. The food is bad enough without agitating it with a long walk up a steep hill like those in Central or Orchard Hill.

Snacking is easy. The Munchy's is two buildings down in Hampden Commons. In the same building is a snack bar. Across Fearing Street is a pizza joint. If I ever get hungry it's just a short walk to wherever I want to go.

If you're a pinball freak like me, you don't have to go all the way to the Student Union. There are pinball machines in Hampden Commons. There are some pretty good ones, including the famous King Kool. One of the machines doesn't even tilt, so you can cheat all you want and never pay the penalty.

That same Hampden Commons is going to be turned into a mini student union. The Collegian reports that all they need is a door. When that is done we'll have a place for movies and plays too.

People complain that there is a lot of noise in Southwest. As the author of the story telling what happened to Southwest after King beat Riggs, I can hardly deny that. But it isn't constant like some people think. I live in Washington and the only real problem for me is when Adams goes at it. In the beginning of the year the profanity contests were a little too much. But the Heads of Residence have really cracked down. With threats of being kicked out of Southwest or maybe even an arrest for disturbing the peace, the area has settled into a peaceful atmosphere. (That's right. I used the word peaceful in describing Southwest). There are no more rolls of toilet paper sailing across the sky, or firecrackers being set off. The noise now isn't bad at all.



You have to expect a little noise to come on special events. Billie Jean's victory, the Bruins Stanley Cup and the like cause a high level of excitement. I know it's going to be wild when the first snowfall comes, but I'm one of the ones who is eagerly awaiting that snow. After all, look at New York, and they haven't even won the pennant yet.

The crime rate may be bad in some parts, but again I have an advantage by living in a tower. Not too many muggers or thieves go all the way to the twenty-first floor. They'd have a hard time getting my stereo down the stairs, and the elevator is a little obvious. If you're smart you keep your door locked anyways. Maybe the lower and more accessable floors have a problem, but I'm okay.

This place is called an impersonal jungle of concrete. If you isolate yourself in your room and never come out, then it is. But my floor is pretty good. I don't have a typewriter, but there is always someone ready to lend one. I have a resident critic who points out my dangling prepositions. And there's always someone to boost my ego by complimenting my stories.

The other areas don't impress me. The climb to Orchard Hill is too much now, even without snow. Sylvan isn't just secluded, it's isolated. I use the phones too much to be in Central or Northeast. I don't drink, so can you imagine me in a frat house? I'm satisfied with Southwest.

The only thing really wrong with it is what happens to it on a holiday weekend. That's when everyone goes home to show mommy and daddy that they still have short hair or that they aren't pregnant yet. For the few of us left, the place is like Europe during one of the air raid drills. Sure, you can spend an afternoon down at Woolco trying to guess how many candy bars they have in the Halloween display. Gee, if you get lucky you could win a bike. But as long as there are a few kids that you know, you can usually survive.

Except maybe for the food. The dining commons ladies seem to get mad about having to work on the holiday. That food they served on Columbus Day was really bad. I thought the meatloaf was really my roommate ground up, until he returned that night and started cleaning the room.

I hear footsteps and see the shadow of the butterfly net over my head. But I'm going to go screaming that I love my dorm; even when everything I say can be held against me.

Integration of Meditative and Academic Disciplines

By Dave Hoffman

In Project Ten this autumn, is an office bearing the imposing title of ''Center for the Integration of Meditative and Academic Disciplines,'' embodied in the person of an amazing woman in her sixties, Teresina Havens.

Teresina (called Terry), is one of the P-10 Inquiry program tutors, and her experience ranges over years of work in the peace movement, the human potential movement, and includes a doctorate in religion from Yale University.

Last summer she received a foundation grant from the Society for Religion in Higher Education, a national group based in New Haven, to develop a liaison and networking effort focussed on the question of the place, if any, of meditation in a formal academic setting. Thus comes the Center for the Integration of Meditative and Academic Disciplines, (CIMAD).

''Such an effort is long overdue among the five colleges,'' she says. ''Fifty years ago the battle was to establish 'religious studies' as academically respectable in the non-sectarian private college or public university. At last at the University of Massachusetts there seems to be the prospect of forming a Religion Department.''

The principle effort of the new Center will be the attempt to form an informal ''support group'' colloquium of faculty and staff who are interested in seeking ways within the academic setting to validate whatever professional and personal interests they may have in any of the meditative disciplines.

''Another most important function this year,'' she says, ''will be to serve as a liaison center — not only for faculty but for students also — bringing together interested people at the five colleges.''

''The best of the teachers and students are dissatisfied, and the knowledge factories are trapped in their own contradictions. Right now I think it's easier,'' Thompson has written, ''to walk out of the universities and build yoga into smaller institutes to be free of educational bureaucracy.''

To Terry Havens the situation in the traditional university setting is the challenge, though she concedes that Thompson may prove to be correct. In the meantime, though, she is attempting to serve as the coordinator of an effort to bring people on the five campuses together.

The first such effort for faculty and staff will be on Monday, Veterans Day, october 22. Terry has invited Helen Bonny from the Institute for Music and Consciousness at Spring Grove, Maryland, to do a presentation on the use of music for guided fantasy imagery in altered states of consciousness. Helen Bonny, who is also in Amherst for a workshop at the New England Center, worked with Dr. Stanislas Grof, then researching in LSD therapy at the government hospital in Spring Grove and now at Esalen.

Monday's workshop begins at 10 a.m., with Terry's advice to ''please come in quietly and lie on the floor'' as a way of beginning. A bring-your-own sack lunch at noon will be followed by an early afternoon discussion of issues connected with the use of experiential exercises in education, and plans for future meetings. Interested faculty and staff are invited to attend the workshop, which will be held in the main lounge of Pierpont house (Project Ten) in Southwest. Those unable to attend but who are interested in other Center activities should visit the Center office in room 119 of Pierpont or call Terry during her Wednesday and Thursday office hours (546-5177).

As the Harvard divinity professor Harvey Cox has written, ''the coming meeting of East and West is now in fact happening.'' The poet Kipling was wrong. ''The disciples of Krishna no longer crouch on distant shores waiting for our messengers of light. They knock on our doors on Sunday afternoons.''

In the words of Thompson, ''what is happening now is that the secret, esoteric techniques of the world are being opened after their long period (in the West) of closure......Zen followers and Sufis and contemplative Christians, people interested in the Kabbalah, Hasidic Jewish mysticism..........''

A continuing concern of the Center is how to prevent what Terry has called a ''new age of sectarian rivalry from accompanying the emerging 'Aquarian' age of faiths'' — the ''my-guru-is-better-than-your-guru'' syndrome and the self-righteousness of the newly ''initiated.'' It is a fear that recalls Harvey Cox's uneasiness lest the age of Western proselytizing become succeeded only by its ''mirror image,'' the age of ''instant gurus, when any nabob with a half-competent public relations staff is assured of a covey of Western devotees the moment he announces his divinity.''

''The real meeting of East and West,'' as Cox has continued, ''will not occur until we get beyond either converting or canonizing the Hindus or the Sufis and begin a genuine dialogue. The 'meeting of East and West' will require a change in both, not to make them more like each other, but to make them more complementary.''

If there are students on this campus, Terry concludes, who believe this ''mutual irradiation'' is both desirable and possible, there is the chance to create a ''meditation corridor'' to test the possibilities of such ''ecumenical'' living and learning during spring semester. There is also the possibility for attempting a pilot living-learning effort in January during the intersession term. Interested people should contact her at the Center.

The Tarot

THE TAROT
by Alfred Douglas Penguin Books 1973

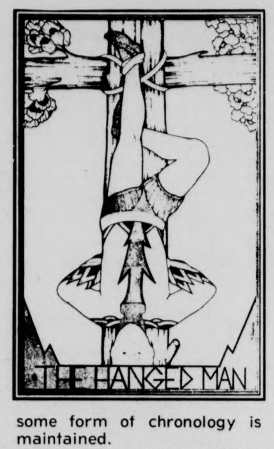
by Jon Carr and G. Cray

The tarot is a form of divination, a way of seeing into the past, present, or future through the use of cards. Here we have a how to do it book from the Penguin people on the subject. It is, however, not your typical Penguin publication, for this is by far the best (worst?) example of academic bafoonery, eclectic conjecture, and bad spelling on the market today. Considering the price of beef, this book is a bargain of bull for $1.45.

The first chapter starts out on a journey through fantasy land that leads up down the garden path of if's, and's and maybe's. We are told that the playing card which started in China over three thousand years ago led into the formation of the tarot on the banks of the river Po in northern Italy. At this you have to put your tongue in your cheek and smile; the fact is that any guess about the origin of the tarot can hold water as long as some form of chronology is maintained.



With a few major exceptions, Douglas' interpretations of the cards hold nothing new to anyone who is familiar with the tarot. One of those exsays this of the Hanged Man card:
"The hanged man is one of the strangest of the tarot images. It cannot be found in any orthodox Christian symbology, and is one of the clearest indications that the tarot trumps were designed to illustrate some non-Christian system of belief."

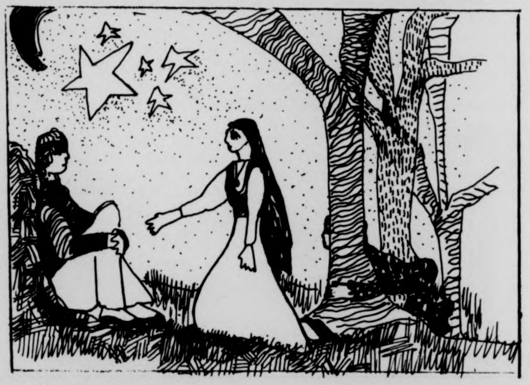
If Douglas had read the 99 references in his bibliography, he would have at least once come across a reference to this card in relation to St. Peter, his mission with Jesus, and his upside-down crucifixion. Moreover, the latter part of Mr. Douglas' statement that the tarot does not have a Christian base contradicts his first chapter.

The cards depicted in the book are interesting, simple, and fit for a coloring book. They lack detail but could prove useful to someone who is interested in the book as a tool for the interpretation of readings. For the true seeker or investigator, it would be best to get a more carefully researched book and a tarot deck available at the head shops in town.

Theatre

A Midsummer's Night Dream

By Christine Dillard



Many UMass students have lost contact with theater because of the relatively inexpensive and accessible campus film program. The high energy New Shakespeare Company provided an unusual performance of A Midsummer Night's Dream for an exciting change of pace.

The San Francisco-based group overwhelms the senses with an earthy interpretation of the Bard's most fantastic comedy. Utilizing the entire ballroom as stage, the troupe draws the audience into the central flow of movement.

Under the sensitive direction of Magrit Roma, the repertory group successfully maintains its intensity throughout the play. The impact is greater — the production communicates the everlasting enchantment of the play and is still contemporary. Understanding that theater is affected by the events of the world beyond the stage allowed a player a reference to Watergate that was received with much laughter. At a time when political and military power has brought about widespread pessimism, this awareness is significant. The group also is using an increased awareness of body movement as a viable form of communication that is extremely effective.

The actors have widely varied backgrounds. Some have had previous stage and college experience, but this is not necessarily the rule. They come from all over the United States and the director is from Switzerland. Continual touring for six to eight months requires a high level of emotional and physical input. This is contagious and apparent during a performance. This requirement may explain the predominant youth of the actors. Sustaining this fresh intensity is one of the greatest difficulties to deal with, casting workers say offstage. It is also necessary for them to be able to work out personal problems that could affect a performance that relies on a balance of tension, they say. Many talented performers have left after several months for more conventional life styles while nursing hopes of commercial success. Along with the financial problems that confront such a group, it is not surprising that the New Shakespeare Company is one of the few repertory groups that performs on the road in the United States. The 25 in this group travel across America in station wagons and a truck headed for hotel rooms and restaurant food and performances primarily in college communities. Dream, however, is the play most often requested. The company also does As You Like It and 'Romeo and Juliet. It exhibits Shakespeare's imagination with all his fervid and fecund creativity. It is bouyant and aerial with wild and fantastic dream imagery that mingles with sensitive and visionary developments of love and illusion. Because all the characters are portrayed so convincingly, the diversity of the roles is impressive. The heroic and lofty love of Theseus and his Amazon Hippolyta are intertwined with the perplexing changes of the Athenian foursome. Luminous Titania with her guttural fairy train contrast beatifully with the absurdist play of the coarse mechanics.

The sensuous Puck conducts his mischief marvellously with vigorous airborn leaps and near ground writhing. It is easy to imagine him putting a girdle around the world in 40 minutes. Dreamy fantasy and earthy vulgarity are united in the human beastiality of Bottom's transformation and the resulting affair with the enchanted fairy queen. This nice irony is well done but slightly underplayed.

The grotesque and pathetic play within a play is a delightful end to the performance. The mousy lion, wounded moon and the wall's conveniently moving chink provide the necessary comic background to this most lamentable tragedy. The star-crossed lovers are touchingly portrayed by Bottom and Flute.

Although the Tuesday night showing was nearly sold out, there were a small number of empty seats that could have benefited a number of people. I wish that all who consider Shakespeare gloomy, dry or heavy could have seen this Company's sensitive and entertaining production.

The New Shakespeare Company was sponsored by the Program Council, which will present the Friday dance with NRBQ and Clean Living.

Films

Your Mother Shoulda Seen

Moe DePalma

Next week, from Tuesday through Sunday evening The Women's Film Co-Op is presenting the first local feminist film festival at The Globe Theatre in Northampton. The commercial film industry, throughout the world has always been a male dominated profession and all those beautiful starlets on the screen are only a tiny portion of the industry as a whole. One or two token women directors, film editors, lighting crews etc. mean neither equality nor liberation. Most of the films in this festival however do represent liberation. For the most part these films are written, produced and directed by women. They represent more than taking woman out of the dishpan and putting her behind or in front of the camera. Female film makers, by not dealing with the discriminatory male hierarchy are themselves creating all sorts of films from low budget animations to feature length documentaries which deal with social and political matters.

By taking control of the image making process women are becoming more aware of themselves as women and rallying other women to recognize themselves as an identity more powerful than The Blue Angel ever dared. For those who cringe at even the mention of the word feminist, this "feminist film festival" is not five hours of radical feminist politics thrust upon the audience from the screen each night. Rather it is a virtual festival of women. As the title implies, these are films that your mother should have seen. They deal with a variety of women with problems merits, and lifestyles which are familiar to almost everyone.

French director Nelly Kaplan's A Very Curious Girl, is the first in the series. It is a story of the triumph of a female, brutalized by society who fights back, and for a change wins. This film and Women On The March will be shown on Tuesday. There are three films scheduled for Wednesday evening and all three deal with lesbians. The Children's Hour is a filmed adaptation of Lillian Hellman's play, Home Movie is a short that tells one woman's story of the joys and fulfillment in what it means to be a lesbian today, and a lighthearted look at a group of gay women in Lavender. Although there is no formal discussion set up relating to these lesbian based films any informal discussion or reaction is welcome at all the films.

Thursday Liane Brandon from the university will show and discuss her films Anything You Want To Be and Betty Tells Her Story. Also that same night will be another popular film Salt Of The Earth. Friday evening will be a special presentation of the workshop films of Woman Make Movies. This is a New York based group of women and their films include Women's Happy Time Commune and Aspirations. Shelia Paige and Ariel Dougherty representing Community Films, an organization from Somerville Massachusetts, will also screen a few films and then join the panel discussion. Julia Reichert from New Day Films will also be a member of all the discussions and panels. Women from such local organizations as The Third World Women's Union, Women's Media Community, and U Mass' Continuing Education For Women will also participate with the film makers in all of these discussions.

Saturday morning will present such documentaries as The Women's Film and Angela Davis: Portrait Of A Revolutionary. That afternoon I Am Somebody, a documentary about a South Carolina hospital worker's strike, The Birth Film by Susan KleckIner, Got To Push, and Abortion will be shown. From four until six that afternoon there will be a panel dealing with political perspectives in womens films. That evening the feature film will be Mai Zetterling's The Girls. This movie concerns a group of actresses touring in Aristophane's Lysistrata who become seriously affected by the feminist message in the play and use it in their personal lives. It presents some of the rebellious impulses that this play has been stirring up for so many centuries.

The festival will come to a close Sunday with a focus on women in the arts with a panel at three thirty. The screening schedule begins at one with To Be Young Gifted And Black a tribute to Lorraine Hansberry, Joyce at 34, and Woo Who ? May Wilson a film by Amalie Rothschild which follows the life of May Wilson, a sixty year old sculptress who after years as a suburban housewife makes a new life and career alone in New York. The last film on Sunday evening will be Julia Reichert's Growing Up Female, a documentary study of how women grow up as continual prisoners of oppressive man-made social structures.

Free child care will be available from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from 1 to 5:30 Sunday. Single admission at the door of The Globe Theatre will be $2 a showing ($1 for midnight showings Friday and Saturday, and $1.50 for a program of selected shorts Sunday night). Series tickets are $13.50 and available from the Women's Film Co-Op. For exact information about times, films and speakers call 413-586-2011.

"And Now For Something Completely Different"

by Steve Anslow

What? Monty Python's what? If as I suspect this is your first reaction read on because Monty Python is something new to America and something that you should not miss.

Television has long been ripe for exploitation by somebody prepared to use it to ridicule itself, and this is exactly what the Monty Python team has managed to do. Monty Python comprises six guys who came together whilst they were undergraduates at Cambridge University in England to present a satirical revue. They have been together ever since and have been improving and refining their approach to humour. "And now for Something Completely Different" is, in many ways, the culmination of all that they have been trying to say and do for the last five years.

Their style is difficult to describe but if you managed to catch the Marty Feldman comedy hour on television this you will have caught a glimpse of the Monty Python style. This movie offers a new approach to the art of visual comedy, combining, as it does elements of the satire movement, Woody Allen, The Goons, and conventional crudity in a single flipped-out package. It moves without apparent motive or sanity through a series of situations that are bizzare exaggerations of reality but which underline much of the clap-trap of modern society. It cruely satarises all of the things that the Monty Python team see as negative; beaurocracy, by ridiculing it; politicians by reducing them to a mindless sameness; and television itself, by turning it to their own ends.

The whole effect is held together by a series of animations that are the best since Yellow Submarine and which give the movie a drive and a purpose. The characters used in the movie range from a twelve foot hedgehog called Spinny Norman who is the fantasy of a mafia type pair called Doug and Dinsdale Piranha through Queer lumberjacks and boring accountants to the Batley Ladies Club who specialize in reconstructions of famous events like the Battle of Pearl Harbor and Camp on Blood island.

If all of this sounds strange and unreal there is only one way to really judge the film, go and see it and decide for youself why it is the funniest movie you've seen in years.

WEEKEND

THE AFRICAN QUEEN (1951)

The totally entertaining and endearing film version of C. S. Forester's story about a hard-bitten skipper and a spinster who become heroes and lovers during a perilous escape down an African river in 1915. The film was made on location in Africa under the skillful hand of John Huston and further abetted by a fine script by novelist and critic James Agee and two matchless performances by Humphrey Bogart and Katherine Hepburn. Bogart won an Oscar for his performance and it stands up today as his most likeable role. Gamble Auditorium Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 10-20, 7:30.

"AND NOW FOR SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT" (1972)

A film by some of Cambridge University graduates. This British comedy explores comic adventures of some London working class men. It uses short snappy situations that are held together and given purpose by a series of animations. The film and its approach to even the most mundane situations is very different and fresh. All of the material, music and sets are produced by the Monty Python team themselves which gives the movie an overall completeness rare in situation comedy. Tuesday, Wednesday, 10-23, 10-24. For time and place see Collegian Ad.

BELLE DE JOUR (1968)

Luis Bunuel elegant fantasy is concerned with the sexual longings of a bored, Parisian housewife. She acts them out in a dreamlike bordello. A splendid film to watch, with Catherine Deneuve. Globe Theater, Northampton.

ELECTRIC GLIDE IN BLUE

FANTASIA (1940)

When this full length cartoon was first released it was the most costly and ambitious ever made. It is Walt Disney's visual interpretation of eight famous musical themes. Critic George Sadont has written "Disney imagined he was Goethe but mainly succeeds in achieving only something at the level of the German turn-of-the-century chrosmo." A work of middle-brow vulgarity, often ponderous, such as the creation and evolution of the world to "The Rite of Spring"; others are offensive, such as the Beethoven and Schubert. The film works best at its unpretentious moments: Mickey Mouse as the Sorcerer's Apprentice and the ghoulish "Night On Bald Mountain." The film was the first produced with stereophonic sound, a technical innovation in 1940 and used only in limited release. Received well by some critics, after its opening Bosley Crowther wrote in The New York Times "Motion picture history was made last night."

Audiences didn't warm quickly to Disney's vision and it lost money during the initial release. Disney became disillusioned and never again attempted a project on such a huge scale. The musical selections are by Leopold Stowkowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

40 CARATS

Take an infantile farce, concerning a fortyish career woman who falls in love with a twenty-one year old millionaire; add generous helpings of flakey one-liners, throw in your stock crazy supporting types, and dress Liv Ullmann in what appears someone's dining room drapes and you have about the worst comedy film of the year. Liv Ullmann had better find a new agent — with this and "Lost Horizon" under her belt, her visa may be revoked. Here she so arched that if she moved, cracks will appear. Calvin Theater, Northampton probably.

JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR

"And Now the Film," the ads proclaim as if fulfilling the prophecies. "Jesus Christ Superstar" hasthe charm of a hippie curio and the fascination of a beached whale. There's something hopelessly determined about the picture. It has the drive and rhythm of a pneumatic hammer and, is after the initial shock, about as enjoyable. Director co-scriptwriter Norman Jewison makes films which disguise themselves as disposable entertainments which overtly dissolve into glossy message films. Characters aren't just pieces of furniture in Jewison's films, they think, they know what "angst" is. Whipped before a public tribunal this hippie Jesus knew suffering — a bit of Bactine and this Christ would be back boogieing in the desert or knocking over picture postcards in his local temple. Jewison, a minor talent with mighty intentions, finds his artistic complement in "Jesus Christ Superstar", a desert operetta with Almighty intentions, and believes he's rediscovered the Holy Grail. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

JOE (1969)

Late Sixties hippie paranoia made commercial. An ugly film, with all sorts of specious generalizations that are only half-baked prejudices sensationally expressed. Peter Boyle plays Joe, quite chillingly. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 10-24, 7 and 9:15; Thursday, 10-24, 7 and 9:15.

THE MAN WHO SHORT LIBERTY VALANCE (1962)

An excellent John Ford western. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Tuesday, 10-23, 7:30 & 9:30.

MOROCCO (1933)

This romantic drama stems from the idea that "There is a foreign legion of women, who also choose to hide their wounds behind an incognito." Dietrich appears in top hat, tie, and tails, and gives an amazing rendition of "How Much Am I Bid For My Apples." There is little dialogue to speak of; Dietrich could hardly speak English when her director, throughout the Thirties, Joseph Von Sternberg, and she made their American debut with this film. The simple plot is about a cabaret dancer with a doubtful past who comes to Morocco and is wooed by two suitors. Von Sternberg never equalled this film for its adult, deeply ironic handling of romantic material. The two returned to this material in subsequent films, but never with such success or fun. Chaplin said of Von Sternberg: "Yes, he is an artist...(Morocco) is his best film." Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 10-23, 9 and 11.

MY NIGHT AT MAUD'S (1969)

This intensely literate and cinematic film is the third of Eric Rohmer's contes moraux. Its story of apparently banal lives has tremendous power and is, ultimately, an intelligent and moving examination of morality, solitude, and human relationships. The focal point of the film is the dialogue between Maud and Jean-Louis in which "each talks with an affected charm born of some private knowledge that the others lacks" (Peter Cowie). The final encounter on the beach, in which hardly a word is spoken, has the kind of discreet brilliance in its use of the camera that one finds elsewhere in the film. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 10-20, 7:30 and 9:30.

NINOTCHKA (1939)

"Garbo Laughs" is what the ingeneous MGM advertising department invented when this film, one of Garbo's last, was released in 1939. Laugh she does in one beautiful moment as she is dining in a Parisean sidewalk cafe with Melvyn Douglas in this memorably blithe satire about the meeting of communism and capitalism in Paris handled well by the master director of the sophisticated comedy Ernst Lubitsh. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Sunday, 10-21, 7:30 and 9:30.

NIGHT WATCH

Elizabeth Taylor in an intricate thriller, with Laurence Harvey. Directed by Brian Hutto, Academy of Music, Northampton.

THE POSSESSION OF JOE DELANEY (1971)

A thriller, with Shirley MacLaine, Student Union Ballroom, Monday, 10-22, times to be announced.

THE PRODUCERS (1968)

A splendid comedy, with a cock-eyed ending. It's all one gag, once the gag finally expends itself the film has nowhere to go. The gag is can two con artists pass a sure-flop Broadway musical off and collect on the 25,000 per cent their backers invested? The joke doesn't burn out until near the end, along the way the New York theater scene is pungently torn apart by writer-director Mel Brooks. Zero Mostel plays the unscrupulous producer, Gene Wilder is his unwilling accomplice; their rapport is splendi-. Brook's choice of the musical the two produce is brilliant: called "Springtime For Hitler", it is Busby Berkelyize- Nazi Germany. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Saturday, 10-20, 7:30 and 10; Sunday, 10-21, 7.

RED BEARD (1965)

This recent Akira Kuresawa period drama takes place in the early 19th century. A recently graduated doctor, Yasumoto is posted to an impoverished clinic run by Dr. Niide, whose patients call him "Red Beard." Kurosawa himself has called this a "monument to goodness in man." This remarkable "Education sentimentale," Dostoevskian in overtone, the film has been much criticized for its "sentimentality," its proposition that good begets good. Kurosawa challenges the viewer to react cynically and then shows that the cynicism is meaningless. Kurosawa's style is simple, yet every scene is full of revealing details and images of extraordinary beauty. Toshiro Mifune gives a superb performance in an extremely difficult role. Thompson 104, Friday, 10-19, 7 and 10.

STATE OF SIEGE

Costas-Gravas's frightening polemic about American behind-the-scenes espionage in South America. It's partly frightening because it bellows so, but mostly effective due to the efficient direction and the neatly executed performance of Yves Montand. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

TALES FROM THE CRYPT (1971)

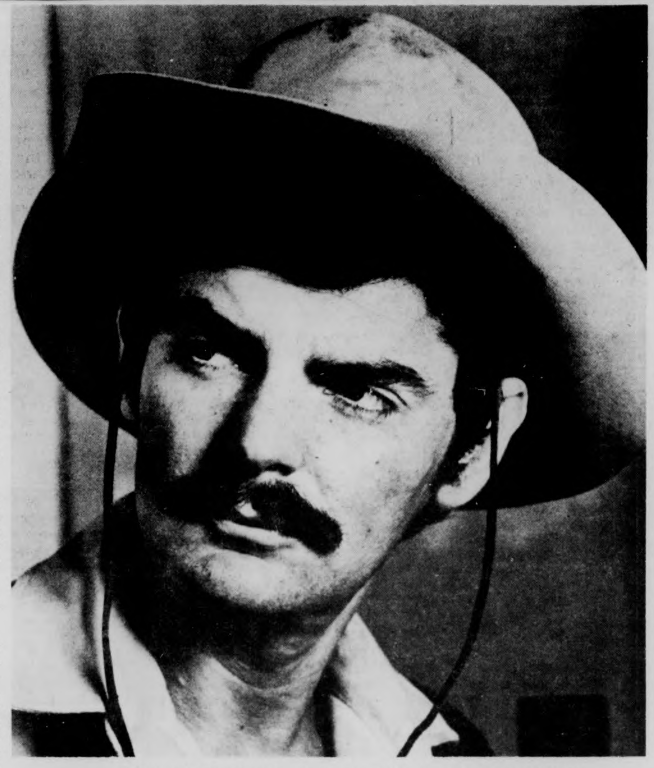
The first satisfying horror film in four years, or at least since "Dracula Has Risen From The Grave", is this genuinely frightening, ingenious, and intelligent excursion into the supernatural. It is a set of five horror tales as five tourists trapped in a crypt are given visions of what they would do if released. Quite original and scary with a fine cast led by Ralph Richardson, Nigel Patrick, and Patric Magee. Sutdent Union Ballroom, Thursday, 10-25, 7 and 9.

VARIETY (1925)

A formerly talented acrobat, played by Emil Jannings, leaves his wife and child to elope with a young foreign girl. They form a trapeze act with a young acrobat who quickly seduces the girl. Directed by Ewald Andre Dupont. His editing, which is especially remarkable, since the change from one shot to another is often used to suggest shifts of viewpoint on the part of the characters. "Not a scene was staged," wrote Moussinac, "except in relatinship to the camera. A continually roving lens seizes the best angle for every detail, expression, and scene." Jannings gives what is certainly his best performance and for once plays with remarkable restraint. Lya de Putti radiates a convincing sense of voluptuous eroticism. Variety was an enormous public success, especially in the USA, and exerted considrable effect on Hollywood technique. Campus Center, Rooms 165-169, Thursday, 10-25, 9.

WESTWORLD

Michael Crichton's dream world, when entire universes can be created. Too bad Crichton can't make a film that doesn't look like a tourist trip through a souped-up Disneyland. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.



Richard Benjamin stars in "Westworld," an MGM production directed by Michael Crichton.

Fraudulent Federal Report Claimed

Computing Center Charged With Data Distortion

By JERRY LAZAR

UMass officials are investigating accusations made by an ex-employee of the University Computing Center who claims he was illegally fired in September, 1972 because he threatened to expose an alleged conspiracy involving Dr. Conrad A. Wogrin, director of the Computing Center.

The investigation was prompted by letters dated August 10, 1973 to three U.S. Senators, signed by Thomas F. Sullivan, a former night shift operator at the Center. The letters claimed that Wogrin and Dr. James C. Fortune, then a School of Education professor, "conspired in the execution of a computer program which generated a fraudulent report for the U.S. Office of Education."

Both Wogrin and Fortune have "made emphatic, unqualified denials of the allegations," according to a member of the ad hoc investigating committee.

Fortune was principle investigator for a segment of a Federal evaluation of the effectiveness of the Title I program, contracted to the University by the Office of Education (OE). Title I was formed with the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and was designed to help educationally deprived children in low-income areas. About one billion dollars was appropriated by Congress and spent by the USOE during the program's first year.

The Commissioner of Education is required by law to annually report on the effectiveness of the Title I program. Fortune's project, "Data Analysis of 1969-70 Survey of Compensatory Education (Title I)", was a part of that evaluation, and entailed the services of the Computing Center.

Fortune left UMass in August, 1972 and is now teaching at Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Blacksburg, Virginia.

Sullivan told the Collegian that Fortune, at the request of the Office of Education, deliberately manipulated the data of the survey so that it would make Title I seem ineffective and therefore no longer worthy of Congressional appropriations.

According to Sullivan, the project was originally contracted to "another major U.S. university" which produced results favorable to Title I. Then, said Sullivan, the contract was given to UMass, which used the same data and produced the same results.

Thomas F. Sullivan

Sullivan claims that Fortune then went to Washington with the evaluation and conclusions, and there was asked by the OE to change the "weight factor", which, according to Sullivan, would change the output of the computer program.

"Fortune did an honest job originally," said Sullivan. "The data at its best was shoddy to begin with."

Sullivan said Fortune did not want to cooperate with the OE, but "four or five" people from OE came to campus, spent a week in Fortune's office, and convinced him to change the weight factor, which was executed March 28-29, 1972, according to Sullivan.

Commager Asks Impeachment

Staff Photo/Kristen Thompson

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

Historian Henry Steele Commager last night called for the impeachment of President Richard Nixon. Speaking at an all-College Meeting at Amherst College, Commager paraphrased the Declaration of Independence and enumerated thirteen "high crimes and misdemeanors" which make Nixon subject to impeachment by the House of Representatives.

The meeting called by editors of the AMHERST STUDENT "to inform the campus of the moral and constitutional basis of the current national crisis, to consider the possibility of supporting the impeachment of President Nixon and to dramatize publicy our outrage at currents," packed Amherst College's Johnson Chapel. Also speaking were Amherst American Studies Professor Leo Marx and John M. Ward, Amherst College president.

Professor Marx urged students to look past the present crisis. "Isn't Richard Nixon saying that the American empire deserves an emperor?" Calling the present Constitutional crisis "the latest in a series of crises since the assassination of President Kennedy, "Marx said we must look past the crisis and begin to see "this disease threatens the very survival of our Constitutional democracy."

Taking a more cautious stand, President Ward said, "We are at the edge, but not yet over it. If Judge Sirica's Court finds President Nixon, by refusing to obey a court order to turn over the White House tapes, to be in contempt of court and he refuses to obey, then he will be subject to impeachment."

Commager called the history of the present administration "a history of repeated injuries and usurpations." Among Commager's thirteen charges against Nixon were:

1. He has waged a "cruel war...in defiance of international law, of the charter of the United Nations, and of the Constitution of the United States.

2. "He has ignored and flouted those provisions of the Bill of Rights guaranteeing freedom of speech, of assembly, and petition."

3. "He has betrayed the basic principles of self-government by attempting to subvert and corrupt the election processes, and by deception, trickery, espionage and violence he has conspired to deceive the American people...thereby fatally compromising the integrity of the Democratic processes."

4. "He has resorted again and again to criminal acts in order to steal or to obtain by violence, documents to which (he) had no title, and he has sought to protect the tools and agents of these crimes by the implied promise of executive clemency."

5. "He has ignored and flouted the constitutional provision that he faithfully execute the laws by impudently claiming the right to ignore the laws themselves and by impouding funds."

6. "He has violated the confidentiality of his associates and consultants in his own official home by making tape recordings of their conversations without their permission or their knowledge.

7. "He has refused to abide by a definitive order of the highest court that passed on the issue that he turn over for the inspection of the court his record of the tapes, compounding his defiance of the law and his contempt for the courts by removing from office an official who had been promised immunity from official interference of any kind."

Commager's final statement prompted a standing ovation from the overflow audience. "Therefore," he said, "we, the American people, call upon the House of Representatives to impeach and the Senate to convict Richard Nixon for high crimes and misdemeanors."

The meeting was announced in the October 22 issue of the AMHERST STUDENT, which carried a front-page editorial calling for impeachment. Calling the weeks ahead representative of "either the redemption of American democracy or the prologue to its collapse, the editors asked newspapers at major campuses to endorse and print the editorial.

Following the all-College meeting, a meetinvof the Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon was held in the Colonial Lounge of the UMass Student Union.

Kennedy Calls Compromise On Tapes A "Sham"

By MARK VOGLER

Washington, D.C.--Senator Edward M. Kennedy Monday called President Nixon's attempted tapes compromise "a sham" and declared that "Congress cannot stand silent" in view of circumstances surrounding the firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

In an afternoon press conference at the Capitol, Senator Kennedy referred to the recent Watergate-related events "the most disturbing aspects of the intense constitutional crisis into which this nation has been plunged".

Kennedy said "the facts and allegations that have so far come to light" raised questions which the Senate would have to resolve. Kennedy said he has urged the Senate Judiciary to undertake a full investigation of "serious" allegations, directed at the Nixon administration, as well as other questions surrounding the dismissal of Cox. The Committee is scheduled to begin its action Wednesday morning with Cox summoned as the first witness before the Committee.

Several of the questions which Kennedy said merited answers included:

--When did Attorney General Richardson first learn that a decision to fire Mr. Cox was im-

Homecoming: Floats And Bloody Marys

Staff Photo/Tuna Stewart

Well, it sure beats waiting in line for that terrible food at the dining commons, but the accomodations aren't much to write home about...

Staff Photo/Tuna Stewart

If only Floatmaking 101 hadn't been oversubscribed, maybe ours would have won...

By JOAN FASSNACHT

For some UMies, Homecoming was just that, as they took to the roads, thumbs out in anticipation of exotic places and a long weekend "away from it all". For others, it was a blissful chance to get away from the books, at least temporarily. And for some, it was a time to get high and relax, and enjoy the western Massachusetts autumn foliage.

But for the rest, it was a Homecoming in the true sense of the word, complete with all the accompanying entrapments. Floats, rallys, parties, tailgate picnics, champagne and bloody mary breakfasts, receptions, and of course "The Game" continued to be the traditional features. Everyone missed the concerts, but then who ever looked forward to sitting in the Cage for four hours on those hard wooden benches, anyway???

For most fraternities and sororities, the Float Parade at 7 on Friday night officially launched off the weekend. Twelve floats were entered in the competition, six from the Greeks and six from various other organizations. Phi Sigma Kappa and Chi Omega captured the honors and the trophies for the best floats. Phi Sigma's float captured even more attention when persons unknown burned it down Saturday night.

Greek celebrations continued throughout the weekend with dinners, alumni parties, tailgate picnics, powderpuff football games, and hayrides. One independent fraternity, Sigma Alpha Mu, defied tradition and went roller skating Friday night.

For the alumni, it was an official 20-year homecoming for the class of 1953 and a fifth year reunion for the class of 1968. Both classes were special guests at the Saturday morning tailgate picnic before the game. Special sections were also roped off at the football game for alumni guests.

Alumni festivities continued Saturday night with dinners and dancing at the various dining commons. Hangers-on Sunday morning were sent off in good spirits after a Bloody Mary breakfast at the Top of the Campus.

The highlight of any Homecoming weekend has always been the big football game. It was just as well that the raw and drizzly weather prevented many from attending the game, as a fairly light turnout watched UMass go down in defeat to URI 41 to 35. And it was equally as bad that the weather kept many people from enjoying the half-time show featuring the University Jazz Workshop and drummer Max Roach.

For those of you who contributed in large sums to the University, there was a reception at Chancellor Bromery's house after the game. About 200 people from the Second Century Club jammed into the Chancellor's house for drinks, food, and scintillating conversation.

Not everyone this weekend took part in official celebrations. A random sampling of students taken Monday afternoon listed such other weekend activities as: watching television, going to parties, going to the movies, and going to the local watering holes. And of course there were the inevitable few who studied.

There was even one person who went through the weekend oblivious to the event. When questioned as to his Homecoming activities, one puzzled UMie said, "So that's what all those floats were for..."

Local Group Organizes Committee To Impeach Nixon

A group of area residents met yesterday afternoon to organize citizen support in western Massachusetts for a movement to impeach President Richard M. Nixon.

The meeting was called hastily in reaction to President Nixon's latest attempt over the weekend to withhold the controversial Watergate tapes in defiance of a ruling by the U.S. Circuit Court that Nixon hand over the tapes to U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica. Nixon's unwillingness to release the tapes led to his firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox and the resignations, in protest, of Attorney General Elliot Richardson and Deputy Attorney General William Ruckelshaus.

Calling itself simply the "Committee to Impeach Nixon," the group decided to work in specific organizational areas--fund-raising for a media campaign urging impeachment; circulating impeachment petitions; lobbying key Congressmen on the House Judiciary Committee, which will probably be the committee in which impeachment is first officially discussed in Congress; and arranging an audience with Congressman Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield), who represents the First Congressional District in Massachusetts.

The meeting of about 35 persons was chaired by Russell Carrier of Northampton, who was a delegate to the 1972 Democratic National Convention. A number of other local political figures attended, including Democratic State Senator John Olver, former Selectman candidate George Scheurer, and former Democratic Convention delegate Kenneth Mosakowski, all of Amherst; and from Northampton, Republican City Councilor William Ames, Democratic candidate for City Council William Nagle, Democratic School Committee candidate Deborah Weeks, and Charter Commission member John Lawlor, who was also a delegate to last year's Democratic National Convention.

In a related development last night, Democratic State Representative James Collins added his support to the local impeachment effort. Appearing on a live forum on radio station WMUA, Collins declared that "Nixon has not given the American people the facts" on the Watergate break-in, and thus "the American people have no other recourse than to urge Congress to initiate impeachment proceedings."

Further information about the Committee to Impeach Nixon can be obtained from finance chairwoman Nadine Gallo, P.O. Box 373, Hadley, Mass. 01035.

Impeachment Rally Planned For Amherst

By ROBERTA MARTONE

A rally concerning the impeachment of President Nixon was the subject of an informal meeting in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, last night. The rally is to take place at 7:30 tonight on the Amherst Common.

A march is scheduled for before beginning on North Pleasant St. near the North East Area dorms and will continue through the residential areas of the university, ending at the Amherst Common.

Alwin Schmidt, a member of the Young Workers Liberation League, said, "The purpose of the rally is to co-ordinate the whole effort with the 5 college area and get a general sentiment on the issue."

Last night's meeting was mainly concerned with setting up publicity for the rally, and obtaining speakers to speak on the common.

Nick Apostola, president of the Student Government Association, said, "You can't just have people shouting about impeaching Nixon. The people have to know what the issue is and what action they can take. Tangible things have to be done."

Apostola also suggested postcards should be distributed at the rally so interested people can write to Washington, expressing their views on the impeachment.

It was not decided who the speakers were to be. Suggestions from the floor included: Senator Brooke, a representative from the AFL-CIO, Jeanetta Cole for the Third World, Jeffrey Cambell from the Unitarian Society of Amherst, and any student who wished to express his views on the impeachment.

In the national scene, Doug Phelps, member of the National Student Association, said there have already been demonstrations at Smith College and other colleges around the country. There is to be a rally in New York today, and, at present, there is a meeting in Washington to decide if a rally should be held this weekend, said Phelps. It was the general feeling that this weekend would be too soon for a Washington rally.

All interested persons are strongly urged to attend the Amherst march and rally.

The Commuter Assembly is planning to organize a postcard campaign intended to flood senator's and congressmen's desks with opinions on the question of the impeachment of President Nixon.

According to Cindy Cofferan president of the Commuter Assembly, tables will be set up in the "Campus Center or Student Union this afternoon or tomorrow." She said that the exact time is not known yet because the campaign is only in its infant stage.

The tables will be manned by Commuter Assembly members who will have postcards, which they will sell at cost, with the names and addresses of senators and congressmen of Massachusetts and possibly other states listed on them.

The Commuter Assembly is organizing this campaign in reaction to the firing of Special Watergate Prosecutor Archibald Cox and the resignations of Attorney General Elliot Richardson and Deputy Attorney General William Ruckelshaus.

What's Green And White...?

By KAREN LYNCH

Ever wonder what you'd do with a million dollars? Do another 30 semesters at UMass, worry free?

Or buy that Ferrari? Or perhaps give it all away?

Well, the people on the Campus Center Board of Governors who gave us our favorite diversion, the pinball machine, have brought that million a little bit closer.

A little more than a week ago a Massachusetts Lottery ticket vending machine was installed on the Campus Center concourse.

The machine has since been sold out, partly because on Monday of last week the machine failed to shut itself off after it was fed a dollar and began to give away free tickets. An unidentified person made off with around 80 tickets for the price of 2.

In order to sell the tickets it is necessary to have a permit from the Massachusetts Lottery Commission.

Usually the dealer gets a 5 percent commission on sales, plus 1 percent of the winnings over $2500.

This 1 percent is provided by the Lottery Commission, not the individual winner.

There is a Mass. Lottery Commission law, however, that prevents state employees from selling the lottery tickets, and technically, Campus Center employees are state employees.

A bill to reverse that law is presently before the legislature, but for now the Campus Center will split the takings with the dealer, 2.5 percent on sales and .5 percent on winnings over $2500.

If one of the 80 "free" tickets should be a winning ticket, though the dealer lost the $40 on sales, the Campus Center and the dealer would still receive .5 percent each of the winnings.

The vending machines, a recent invention, are being installed elsewhere throughout the state as they are produced.

The Lottery Commission is also working on "instant winner" tickets for the machines whereby the player knows immediately whether he is a winner.

Scholar Examines Black Nationalism

By BOBBI RAMSAY

Dr. Robert Hill, black scholar and political activist was the third guest lecturer of this semester for the Distinguished Visitor's Program. Dr. Hill's presentation addressed the topic, "Crisis of Black Nationalism and the Tradition of Marcus Garvey."

Hill is known throughout the Third World for his reseach and analysis of the famed black leader, Marcus Garvey, who came to national prominence in the early 30's with the rise in popularity of his "Back to Africa" movement. Though his primary thrust in the past has been an analysis of Black Nationalism and it's realtionship to the liberation struggle, Hill has now turned to the question of the peasantry and their role in the liberation struggle, both in the West Indies and America.

As he sees it, the issue of Black nationalism is a land question and thus comes directly out of the peasantry. It was this land question which was primarily responsible for religious movements among the peasantry in Jamaica, such as the Great Revival in the 1860's and the Rastafari movement in present day Jamaica. In his research on the topic, Dr. Hill came across Robert Rumble, who is the only known leader of a peasant struggle for Jamaican independence and self-government in the 1930's.

According to Hill, the question at this time is not what the contribution was of the peasantry to the black struggle. Rather we should address the exclusion of the peasantry from the history of black struggle. This exclusion can only be wrong because as Hill sees it, the peasantry "were the primary victims of the original structure of oppression from which black folks came and that original structure is deeply embedded in the present day."

If we accept this notion, and we must, why are we so unconscious of the strategic importance of the peasantry. On this issue, Hill maintains that we must move from the peasants politically as a historical fact to a reappraisal of black ideology because there is somehting fundamentally wrong with the omittance of the peasantry from our political ranks.

In his estimation, the peasants have always been alive in the literature, arts, dances and foods of black people and one can say with much certainty that the peasantry define the meaning of black culture. If they are then omitted in the area of political ideology, there can only be a dangerous split between the creative arts of black people and black politics and ideology. Dr. Hill then went on to state that: "Not until we fuse the question of culture with the question of struggle, can we develop an all inclusive legitimacy to black life. We must realize that the peasants who embody black culture are the source of political liberation."

When asked to define exactly who made up the black peasantry, Hill responded that there was no set definition of peasantry that would satisfy everyone. In his own usage, he refers to the people who originally came from a land base and the people who remain on the land. Thus the brother from the South who works on the factory line in Detroit is as much a part of the peasantry as is the sharecropping family in Georgia.

In the United States, Dr. Hill sees the problem of defining the peasantry as compounded. It becomes here a question of a geographical sector.

In his concluding statements, Dr. Hill voiced the belief that the black struggle will be won or lost in the South. This is not to say that decisive struggles in urban centers will not be of importance. Neither does this say that the black middle and upper classes will not be involved. Rather it suggests that the role of these classes will be subordinate. In the final analysis, the black struggle is a national struggle that in great measure stems from the fact that we in the struggle are all black and thus we are waging what is primarily an all-class struggle.

War In The Mideast

Guns Not Silenced By Truce

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Egypt and Israel ordered their armies to quit shooting Monday in compliance with a United Nations Security Council call for a cease-fire in the 17-day war. Syria did not respond to the U.N. appeal and fighting was reported continuing on both fronts hours after the truce took effect.

Israel charged that Egyptian guns were firing on its troops at various points along the Suez Canal battle lines early Tuesday, six hours after the ceasefire deadline passed.

Egyptian broadcasts denied Israeli claims of violations. A military spokesman was quoted as saying Egyptian troops complied with the call for a 6:50 p.m shooting halt, and that Israel's charges were "a pretext to violate the cease-fire."

The latest Israeli communique, issued shortly before 1 a.m. Tuesday, said: "The cease-fire is not being observed on most sectors of the Egyptian theater." Israel accused Egypt of firing on its forces Monday night, after the cease-fire deadline.

AP Special Correspondent Hugh A. Mulligan reported from an Israeli position on the west bank of the Suez Canal that a great volley of gunfire erupted minutes after the truce took effect.

The Tel Aviv command said Egyptians were using "various types of weapons." It did not say if Israeli forces were returning the fire.

Egypt and Israel accepted the Security Council truce call in the morning hours, but Damascus was keeping silent on whether Syria would comply.

An Israeli spokesman said: "There is no cease-fire on the Syrian front," and Israeli and Syrian communiques said fighting continued.

Earlier, Israel claimed it seized a strategic artillery position in bloody hand-to-hand fighting on he slopes of Mt. Hermon, the mountain towering over the Syrian battleground.

Observers in southern Lebanon, near the area, said the sounds of fighting on Mt. Hermon died out just before the cease-fire deadline.

Associated Press correspondent Alex Efty reported in Damascus that artillery flashes, visible every night of the war to the south of the Syrian capital, were not observed Monday night.

Palestinian guerrillas have said they would not comply with the U.N. call for a ceasefire.

Iraq, the major Arab nation fighting with the Syrians, rejected the cease-fire outright and Jordan, with a small force deployed on the Syrian front, said it would accept the truce if Syria agreed.

In New York, U.N. officials said the success of the ceasefire and an eventual peace settlement hinged on the good faith of the Arabs and the Israelis and on further action by the Security Council.

The truce was jointly proposed by the Soviet Union and the United States, the superpowers backing the warring parties. It was voted in the Security Council early Monday after an agreement worked out in Moscow over the weekend by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

In addition to the cease-fire in place, it called for Israeli withdrawal from Jordanian, Egyptian and Syrian land captured in the six-day war of 1967 and negotiations aimed at a lasting peace agreement for the Middle East, site of four wars since the Jewish state was declared in 1948.

The Syrian delay in accepting the cease-fire, if it continues, could undermine efforts to carry out the post cease-fire portions of the agreement.

Kissinger stopped in Israel briefly Monday on his way home from Moscow to confer with Premier Golda Meir and other Israeli leaders, presumably to fill them in on the subsequent steps intended in his accord with Brezhnev.

The cease-fire came with the Israelis claiming a net gain of about 1,115 square miles of Arab land over the truce lines settled on at the close of the 1967 Middle East war.

This additional occupation constituted a strong trump for peace negotiations called for in the Security Council resolution.

UN Says Peace Plan Rests On Good Faith

By GENE KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)-U.N. officials said Monday the success of a U.S.-Soviet-sponsored Middle East cease-fire and peace plan hinges on good faith by the Arabs and Israelis, and on further action by the Security Council.

Hopefully awaiting a halt to the 17-day war, the officials admitted the U.S.-Soviet resolution adopted by the Security Council in the post-midnight hours carried no specific provisions for enforcement or for initiating peace talks.

It said merely that negotiations toward a just and durable peace should start "immediately and concurrently with the cease-fire...under appropriate auspices."

It will be up to the 15-nation Security Council to define "appropriate auspices," a U.N. spokesman said when asked whether Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim was undertaking this role.

"The resolution calls for a cessation of hostilities, but it says nothing about the observation" of the battle areas to insure compliance, the spokesman said when asked about the future of U.N. observation teams in the Middle East.

Observers of the Israeli-Egyptian front were pulled back to Cairo at Egypt's request soon after the war broke out.

"The U.N. role was not defined in the resolution and the world organization has not really begun planning it," the spokesman said.

The implication was that the U.N. role would await clarification by the United States and the Soviet Union, the same powers that achieved a 14-0 passage of the cease-fire resolution. The breakthrough at a dramatic midnight session followed Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's weekend trip to Moscow.

The Washington-Moscow agreement to urge an in-place cease-fire represented a change in the positions each power had originally taken.

The United States at first had suggested a cease-fire based on Arab and Israeli withdrawal to positions held prior to the start of the fighting. The Soviets said any cease-fire resolution would have to provide for Israeli withdrawal to the borders preceding the 1967 war.

Arabs At Odds

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - War brought the Arabs together. Peace might pull them apart.

The Arab unity which emerged in the first 16 days of the Middle east war seemed to be coming apart Monday, the 17th day, within hours of a U.N. Security Council call for a cease-fire. Allies in arms against Israel, they found themselves at odds over peace policy.

Iraq, a combatant on the Syrian front, rejected any ceasefire or negotiations with the Jewish state. Syria was "studying" the cease-fire proposal. Egypt accepted it and Jordan was expected to follow suit, apparently hoping the superpowers might force an Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands occupied since 1967.

Palestinian refugees and their guerrilla fighting arm, which has been a main cause of Arab-Israeli friction for the last quarter century, were not consulted.

But the executive committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization made it clear that it would not accept a cease-fire abrogating the 25-year struggle to recapture the Palestinian homeland.

Congress Would Consider Impeachment Of Nixon

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Forty-four members of the House of Representatives said Monday they favored or at least would consider instituting impeachment proceedings against President Nixon. Most of the congressmen were Democrats.

Seventeen House members said they were undecided on the matter and 12 said they opposed impeachment.

Of the 44 members favoring or considering impeachment, 38 were Democrats, six were Republicans.

The figures were the result of a sampling of the sentiment of House members following Nixon's weekend firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox. House members were scattered across the country for the holiday weekend and many could not be reached.

Rep. Jerome R. Waldie, D-Calif., said he would introduce a resolution Tuesday to impeach Nixon on grounds of obstruction of justice.

Waldie's draft impeachment resolution pointed to Nixon's refusal of court orders to produce tapes and documents related to the Watergate investigation and Nixon's abolition of the office of the special prosecutor.

Under impeachment procedures, the House Judiciary Committee could investigate Waldie's proposal, much as a grand jury examines evidence, and make a recommendation to the full House. If the committee recommended impeachment and the full House voted by a simple majority to accept that recommendation, the Senate would try the impeachment case.

On the other hand, the committee could table the resolution and thereby effectively kill it.

Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., proposed that Nixon agree to resign in return for Ford's immediate confirmation with Ford thereby succeeding Nixon as President.

One of the most vigorous proponents of impeachment was Rep. Donald Fraser, D-Minn., national chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action.

"The President's actions. . .have left Congress with no choice but to proceed with impeachment," Fraser said. "The President, in setting himself beyond the law, has challenged the whole basis upon which our government is funded - that of a government under law."

And from Rep. Ken Hechler, D-W. Va.: "For a nation numbed by a successive series of shocks, this latest nightmare-come-true at first sounded like some sort of a halloween fantasy, yet is it not obvious that respect for the Constitution and the orderly processes of government cannot continue with the present occupant of the White House."

While an overwhelming amount of the support for impeachment came from Democrats, Rep. H. R. Gross, R-Iowa, said he "would support an impeachment action against President Nixon unless the federal court on its own motion proceeded with action to obtain the Watergate tapes. The principle of executive branch accountability to the Congress is at stake."

Among those opposed to an impeachment move was Rep. Robert J. Huber, R-Mich., who called Cox's dismissal long overdue.

"Cox was trying to build an empire," Huber added. "He had practically 100 attorneys on his staff just to investigate Watergate. It's ridiculous."

Others said it was just too early to be talking of such drastic action.

"I think it's far too early to conclude, for any other than partisan reasons one has harbored all along, that he has abused his executive authority," said Rep. Howard W. Robison, R-N.Y. "Maybe he has. But let's wait a while and find out."

Even some members of the House long loyal to Nixon indicated that while they did not favor impeachment move now, they did not know how long they would continue to feel that way.

"I've carried Nixon's flag faithfully for five years and it's getting awfully heavy," said Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va.

Rep. Jerry L. Pettis, R-Calif., said every man is presumed innocent and the President should be given the benefit of the doubt. "I'm bending over backwards to believe him," Pettis said. "I'm bending over so far backwards my fifth vertebra is about to break."

Poll Shows Americans Favor Impeachment

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Demands for impeachment of President Nixon or his resignation mounted Monday in Washington as a scientific poll showed a thin plurality of Americans favoring impeachment.

NBC News said the poll showed 44 per cent in favor of impeachment, 43 per cent opposed and 13 per cent undecided. The Oliver Quayle organization contacted nearly 1,000 persons for the poll.

The poll was initiated after Nixon fired special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox. It showed 75 per cent of those questioned opposed to that action, 16 per cent approved and 9 per cent undecided, NBC said.

The network said 48 per cent of those questioned since Saturday night believe Nixon should step aside "and let someone else run the country," while 43 per cent said he should not resign and 9 per cent were undecided.

Meanwhile, the new acting attorney general pledged vigorous pursuit of the Watergate investigation.

House Speaker Carl Albert and other congressional leaders worked on plans for how to proceed with impeachment resolutions promised by angry members in the wake of Nixon's firing Saturday night of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Nixon, first at the White House and then at his Camp David, Md., retreat, considered using a televised speech to present his side of the case to the nation.

U.S. Solicitor General Robert H. Bork said the staff and evidence assembled by Cox would be used to pursue the Watergate probe. Bork became acting attorney general when Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson quit and Deput Atty. Gen. William D. Ruckelshaus was dismissed Saturday night over Cox's firing.

He put the investigation under the supervision of Henry E. Petersen, the assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division.

Bork said he retains "ultimate authority and responsibility" for the investigation. When Nixon fired Cox, he also abolished the office of special prosecutor, which had handled the case since May.

While White House aides sought to mollify critical senators and congressmen with explanations of Nixon's action, criticism of the move continued to pile up - a significant amount of it from Republicans.

The AFL-CIO's national convention in Miami Beach, Fla., shouted approval to a resolution calling for Nixon to resign or be impeached if he didn't.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, a member of the Senate Watergate committee, told the convention Nixon should resign because Americans "have suffered enough" and "must be spared this new pain and trauma."

The public flooded Western Union with telegrams to Washington. Some 8,000 were sent to Cox's former office. A new Gallup Poll taken before Saturday's events showed Nixon's confidence rating with the public at a new low.

The president of the American Bar Association urged Congress to reestablish the office of the special prosecutor, a move of a number of senators and representatives also advocated.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., urged the Senate Judiciary Committee to investigate what he called accumulating evidence that last week's tapes battle as a pretext to fire Cox because he was "too hot on the White House trail."

Chancellor's Office Investigates

Conspiracy Charges Hit Computing Center

"Dr. Fortune in his heart did not want to do what he did," said Sullivan, "but he was forced to. And I was pissed. This was clear perversion by a Federal agency," he said.

The UMass investigation is being conducted by members of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's staff: Dr. James I. DeShields, Dr. Douglas Forsyth, Patricia Asack, and staff attorney Sidney Myers. They will report to the Chancellor "in the near future," said DeShields. Bromery will then report to UMass President Robert Wood, who will respond to Senators Edward Kennedy, Edward Brooke, and Lowell Weicker.

"We will make recommendations in terms of our perceptions of the situation," DeShields told the Collegian.

What were Wogrin's and Fortune's reaction?

"They have made most emphatic, unqualified denials of the allegations," said DeShields.

"Our role is to assess the facts as we see them. The onus of substantiating the allegations is on Sullivan," he said.

"He (Sullivan) should either move, and take legal action," added Myers, "or withdraw the allegations."

"Very serious allegations have been made," said DeShields. "Individuals have been accused of wrongdoing. If they feel they have been hurt (by the accusations), then they may take action to protect themselves. Nothing prevents frivolous allegations unless the aggrieved party takes it to court," he said. "Again, the onus of substantiating the allegations is on Sullivan."

"We are assuming that Sullivan is a responsible individual," added Myers, "and that he is aware of and accountable for his actions."

Sullivan presented the committee a handwritten, eleven-page letter addressed to Robert H. Gonter, associate director of the Computing Center, dated September, 1972, in which he requests a two-week leave of absence. The letter accuses various Center staff members of racism, nepotism, and illegal moonlighting.

Sullivan claims he handed the letter to Gonter at a meeting with him and another Center staff member, at which Gonter, according to Sullivan, verbally approved the leave of absence, during which Sullivan would seek employment in Florida.

Gonter and the other staff member said that they never saw the letter until it was presented to them by the committee several weeks ago. They both acknowledged that they had met with Sullivan in September, 1972, but, they concurred, Sullivan claimed that he would submit his resignation the following week, and a leave of absence was never discussed.

According to Gonter, Sullivan never returned to file his resignation, and after he was gone from the job "an inordinate amount of time," the position was considered abandoned and a replacement was found.

The prescribed "inordinate amount of time", according to Gonter, is "about fourteen days."

"Sullivan did not ask for a leave of absence, nor did we ever indicate granting him a leave of absence," Gonter told the Collegian, adding that the charges made in the letter to him were based on incidents which Sullivan had "blown out of proportion" and were "not true."

Gonter said he was "surprised to see the letter" when it was presented to him in late September, 1973 by the investigating committee, and that he had never heard Sullivan's charges prior to reading the letter.

Sullivan said he requested the leave of absence becuase he was "under great pressure" for threatening to expose what he termed "a very serious criminal action."

"I feel that it is my ethical responsibility as well as my patriotic duty to call attention to this situation," he said in his letters to the three Senators.

"I only want to see justice served," Sullivan told the Collegian. "I'm not out to screw the University. I think UMass is a fine school. I'm not looking for sensationalism, either," he said, adding that he had rejected the opportunity to sell the story to "several major national magazines."

Sullivan claims he returned from Florida after nine days, and discovered he was removed from the payroll, "illegally and unethically," He said he is seeking to "recover damages from the University in the amount of $290,000."

Sullivan claims he will file his charges in Hampshire County Superior Court, but he has not yet done so. He has, however, filed a complaint with District Attorney John Callahan. Callahan told the Collegian he would have not comment until he has met with Sullivan.

DeShields said that the investigating committee "has received nothing in writing from Sullivan saying that the OE and the University were involved in any sort of conspiracy." Rather, Sullivan's charges as conveyed to the Senators are that Fortune and Wogrin were solely responsible for manipulating the computer programs.

DeShields noted that the University does not have jurisdiction to investigate what the OE might have done. That will have to be conducted at a Federal level, he said, in which case the Senate would have to request the computer tapes from OE.

"That sort of investigation would be of a technical nature," said DeShields. "One would have to reexamine the computer tapes to determine whether anything was illegally tampered with."

His committee's function, he explained, is to speak with the people involved and prepare a report for the Chancellor in which they will make recommendations "in terms of our perceptions of the situation."

Wogrin, Fortune Deny All Charges

By JERRY LAZAR

"Tom Sullivan has made some pretty wild charges. I've never heard them directly from him, but I categorically deny them."

That was Dr. Conrad A. Wogrin's reaction to charges made by Thomas F. Sullivan, former night shift operator at the University Computing Center, who accused Wogrin of conspiring "in the execution of a computer program which generated a fraudulent report for the U.S. Office of Education."

Wogrin is director of the Computing Center where computer tapes used in an evaluation report of the Title I program were run by Dr. James C. Fortune, principle investigator of the project.

"I never talked with Fortune about his program," said Wogrin. "It's not my function. I saw Fortune here and I knew he was using our computers. That was the extent of it."

Wogrin noted that the Center was run strictly as a service organization, and was not directly involved with projects or studies which used the Center to run computer tapes.

"Furthermore, Tom Sullivan was not in the position to know what was done with data, and there is no way that he would be able to determine if it was manipulated or not," he said.

"Sullivan wasn't fired," said Wogrin. "He disappeared from here in September (1972). We weren't able to contact him, so after a reasonable period of time, we considered the job abandoned."

Wogrin said he ran into Sullivan "in late spring", at which time Sullivan threatened to sue him, he said.

Sullivan claims he "constantly reminded" Wogrin "of the illegality of his actions." Wogrin told the Collegian that he never directly heard the charges from Sullivan.

Rober H. Gonter, associate director of the Center, told the Collegian that the idea of Wogrin's involvement in the alleged conspiracy is "kind of ridiculous. It couldn't be possible," he said.

"Dr. Wogrin would not have any contact with that data and neither would I," he said.

Did Sullivan simply misinterpret what was being done with the data?

That was the possibility suggested by Collegian interviews with Dr. Fortune and by Dr. Thomas E. Hutchinson, associate professor in the School of Education and co-investigator of the project.

"We did not change the weights," said Fortune, in reply to the accusations. "We changed the format which we used to read the weights," he said, explaining that this was done for the sake of accuracy, and was in no way an attempt to defraud. "There was no altering of the weights at all," he emphasized.

Sullivan claims that the tapes were "manipulated."

"Manipulation has a different connotation to a laymen than it does to a social scientist," said Fortune. "Analysis means manipulation of data. Sullivan says the data is 'questionable'. Well, any data used in social science studies is always questionable," he said.

Both Fortune and Hutchinson said that, to their knowledge, no other university was awarded the contract prior to UMass. Rather, separate segments of the project were awarded to other universities and private consulting firms. Fortune's role in the evaluation was strictly analyzing the data.

"We didn't gather the data," said Hutchinson, "and we didn't process the questionnaires."

According to Fortune, "we had to fuss around with the tapes in order to make them coincide with OE (Office of Education) specifications," adding that this was standard procedure in any computer program involving data analysis.

Fortune said that his report was accepted by OE with no changes, and at no time was rejected by OE as Sullivan claims. Alsc he said, the report was "descriptive, not judgemental", and was neither negative nor positive concerning Title I.

"Sullivan never approached me or tried to clear up his misunderstanding of what was going on," said Fortune.

According to Hutchinson, "we had a lot of trouble with the tapes. The first set was not correct, the format was wrong, it was unreadable, and it was very late in delivery," he said, blaming those problems on the people contracted to prepare the tapes prior to being used by UMass.

Hutchinson said that Sullivan never confronted him, and that he heard the charges through Fortune.

"I do not believe them to be valid," he said.

"Sullivan does not have sufficient expertise to know if something was tampered with. And if you're conspiring to do something like that, you didn't do it in front of other people. That would be rather dumb," said Hutchinson.

"I have certainly not done anthing like that, nor would I have reason to do so," he said.

Cox Firing Blocks ITT, Milk Case Data

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's firing of Archibald Cox blocked, at least temporarily, the search for White House records that could prove vital to non-Watergate investigations including the ITT and milk-price cases.

Dissolution of the special prosecutor's office also leaves an uncertain future for probes into a $100,000 contribution from billionaire Howard Hughes to Nixon's friend C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo, illegal corporate donations to the President's re-election campaign and alleged presidential involvement in the 1971 Ellsberg burglary.

Documents already disclosed by the Senate Watergate committee and other sources point to critical material apparently still locked in the basement of the Executive Office Building.

But the conditions Nixon set when he agreed to release some material from the Watergate tape recordings would cut off access to all White House Watergate and non-Watergate papers. The court order he has refused to comply with would have forced him to surrender documents as well as the more celebrated tapes.

Cox said one of his chief reasons for rejecting the deal was the ban on further document-hunting.

Some of the papers he is known or believed to have wanted are:

—ITT: In a memorandum from then-special presidential counsel Charles W. Colson to then-presidential chief of staff H. R. Haldeman on March 30, 1972, Colson listed a series of memos he said could be damaging if they were discovered.

Other memos cited by Colson refer to intervention in the case by high-level officials including former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally and former Commerce Secretary Peter G. Peterson.

The still-secret documents could decide the question of whether a conspiracy existed between ITT executives and government officials to settle the corporation's antitrust problems in exchange for a big campaign contribution.

—MILK FUND: The milk producers lobby sent Nixon a letter on Dec. 16, 1971, discussing the industry's problems with price controls and mentioning it was about to start contributing $2 million to the President's re-election campaign, according to investigative sources.

Three months later, on March 23, 1971, Nixon met personally at the White House with more than a dozen dairy industry lobbyists. Also present was the then-secretary of agriculture, Clifford Hardin.

Nixon, Richardson Meet

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon met for a half-hour Monday with Elliot L. Richardson, who resigned as attorney general in the Watergate tapes dispute, the White House said.

However, presidential spokesmen would not give any indication of what the meeting was about.

Deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said that Richardson talked by telephone Monday with Nixon's chief of staff, Alexander M. Haig Jr., and the idea of a meeting with the President stemmed from their conversation.

The meeting took place in Nixon's Oval Office at the White House early in the afternoon and word of it leaked out by evening.

Richardson has scheduled a press conference Tuesday morning and there was some speculation that he might have been offered another post in the administration. However, a Richardson confidant discounted this possibility.

Richardson was not immediately available for comment.

AFL-CIO Asks Nixon Resignation

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) Delegates to the AFL-CIO convention approved a resolution Monday urging President Nixon to resign and said Congress should impeach him if he does not leave office voluntarily.

Soon after the 2,000 delegates acted, Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, told the group that Nixon should quit to spare the nation a major consitutional crisis of impeachment which "seems imminent."

"Our President openly defies our courts and he has placed himself above the law," said Inouye, the first member of the Senate Watergate committee to call for Nixon's resignation.

The action came in the wake of the firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, the resignation of Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson and the discharge of Deputy Atty. Gen. William D. Ruckelshaus.

The delegates, some pounding tables with their fists, shouted their approval of the resolution presented by the 32-member executive council of the 13.4-million-member labor federation.

Not a single voice of dissent was heard in the huge meeting froom of the Americana Hotel as the vote was taken.

The AFL-CIO, which last year aided in Nixon's re-election by officially remaining neutral in the presidential campaign, was the first major organization with political clout to call for Nixon's ouster.

"Impeachment is not a prospect we contemplate with pleasure," said federation President George Meany in reading the resolution to the convention. But, he added, "We believe that the American people have had enough."

"Justice must be done, the risks of not doing it being more than a democracy can safely bear," the resolution said.

Reaction In Massachusetts...

200 Demonstrate In Boston

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Chanting "throw the bum out," a group of about 200 demonstrators paraded through downtown Boston Monday to urge the impeachment of President Nixon.

Leslie Cagan of the Women's Center School said the marchers were a coalition of groups who have banded together to form the Committee to Remove Our President (CROP).

"We've got to do something to get him out and to make sure this sort of thing doesn't happen in another 10 years," she said. "The only way we can get him out is by doing this sort of thing and getting some action in Congress. Our leaders never move in this country unless the people do something first."

A crowd of 150 persons looked on as the marchers moved past the Common. Shoppers on Washington Street waved and clapped.

"It's not just Watergate," Miss Cagan said, "It's Vietnam, Palestine, the economy, the repression.

"But this weekend was the final last straw. Over the last six months we've been getting more and more weary of the President. If he could do what he's done now, we're all very much afraid he can do anything he wants, and no single person should have that kind of power."

She said CROP hopes to organize a bigger rally next weekend, and is participating in a number of petition drives for impeachment.

Kerry:

BOSTON (AP) - The former leader of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War and unsuccessful candidate for congress in Massachusetts' fifth District Monday called for the impeachment of President Nixon.

John Kerry said he has been reticent in the past to talk of impeachment because of the seriousness of the matter and because of his opposition to the Nixon administration.

"I don't think this country has any choice but to proceed with impeachment and with great haste," Kerry said. "The President has challenged the concept and duty of every citizen to follow the law and have that law interpreted by the courts."

Peabody:

BOSTON (AP) - Former Massachusetts governor Endicott Peabody called Monday for the impeachment of President Nixon, saaing he "has defied the courts and violated the Constitution and his oath of office."

Peabody, who ran for the Democratic vice-presidential nomination in 1972, said Nixon's nominee, Gerald Ford, would not be confirmed for the time being.

He called the current events an illustration of his belief that presidential candidates should not nominate the vice-president.

Peabody urged a continuation of the Watergate investigation by a special counsel to the grand jury and suggested former special prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Room To Move

We're Here-Come See Us

Room-to-Move is a student run drug drop-in counseling Center that is in its fourth year of service. We're located in the Student Union, down the hall from the Hatch cafeteria and open most of the day from 10 a.m. to midnight and on Friday and Saturday nights there is 24 hour staffing on the center. There's also a telephone answering "on call" service when no one is in.

Staff members include both undergraduate and graduate students who've been trained to deal with all sorts of problems"drugs, alcohol, depression, personal and spiritual counseling. And if we don't have exactly what you need in terms of information or service, we're able to refer you to those who do. In addition to our "drop-in" staffing, we offer the following services: (1) Education: Under the leadership of E.T. Mellor, the education team presents educational workshops concerning drugs to dormitory students, counselors and heads of residence.

These workshops deal with specific drug problems, as well as with problems within the community and means of dealing with them. (2) Black Action: Under the leadership of Al Gordon, this team works with members of the Third World Community offering workshops and other outreach activities in the five college community. The Hard Drug team, a component of this team, offers a de-toxification program in cooperation with the University Health Services. This program is intended to provide non-narcotic assistance for withdrawal from heroin, barbituates and guaaludes. (3) Speakers Program: Last year Room-to-Move presented a symposium on Transpersoaal Growth and sponsored other well known speakers in the field of psychology and spiritualism. This year we will again sponsor speakers in the field of human consciousness. (4) Volunteer Training: Under the leadership of Rick Taupier, volunteer students are being trained to become future counselors at Room-to-Move. (5) Veteran's Program. Bill Staton, a new staff member and a disabled, Vietnam veteran himself, is available at some time every day for personal, academic, drug, and alcohol related counseling. (6) Various growth workshops in bioenergetics and body awareness with Gene Silver and in sensitivity training with Larry Ruhf are being organized or are underway. (7) Under the leadership of John Barbaro, the alcohol team is sponsoring rap sessions and various outreach activities related to alcohol use.

Our drug analyzation service has had to be discontinued because of external pressure from the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs. We will make all attempts possible to reinstate this service as soon as possible.

Room-to-Move has struggled to keep aware of the changing needs of the student body and to develop effective ways of meeting these needs. It has served as a vehicle for communication between the "folk medicine" of the street and professional medicine, and has been instrumental in developing new models of health care. The staff is aware of many of the social and spiritual issues underlying drug abuse and strives to provide services which will help people resolve some of these issues. Much of our effort is directed toward helping people find alternatives to drug use such as creativity, exercise, yoga, meditation. In a period of confusion and despair we try to help individuals find a source of positive growth within themselves and each other.

Stop in any time to meet us--that's what we're here for.

Pablo Casals Dies At 96

By JOSE F. SERRA
Associated Press Writer

SAN JUAN, P.R. (AP) - Pablo Casals, the world renowned cellist who used his musical genius as an instrument of protest against tyranny, died Monday at the age of 96. His 46-year-old wife Martita was at his bedside.

Casals entered Auxilio Mutuo Hospital three weeks ago after suffering a heart seizure. Doctors said he also suffered from chronic bronchitis, a kidney failure, high fever and circulatory ailments.

The world of music, which had acclaimed him the greatest cellist of his time, paid tribute to his memory.

Said Russia's Mstislav Rostropovich, considered the best cellist since Casals was in his prime:

"I have lost not only a great teacher but a true friend. I feel a great personal grief."

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said:

"Pablo Casals was one of the greatest musicians of all time and the greatest cellist. He was a strong example of humanity at its finest and most vital. His love of people was probably the reason for his rich and long life. His passing is a tremendous loss to the world of music and a great personal loss to my wife and myself."

Casals was born Dec. 29, 1876, in Vendrell, a town near Barcelona, Spain. He began playing a homemade cello at the age of 10, after becoming proficient on the piano, organ and violin.

He was playing before Spanish royalty by the time he reached the age of 15 and was an international concert artist, appearing as solo cellist for the Paris opera while still a teenager.

In the early 1930s he returned to Spain to conduct his own orchestra - a period which he called the happiest in his life.

But the Spanish civil war ended his idyll, and Casals, a fervent anti-Fascist, left his beloved native country and settled in France in opposition to the rightist government of Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

"At that time I vowed I would not play in those countries which recognized Franco Spain or in any other country where basic human freedoms are denied," Casals said later.

Until he entered the hospital, Casals played the cello daily. He explained his love for the instrument in this way:

"It is like a beautiful woman who has not grown older, but younger with time, more slender, more supple, more graceful."

East Coast Oil Terminals Planned To Handle Increases

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - At least six oil terminals along the East Coast and the Gulf of Mexico should be built to handle the huge imports of crude oil that will be needed by the United States, says a research firm.

One prime site is Machias, Maine, where environmentalists have opposed oil development because of the threat of pollution, the firm's report said.

The year and a half study was prepared by Arthur D. Little Inc. for the Council on Environmental Quality.

Oil imports in the East will increase from less than one million barrels a day now to nearly 12 million barrels by 1985-more than can be handled by one terminal, the report said.

The terminals would have terrific economic impact on the regions where they are built, the report said, so they should be established in areas that are now underdeveloped.

"A new terminal or port facility in the Mid-Atlantic, geared to a high level of oil imports would unquestionably accelerate the already rapid agglomeration taking place there," the report said. "On the other hand, a facility located for example, on the south Atlantic coast or in New England would tend to provide an alternative to industry and thereby begin to decongest the Mid-Atlantic while at the same time providing an economic impetus to the new port site, but at a lower level than that associated with the Mid-Atlantic." In Machias, the most rural site mentioned, "the economic and environmental impacts of an oil refinery appear significant but not overwhelming," it said.

By the year 2000, total income in the area would increase almost $60 million, or 50 per cent, it said. Employment would increase by 3,000 or 40 per cent. And the per capita income would rise $1,400 or 50 per cent.

The firm said the amount of developed land in the northeast coastal community would rise from 2 percent to 4 per cent. And the potential waste water discharge would increase 60 per cent.

The biggest hazard to the community would be the large influx of people necessary to build the industry, the study said.

She's "Man Of The Year"

DETROIT (AP) - Michigan food dealers have selected a woman as their "Man of the Year." She's 81-year-old Ann Koepplinger, who has headed a family bakery business since 1932. She oversees 165 employes in the $5 million a year operation.

The firm's 50,00 loaves of bread a day are prepared from machine-kneaded dough, but she recalls when "my husband used to knead it so."

The widowed Mrs. Koepplinger says she's not thinking of retirement.

"Who wants to just sit in the house all day?" she declared. "I enjoy my work, it's something we created."

Impeach Nixon

With full consideration given to the complexities and responsibilities of the Presidency, even in such a time of crisis as now exists, it is our feeling that the impeachment of Richard Nixon is imperative at this time.

Mr. Nixon has shown an adequate disregard for public opinion to warrant his removal from office. This fact, coupled with his insistence that he is justified in that disregard, and justified in ignoring the mood and wishes of Congress, and finally ignoring the guidelines under which he accepted the Presidency,(i.e. upholding the Constitution), adequately justifies the pain of impeachment.

We urge all who agree to contact their representative and voice that opinion.

A Personal Dilemma

I am a Jew. Though I've never been a very religious person, the fact remains that I am one. I've never been a zionist, nor gone to Israel. Never felt the desire to buy Israel bonds. Opposed the Vietnam war. Don't like any war. People get killed in wars. War never really made much sense to me.

When the United States was suffering from a severe case of ethnocentrism during the Vietnamese war, many people opposed this tragic aspect of our country's sense of National purpose. I was one of them.

Marching in countless demonstration, I was always treated to the sight of pictures of napalmed babies; slogans to make a senseless murder sound like tragic poetry. I was against the war, because murder never really made much sense. People get killed in wars.

Yet I am a Jew. I have a strong ethnic identification with the past. I feel the pain of the ancient pogroms in Russia; the rage of the passivity of my relatives who went passively to their deaths, and were butchered like lambs in Hungary during the Second World War. At this level of thought confusion falls in. When do individuals, groups, or nations have the right to resist, to fight a war? There are all sorts of semantical definitions; any one of which can be used to rationalize almost anything. Perhaps if you try to defend a war through logic, you will find yourselves more lost than before, because in the end maybe war is as emotional as anything else, and less predictable than painful.

Israel. It has always been a shaky concept in my consciousness. The concept behind its inception was always romantic-though the logic was faulty. Logically I could never quite rationalize that the Jews had a "inherent right" to be there. Logic however does not always put the mind at ease.

So now Israel is at war, and I must come to grips with the various thought processes and emotions that grip me inside. I've never liked war; yet I detested Jewish passivity during World War II. Don't believe that Israel is always right; but emotionally I would like to see her survive. If she is not right in this instance, perhaps it will be a moot question, because her survival as a nation would be greatly in doubt.

I will not rationalize my confusion on the issue. However someday I hope to resolve the questions that bring it about and have a better understanding about why Israel is such a complex symbol to me. First, it is obvious that Israel is not just a country. To some it is a hope; to others a monument. To every Jew it is something.

I will try to remember that things in the world are not always black or white, but various shades of gray, with many different heroes and villians on both sides. I will try to resist all types of fanatacism; remembering that Arabs are people too.

Ayn Rand Speaks

By DAVID EIBEL

On Sunday night in Boston, the foremost proponent of objective capitalism, Ayn Rand, spoke to an overflow crowd in Jordan Hall. For those who consider Miss Rand just another John Bircher, the speech proved that the irrational antics of that particular group do not hold water with her.

Miss Rand in her famous novels Atlas Shrugged and The Fountainhead has stressed the importance of a life of rational self-interest and the fact that the individual and not the so-called "mass" is the powerful mover in life and in history. The ideas of collectivism in her works are shown to be nothing more than the acceptance of the idea that a man or a group of men can rule others in a system that is nothing more and nothing less than barbaric slave.

Miss Rand's topic of "censorship" touched on the latest Supreme Court Decision relating to pornography by which each state or community rather than the national government, will define obscenity, according to local sexual standards. In the first place the fact that the state or community rather than the nation will define obscenity has no relative importance because how can anyone objectively describe the sexual standards of a certain area? To Ayn Rand, every human being, every free human being is a unique individual, a totally separate entity. Censorship, in Ayn Rand's mind, is an attempt to force the will of the majority over the minority, an excellent example of the collective conscience in operation.

On President Nixon, Miss Rand repeated what she had said and written over a year ago, that the man in the Oval Office is the most contemptible but not the most corrupt President who has ever led this country. If Nixon did not know that certain men in his administration were carrying on illegal activities, then he is simply "a colossal fool" to quote the foremost proponent of rational capitalism.

Miss Rand spoke her mind on the subject of abortion and drugs in our society. On the subject of abortion, Miss Rand claimed that it is the right of every woman to control her own body. She considers the rights of the "unborn" nonexistent because the "unborn" is simply not a living entity and therefore cannot enjoy the rights of human beings.

Drugs according to Rand should be legalized not because she agrees with their use but because every person should have the right to do anything to his body. Suicide should be a right, and so should the use of drugs. She also felt that the legalization of drugs would, in general, lower their prices, improve their quality, and undoubtedly reduce the influence of crime in the field of drug usage. The important point of her views on the above is that a person should have the right to do anything as long as it does not interfere with the rights of others. In other words, any form of infringement of the liberty of others is not in the rational self-interest of the individual. Thus if a person wishes to pollute his mind, it is definitely within his rights.

In all of her workds, both fiction and non-fiction, Ayn Rand has presented humanity not as it is but as it ought to be. She values the individual above all. The system she propunds so eloquently is logically and rationally the only system in which people can live happily and in unregulated freedom. As one of my friends put it so succinctly, to Ayn Rand and her followers "life is the ultimate value," a life of freedom for all, respecting the rights of all others. The leaders and people of today would be wise in quoting her thoughts instead of the collectivist thoughts of the Mao-Tse-Tungs, Fidel Castros, and Che Guevaras and their enslaving brethren. We must choose between freedom in a rational capitalist society or collectivist slavery. It is like picking life over death.

Letters To The Editor

Impeach Him

To The Editor:

Nixon must be impeached! I say this not because I believe he is a mad man who is out of touch with reality, but because I believe he is an evil man who is diabolically in touch with reality. Nixon never would have taken the steps he has, (the forced resignations of Richardson and Ruckelshaus, the firing of Archibald Cox, the secret bombings of Cambodia), if he believed Congress to have the moral fiber to stand up to him, or that public pressure might force Congress to stand up to him. This is where we must prove Nixon wrong. It is typocritical of us to simply call Nixon a tyrant when we ourselves are doing nothing towards his being removed from office. It is the duty of every American who feels the slightest bit of outrage over these past events to write to their Congressman to tell him their feelings. He is the only one that can do anything about it. The House of Representatives holds the sole power of impeachment. Letters to your Congressman do make a difference.

Act Today

To The Editor:

We are witness to the almost casual dismantling of the Constitutional organization of our government. The President is regularly and openly untrustworthy and arrogant. The Bill of Rights is lightly disregarded by the highest level of government.

The havoc that is the national administration is no longer governing but is now dictating. The political and economic life of the country is strained beyond reason and logic. The nature of the struggle is not national in stature but is petty and personal.

The weekend has been filled with opinion and dispute. Now the people must act. The system provides that action begin in the House of Representatives. For only $2, fifteen-word public opinion telegrams conveying a citizen's views may be sent to public representatives.

Act today to be counted and rally friends and relatives to express themselves as well. Act as though the future of the nation depended upon it...it does.

Richard M. Howland

The Worst Show

To The Editor:

I am taking a poll of the general student population. I would like any interested person to write (in 25 words or less) what he or she feels is the best situation comedy TV show that they have seen. I would also like the same thing for the WORST show you have seen. Please state why you feel this way. Please leave your responses in the box with my name on it in the Collegian Business Office. Thank You.

A Bit Too Far

Ms. Diodati:

In response to your letter of Oct. 18, I think you are missing the point of the "tasteless humor" you have been reading so carefully in the Collegian. Speaking for myself, I consider myself to be reflecting rather than shaping a situation.

You have your ideas on sex, as do other students. I believe in the power of the press, but to say that the Collegian is responsible for "cheapening male-female relationships" is carrying it a bit too far. What goes on between two people is their own business, but what goes on among the masses is and should be left open to commentary.

B.J. Roche

All Four Sides

To The Editor:

Could one ask, for the many users who have by now developed into ace sprinters, if it would be possible for the Student Senate transit buses to have route-cards on all FOUR sides?

I presume the SST personnel have not partaken in the excitement of seeing the bus approaching the stop, and themselves making the Olympic sprint, only to (1) see the bus pull away while the passengers in the rear end of the bus encourage the runner on with smiles and wordless signs, or (2) collapse on finding that the bus is headed anyplace but where you want to go? (But, please, let us not have a card that reads 'NA' on a 'BR' bus that turns up the hill to 'OH' or down to 'SW'!!) If it is too expensive or inconvenient, then please forget that I ever asked the question. And thank you.

N. Haridasan

Abnormally Sweet

To The Editor:

DISGUST, SHOCK, I DON'T BELIEVE IT!!! This was the feeling that many people felt, myself included, one night at the Blue Wall as Sweet Pie did his abnormal thing. I just don't believe such a creature exists. This thing (S.P.) has got to be the craziest thing to come along since Alice cooper who is the real sweetie pie of the two. As I wasted a total of about fifteen minutes listening to this freak I heard many complaints among fellow students and observed a look of shock on my friend's face like I have never seen before.

A public entertainer who opens up his act flashing moons can't be respected and definitely cannot be admired. The only nice thought in my mind as I watched Sweet Pie perform was that it was his last night at the Blue Wall and I doubt that anyone would like to see another one.

Impeachment March

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

President Richard M. Nixon cannot be impeached according to Melvin Laird. The people won't allow it to happen because the Chief Executive, after all, carried 49 states in a landslide victory only 11 months ago and surely his mandate from the American people was well earned and justly deserved for the Committee to Re-Elect the President put in some real l-o-n-g hours in order to guarantee such a footnote to any good dictionary's presidential listing. And you and I don't, our opinions don't, our trips don't, and our votes didn't count but you are the mandate, the majority, the student, the workers, the professor, the teacher, the administrator, the $1.40 an hour waitress, waiter, woman and man. We are the people, the power, and as such, the government, Richard M. Nixon was instituted by us, and that institution derives his just powers from the CONSENT of the governed and when we get usurped, ripped-off, we have the right and the obligation to at least remove him from rule. Mr. Laird, and others like him, strongly doubts that any congressional impeachment attempt would succeed and he appears to be only concerned with a speedy confirmation of Gerald Ford. In fact, Congress has failed to override many Nixon vetoes, much to Richard's delight and to our demise, but we should not allow Richard, Melvin & friends to have their way--no, not this time. The cost is too great. This time we need more than letters, phone calls, telegrams. We need one another to join in an effort for a common cause-- the immediate impeachment of President Nixon-- and we need to show our disapproval of Nixon tonight at 7:30 on the Amherst Common after an impeachment march winds its way through the UMass campus and continues on its peaceable, legal journey to the Common. The march will begin at 6:30 from the Student Union and will culminate in the community based rally and in the impeachment of Richard Nixon. It will be worth our effort. Bring your friends and coworkers and pass the word now! PEACE...

Reflecting Society

By DENNY MATTEAU

It has always been my idea that the media reflect the matrix.

Society consists of people, and their culture. They are everywhere, and they bring their culture with them. And they speak.

Speech is a medium of communication. It runs between mouths and ears. It contains and transports thought, impression, perception, or feeling. (The distinctions are arbitrary; we really don't know all the differences.)

The content originates in inner or outer space, and lodges in another inner or outer space. If it is spoken or written, (mediated) from an individual to an individual, then it is circulating among inner spaces, two minds. If it is undirected, if it is spoken or written at large, then it is in outer space, the environment, the matrix.

The medium cannot change the content. It can sharpen or dull the impact of the content, but it cannot change it.

Print is a medium that runs from hands to eyes. Its content is the same as that of speech, but its impact is different. This is what Steve Tripoli was talking about in Friday's editorial: impact.

"Impact" is important, and involves broader considerations than a few words. A publication can change its impact-sharpen it, hopefully-but the content of the publication must reflect the society in which it circulates.

The Collegian reflects the society of a large university. Lately, a generally frustrating, totally mismanaged university.

The paper reflects its originators, who are all student journalists with at most a few years' experience, in its tendency to be inaccurate, due to rank amateurism. Its origin is also reflected in its tendency to ignore convention, due to the unfortunate idea that "learning" is a dynamic, experimental process.

The youth, the still-fresh outlook, of the student body is reflected in the mixed bag of writers on the Collegian staff, from Bob Estelle on the far right to Pedro Hernandez on the far left. These people haven't been rubbed down to inoffensive mediocrity yet. Many professional newspapers think they solve the problem of "balance" by running the middle line, so they sag in the middle. The Collegian doesn't stick to the middle line, and so naturally offends more people than a professional paper would.

The public, the students, faculty bureaucrats, and workers at large, are reflected in the editorial pages, in letters which range from thoughtful comments about the Mideast to obscene, often semicoherent insults directed at some arbitrarily defined segment of humanity.

The Collegian reflects UMass society in its subject matter: Food we can't eat and can hardly pay for, artificial 'communities' which promote alienation, open windows in every classroom on campus while the students swelter and people in Boston pray for a mild winter, courses we can't avoid and courses we can't get. Damned if we have a care, damned if we look for a bus, damned if we hitch.

As long as the people of this community are frustrated, shrill, and powerless, this newspaper will appear frustrated, shrill, and powerless.

Denny Matteau is a Collegian commentator.

Legacy Of Dynamite

By KEVIN MACK

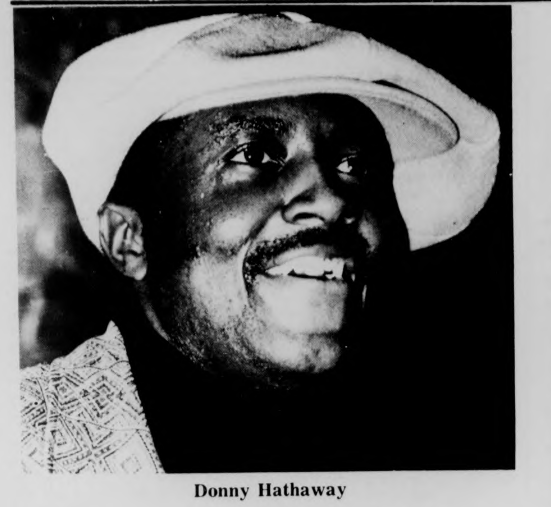
Alfred Nobel, the man who invented dynamite, in his last will bequeathed his entire fortune to the establishment of a fund which was to be used to annually honor the man who has done the most for world peace. Ironically, it was the invention of dynamite which led to the Nobel Peace Prize.

Earlier this week, the irony of Nobel's original bequeathal was matched with the announcement by Norway's Nobel Committee of the decision to award this year's prize to America's Secretary of State, Herr Kissinger, to be shared with North VIetnam's Le Duc Tho.

Kissinger has gained more from the Vietnam War than perhaps anyone else. It is true that he negotiated an end to the fighting, but that was only because the United States was ready to give up anyway. No one doubts Herr Kissinger's skill as a diplomat and I am sure that he would deserve a Nobel prize for diplomacy if there was one. But giving him a prize for peace only demeans the integrity of those men who have deservedly won the prize in the past. Kissinger's recent appointment as Secretary of State is award enough for his skill in diplomacy.

Sometimes this seems a mixed-up world, but the law a Karma always prevails and the irony of a legacy of dynamite establishing a prize for peace has finally been matched by the awarding of this prize for peace to a man whose career has benefitted so much from war.

Kevin Mack is a Collegian commentator.



Donny Hathaway

Donny And Chick Will Play The Cage

Next Sunday night at 8, Donny Hathaway and Chick Corea will be appearing in concert at the Curry Hicks Cage, presented by the UMass Concert Committee. The concert should prove to be a worthwhile endeavor for UMass students as both Hathaway and Corea are musicians who will compliment each other well in the one night performance.

Hathaway, is a composer, a lyricist, a singer, a pianist, an arranger and a producer. His music reflects different styles and dimensions, and stretches from classical to gospel. It encompasses jazz, rhythm and blues, blues, rock, and classical as well.

He has produced, arranged and conducted for such artists as Lena Horne, Roberta Flack, Curtis Mayfield, Jerry Butler, the Staple Singers, Carla Thomas, Woody Herman and many others. Also to his credit is the scoring, composing and conducting of the music for the "Come Back Charleston Blue" motion picture soundtrack and the singing of the theme song for the CBS-TV weekly comedy hit, "Maude".

Chick Corea is one of the best of the modern pianists. Corea now has a talented group of sidemen to compliment his skills on the piano. Lenny White is on drums, Bill Connors, on guitar, and Stan Clarke on bass. Chick Corea nad his sidemen make up the group known as "Return to Forever".

MOUNTAIN FARMS MALL - Hadley

As a crane lowers it, UMass artist Dale Schleappi guides a five-ton unit into his highway sculpture piece at the southbound lane rest stop on Interstate Route 91 in Holyoke. The work is one of three highway sculptures done for Route 91 (the other two are in Bernardston) through MAS '73, a project supported by business and industrial companies and the Massachusetts Council for the Arts and Humanities.

Getting Off?

Applications for off-campus housing exemptions from Southwest are now available in George Washington Lobby (room 1). These applications should be completed and returned with the required attachments by November 2.

Applications will be considered for such reasons as: financial need, health, academic programs requiring off-campus living, marriage during the semester, environmental problems, religious reasons, commuting from home, etc.

If you will be over 21 years of age or a senior before the first day of second semester, you may simply go to the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore, and register your intent to move off campus.

Don't Eat The Pottery!

In the spring of this year, a free lead testing service was offered at the university. Pottery items used for cooking or storing food were analyzed for their lead content and possible hazard to the user. Almost one hundred items were tested over a two month period. Some showed high amounts of lead (the acceptable safe level is under seven parts per million), one was up as high as five hundred ppm. Almost all those containing lead were manufactured outside the USA, and of these most were purchased abroad as souvenirs or gifts. It was also found that a few homemade pottery items were above the federal standards for lead. The least to worry about were the U.S. factorymade pieces. Of these only a very small percentage were found to give off any lead at all.

This fall the free testing service is being offered again for a brief period of time. The service will run from the present time to the 25th of November. It is made available to the Amherst community and the Five College area. Samples may be left at the Health Dept. in the Amherst Town Hall, the Craft Center located in the UMass Student Union Bldg. or at Rm. N233 of the Public Health wing Morrill Science Bldg., also located on the UMass campus. Samples will be picked up three times a week and will take about 3-7 days to do.

The lead test will in no way damage or deface any pottery. All that is asked is for each piece to be wrapped so that no damage will occur in handling.

Bridge Anyone?

Yes, friends, there is exciting news for those two UMass bridge players who aren't aware of the Bridge Club. Starting tonight, we are switching to Tuesday night for the duplicate play. It's all happening at 7 p.m. in the old R.S.O. area in the basement of the Campus Center.

Get down and play at our rated game tonight and find out about the November tournament at UPenn.

Your Head

Red And Choked Up?

By DR.'S ANDREW W. McCASHIN AND STEPHEN M. KLEIN

Q. I'm embarrassed to write this, but I become a nervous wreck in groups. It's particularly bad when I have to participate in class. My heart pounds, I'm sure my face gets red and I get choked up. I've gotten so worried about it that I've had a hard time going to class. I even shy away from groups of people in the dormitory. Other people don't seem to have this problem. It wasn't always like this. Do I have a group phobia? What would you advise me to do?

A. Anxiety in groups is one of many commonplace fears. It is difficult to assess from your description the extent of your difficulty. Phobic behavior in essence is when normal fear and anxiety become exaggerated to the point where activities are restricted or situations avoided. Fear of groups is just one of many phobic reactions where personal freedom of expression and action are relinquished in order to avoid conflict and anxiety. In some instances the worry and embarassment accompanying the phobic behavior can be worse than the symptoms themselves. A phobia can develop as a direct expression of past traumatic experience with the feared situation. For example, a person who has had an automobile accident may be quite fearful of driving again. More often a phobia represents a psychological effort to displace inner conflict onto a situation in the outside world. A conflict between a forbidden wish or impulse and the unconscious fear that prevents the direct expression of that wish or impulse becomes represented symbolically in the feared situation. The anxiety associated with the inner conflict is decreased if the feared situation is avoided. The particular form this relationship takes and the way it comes about is often complex. Fears in groups could symbolize conflicts over competitive wishes, exhibitionistic impulses, sexual arousal (particularly in social groups) or resentment towards authority (classroom situation). Fear of criticism, humiliation, guilt and-or retaliation could lead to a repression of these impulses.

Of course these conflicts are inherent in human nature and groups are capable of eliciting them. Certain family dynamics, however, predispose some individuals to react phobically. Childhood fears are universal. Where parents have little tolerance for them they may react with overprotection or angry outbursts. Through this the child learns to overemphasize the experience of anxiety. In addition parents may engender the belief that the outside world is a dangerous place, fraught with peril. The incidence of phobic reactions among students reflects the fact that for many coming to school is the first significant venturing into the outside world. As confidence grows fears are overcome. If you would like to clarify your specific situation further, an M.H. consultation might be helpful.

Send, bring, or phone in your comments and questions to 303 Machmer Hall, 545-2337. All inquiries are strictly confidential.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The determination of Taurus is remarkable. These persons will stick, will overcome odds, will come back, will get up from the floor and persist until opposition is finally overcome. A setback for Taurus can be a blessing in disguise. Having to plow back is a tonic for these natives. It is not that Taurus enjoys adversity. Quite the contrary. Taurus loves luxury and easily becomes accustomed to expensive habits.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look to future rather than attempting to hang on to past. Libra person could play key role. Finish rather than begin -- improve relations with co-workers, those who serve you. Aggressive individual is vying for attention. Know it and react accordingly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What seems a dead end may be only a temporary stop along the way. Leo, Aquarius persons could be involved. Accent is on basic tasks, new ways of gaining momentum. Those who aided in past may now need help themselves.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Give logic equal time with impulse. You may see clearly in some areas but could be victim of wishful thinking on financial level. Don't give up something of value for a mere whim. Heed words of one who taught you in past.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Highlight versatility. Refuse to be pushed, cornered, restricted. Age does not necessarily equate with wisdom. Know it and speak your own mind. Message will become increasingly clear. Property value is subject to argument.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obtain valid hint from Cancer message. Check details, apparent minor points. Relatives are entitled to their views--but you have life of your own to live. Aquarius, Scorpio persons could play important roles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be analytical. Friend who is gloomy may be trying to tell you something. Whatever you do, avoid mixing money and friendship--or you might lose both. Gemini is likely to be in picture. Protect valuables.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Change is beneficial. Give and you also will receive. This applies especially now to relations with family. Cycle is such that you have no need for ego nourishment. You know. You feel fulfilled. You are assured. Make concession and you will gain plenty.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Much that occurs has aura of mystery, romanticism. Key now is to be subtle. Avoid being aggressive in manner which creates tension. Work behind the scenes. Express understanding for one close to you who complains of pain, emotional stress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have more strength on you side than might be apparent. There is no need for you to be cowed, frightened, shoved or chided. One who pulls financial strings will not forget. You are going to be vindicated in poetic fashion.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What you thought suited you may suddenly become outmoded. Now be careful and mature. Applies to personal and professional areas. You need not become a prisoner of your own emotions. You can and should be free. Allow yourself a choice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Learning process may seem labored. You are not satisfied with old ways. You want to break through--you can but there won't be thunder and lightning. Process is apt to be slow and steady. Leo could play significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Feelings run deep. Nothing now is apt to occur halfway--it is all or nothing. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons figure in prominent ways. Heed inner voice. Don't attempt to force issues or go against your own feelings.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are analytical, a natural writer, an individual who can get to root of problems. You are better at helping others than when it comes to understanding yourself. In November, you are due for a new start, vital experiences. Gemini, Virgo persons are drawn to your sphere. You have way of retaining youthful spirit. You are attractive and stubborn.

VITA

If Only Spiro Had Known...

It's well known that our former vice-president got nailed because, among other things, he didn't prepare his federal income tax forms properly. But if he only knew that the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program (VITA) was around, he might not have been hit for tax evasion.

For you see, VITA is a program that trains students to prepare federal and state income tax forms at absolutely no cost to those who would normally not be able to afford this service. While UMass VITA people assisted nearly 2,700 people last year and saved participating Western Mass community members approximately $30,000 Spiro's recognition of this program could have meant savings in excess of $17,000 to him.

In all truthfulness, Spiro would definitely not have qualified for VITA but there are many more people who do. As a matter of fact, there are more people who need our service than we can currently accommodate. During our first meeting on October 16 we recruited about 110 students for VITA. We need 90 more people to satisfy our commitments and reach our goals.

Its important for you to know that your services will not go unrewarded, for if you do decide to participate, you can earn up to 3 academic credits. Anyone can apply but you must get in touch with Rich Sockel at the Outreach office. Call 545-2021 or go to 509 Goodell Building. Thanks.

Join The Life Line

Blood donor days are here again! The Red Cross Bloodmobile will visit the University, October 29, 30, 31 and November 1st in the Campus Center Auditorium.

All in good health, 18 and over, weighing more than 110 pounds are eligible to give. Now is your chance to do something on a personal basis by donating a pint of your blood for someone less fortunate than yourself.

The demand for blood increases, yet it is estimated that annual blood requirements of the nation are provided by less than 3 per cent of those qualified to give. The pint given is replaced within 48 hours, and you may give as often as five times a year, not more frequently than every two months.

Blood is a living tissue, therefore it is important to utilize this product either as a whole blood transfusion or as a component; component therapy makes it possible to service at least four patients from one pint of whole blood, such as hemophilia, shock, hepatitis and a plasma derivative used to control bleeding caused by a fibrinogen deficiency in childbirth.

If possible walk-in donors are accepted, but it is better to make an appointment to avoid waiting and inconvenience and be sure of acceptance. Appointments can be made Oct. 23, 24, 25, 26 10-4 Campus Center Concourse.

Monday, October 29th, the hours for joining the life line will be from 10 a.m. until 3:45; Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 9:30 until 3:15. To assure that blood will be there when needed give now and encourage others to become voluntary blood donors. Credits, or full blood coverage, may be transferred for a patient in the United States and Canada through the Red Cross and the National Clearing House of The American Association of Blood Banks.

Indian Militants Suspected In Shooting

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (AP) - A Bureau of Indian Affairs official said he suspected that militants from the American Indian Movement were responsible for Sunday night's shooting of two BIA officers on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. An AIM leader, Pedro Bissonette, was shot and killed on the reservation last Wednesday by bureau police attempting to apprehend him on fugitive warrants.

--When was the Attorney General first ordered to fire Mr. Cox?

--When did the Attorney General first propose his compromise to Mr. Cox on the Watergate case? Was it before or after he had first been ordered to fire Mr. Cox?

--When was the Senate Watergate Committee first brought into the negotiations on the tapes compromise?

--Why was it necessary to order Mr. Cox to halt further court proceedings after he had rejected the compromise?

While many congressional members expressed outrage for Cox's unprecedented dismissal, local citizens added to the tense atmosphere on Veteran's Day by mobilizing for immediate impeachment proceedings against the President. It was expected that several such resolutions would be initiated in the House today.

Over three hundred people -- predominately college students-- rallied outside the White House shortly after 12:30 and marched to the steps of the Capitol where Californian Congressman Donald M. Fraser (D) delivered one of the first formal impeachment speeches.

A spokesman for the Committee said that its members will proceed in the next few days to gain nationwide support through a grassroots efforts. Plans are already underway for "a march on Washington" Saturday.

It is hoped that by using protest techniques similar to those employed during the Vietnam War demonstrations, "Congressmen will take their repossible actions and the American people will not climb down into a state of apathy," the spokesman said.

During his address, Congressman Fraser urged the crowd to "press the Congress into action".

"You, as American citizens are responsible to create the climate of educative concern which would bring about a courageous and moral act by the Congress of the United States," he said.

"The most recent development hasn't left us with any other choice; and what I suppose it comes down to is the mood of Congress. You, by expressing concern to your Congressman, can help bring about that move."

Fraser called the dismissal of Cox and "the forced resignations of Richardson and Ruckelshaus a "direct challenge to Congress".

"Congress is the only institution that we have left which can respond to the crisis this country is now facing. If Congress doesn't respond now, I'm afraid the enraged American public will begin to stop caring," he said.

The resolution submitted by Fraser this week called for protection of records presently in the Prosecutor's office "which would otherwise be lost, shredded, or mysteriously destroyed".

Fraser advocated that the life of the present Watergate Grand Jury -- scheduled to terminate December 5th -- be extended and that a special prosecutor with the same authority Cox had prior to his dismissal be appointed "to investigate criminal conduct which is suspect to be of origin in the White House".

In filing a motion of impeachemnt, Fraser warned that "it must be handled in a careful and judicious manner because of the gravity of the situation."

After the rally a small group of impeachment advocates marched back to the White House, stopping momentarily at the Justice Department for silent prayer.

World Series Aftermath

Champion A's Begin Search For Manager

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

OAKLAND (AP) - Now that they've won their second straight world championship, all the Oakland A's have to do is find a manager for baseball's most turbulent team.

Owner Charles O. Finley's angry A's won the World Series and lost their manager in rapid succession, finishing off the New York Mets in the seventh game Sunday, then savoring the victory for a short time before Manager Dick Williams formally announced his resignation.

Williams left for "family and personal reasons," and claimed his departure had nothing to do with Finley, who seems to live in the eye of a baseball hurricane.

While Finley shops for a successor to his popular manager, who is rumored on his way to New York as pilot of the Yankees, baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn is investigating the Oakland owner's shenanigans which often overshadowed the 70th World Series.

Reggie Jackson, hero of the Series, who keyed Oakland's comeback in the sixth and seventh games, winced when a newsman tried to slip some of the credit for the title to Finley.

"Please," Jackson said over and over, "please don't give any credit to that man. It was the easiest thing in the world for this team to lay down because of that man. Our fans helped us. They knew we were bitter and they knew why."

The reason for the A's bitterness and Kuhn's investigation was one and the same. It concerned the curious case of substitute infielder Mike Andrews, who made two costly errors in the second game of the series. Afterwards, Finley tried to exile the player to the disabled list because of a chronically bad shoulder. The move was blocked by Kuhn.

The players rallied to Andrews' defense, and in the midst of the turmoil, Williams told the team he would resign at the end of the series, "win or lose." He kept that pledge.

"The Andrews thing...Dick Williams quitting...who was responsible for all those things?" asked Jackson. "You know who - Finley."

With the clubhouse turmoil swirling madly around them, the A's fell behind in the series, three games to two and the Cinderella Mets needed only one more victory to finish them off.

The main reason was Jackson, whose bat came alive in the final two games. He drove in two runs and scored the third, drilling two doubles and a single in Oakland's 3-1 victory in Game Six. And he hit one, helping the A's to their 5-2 victory in the seventh game.

The homers by Campaneris and Jackson came in the third inning and seemed to cut the heart out of the Mets in the final game.

GOLDEN VALLEY, Minn., TO SUPERSTARDOM--Rod Carew, three-time batting champion of the Minnesota Twins, has plenty of trophies on display at his home but the Panama native is still on his climb to become a $100,000 baseball superstar. Carew led the majors this year with a .350 average, highest in the American League since Norm Cash's .361 in 1961.

MacPhail To Succeed Cronin

By JOE MOOSHIL
Associated Press Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - Lee MacPhail, general manager of the New York Yankees, is expected to succeed Joe Cronin as president of the American League Tuesday as a meeting of league owners.

Cronin, 67, was named fourth president of the league in 1959. He still has two years to go on his present term as president but will fulfill the commitment as chairman of the board of the AL.

MacPhail will gradually assume Cronin's duties over the two-year period.

Two years ago at a meeting in Phoenix, American League owners voted a resolution ordering Cronin to hire an administrative assistant who would be capable of replacing Cronin. Cronin made no such move.

Cronin was asked if he would step down at the league meeting, and he replied "I don't know if it's up or down.

"We haven't come to any conclusion," said Cronin.

"When they extended my contract through 1975, it was with the understanding that I would give up the job when they found a qualified successor. Nobody's been selected yet."

MacPhail, a former general manager of the Baltimore Orioles and son of legendary Larry MacPhail who formerly owned the Brooklyn Dodgers and the New York Yankees, said the rumor that he would replace Cronin "has been going around for a long time.

"If and when the job is open and if it were to be offered to me, I would certainly have to consider it."

MacPhail added he would never leave his present job to go to another club although the restructuring of the Yankee front office might not be exactly to his liking.

When CBS owned the Yankees, MacPhail had a free rein in the operation under Mike Burke. But a group headed by George Steinbrenner purchased the club. Gabe Paul was brought in as president, changing MacPhail's status within the organization.

Cronin has had one of the most fascinating careers in baseball. He began his career with Pittsburgh, went to the minors and came up with Washington in 1929. The following year he was voted the American League's most valuable player.

50,000 Oakland Fans Cheer World Champions

By BERNARD HURWITZ
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND (AP) - It rained in buckets on the Oakland A's parade Monday, but not enough to dampen the spirits of more than 50,000 diehard but soggy fans who turned out to see their heroes honored for the second straight year as baseball's world champions.

"Who's Amazing Now? Our A's!" read a giant banner in the team colors of green and yellow that stretched across the entrance to city hall. The sign referred to the New York Mets-dubbed "amazing" by their fans-whom the A's dispatched 5-2 Sunday to clinch the 1973 World Series in the best of seven games.

At least 20,000 jammed the immediate bandstand area in front of city hall watching team members receive silver trays from the City of Oakland.

During the presentations, owner Charlie Finley told fans he had three things to say: "The team is not leaving Oakland; the team is not for sale; the greatest friend I've ever had and one of the greatest managers in baseball is Dick Williams." Williams announced earlier he is quitting the team.

Only 400 persons had gathered under chilly, gray skies at Lakeside Park to watch the parade launched with 85 units, including mounted patrols, and drill teams. A's players, Williams and Finley rode in antique cars.

Along the route, more fans clustered, and many who preferred the shelter of their windows tossed loads of paper that whipped around in the brisk winds. Fans also watched from rooftops.

The reviewing stand groaned with 500 boisterous spectators, including many youngsters who had the Veterans' Day holiday off from school.

On the bandstand, bareheaded Williams declined to comment on his plans, saying "I'm going to move out of the apartment and get some rest. He apparently meant he was going back to his Florida home.

Mike Andrews, whom Finley tried to fire and who was ordered reinstated by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, drew a resounding roar when he walked onto the stand like the rest of the A's. He smiled briefly and waved at Finley as he passed by within inches. Finley's reaction was not observed.

Police estimated the crowd at upwards of 50,000 as the parade neared the reviewing stand-far smaller than the 150,000 that gathered last year under sunny skies.

Ailing Butkus May Retire

CHICAGO (AP) - Veteran linebacker Dick Butkus of the Chicago bears indicated Monday he may call it quits to his stellar National Football League career at the end of this season.

"I can't perform like I used to," the 30-year-old Butkus said Monday.

The Bears Sunday suffered their third straight defeat and were left with a 1-5 record in a 13-10 loss to the New England Patriots.

Butkus, in his ninth Bear season, said "I go into a game cold now. I don't practice during the week because of my knee problem. I learn about the game plan at squad meetings."

Butkus said he still thinks he can help the Bears, but added "I got some doubt about whether I should be playing." Butkus has an arthritic knee and his retirement was rumored earlier this season.

As for the Bears' collapse, Butkus said "I just don't know what happened. You can't put the finger on anybody. We lose two tough games to Dallas and Minnesota and beat Denver, and then the roof caves in on us."

Butkus said he would "have something to say at the end of the year" about his future pro career.

He said he wasn't interested in becoming a member of the Bear coaching staff. "It would be better to start as a coach some place new," Butkus said.

"D" Turns The Trick

Stout defense was the deciding factor as the UMass booters shutout Rhode Island on Saturday. Gary McKenna (#19) and Dan Ouellette (eluding an uppercut from an overanxious Ram) were superb in the 2-0 whitewashing.

Mass Impresses At The Charles

By MARK DLUGOSZ

The quality of the UMass crew, rather than the quantity showed up in the Head-of-the-Charles Regatta as UMass had its best showing ever in this meet. Harvard, who entered several boats in all events, ended up taking the first spot in total points.

According to the regatta program, the meet is patterned after the many English "Head of the river" races. These make use of a torturous course which puts the coxswain's steering to the test, and allows greater distances to challenge the oarsmen's endurance.

The pair boat rowed by Coach Vespoli (a former Olympian) finished third. The pair of Flanders and Gowan finished 14th due to difficulty with slower boats. To clarify this, the way the race is run must be known. In a meet such as this, the boats are not started head to head but allowed to set off every few seconds, and the best times win. This means a later starting boat could have difficulty with slower boats.

One of the intermediate 8 boats did outstanding and finished fourth. It was just five seconds off the lead time. The other 8 had difficulty with slower boats and finished twentieth. There were not extreme time differences in the times of boats in most of the races.

The elite 4 boat finished tenth in extremely tough competition. Many good boat clubs, along with colleges, were entered in the race.

In the intermediate singles freshmen coach "Chic" Leonard finished seventh, and woman's coach Bob Spousta finished fifteenth.

The woman's boat did very well in tough competition. Their 8 boat finished sixth.

Coach Vespoli was pleased overall with the team at the regatta. The crew had not trained with great intensity for the meet, yet still did fairly well. Some of the individual oarsmen said they hoped their boats would have done even better, yet all agreed it had been an enjoyable day of rowing. The meet helped give Coach Vespoli a better idea of the personnel he has with which to defend the Dad Vail crown in the spring. Only two teams have won the Dad Vail back to back in the last fifteen years.

Re: Peil Pennington

By DAVID EIBEL

I felt a tremendous surge of excitement as I woke up after six hours of sleep Saturday morning. My Minutemen were coming home after travelling around the near east for three weeks. Perhaps it's because I finally am beginning to feel part of this university emotionally rather than technically. We're all a computer number but not all of us feel part of this university socially or psychologically.

To be quite honest, my newfound zeal dipped to a precipitous level of near zero, when the first drop of rain clipped my sleepy brow. Thankfully, not enough rain fell to turn me back home, in fact divine intervention interceded on behalf of all of us to stop the minor tempest and put us in a better frame of mind to face the deluge that would come later. People have recently been up in arms over football's allegedly dying offenses and dwindling point totals, no one has to point out that Saturday's UMass debacle went aginst that rule-of-thumb and against the prophesies of one Marty Kelley. There's never a sure thing in sports. How can anybody be 100 percent optimistic about anything when "anything" is a college football game?

There are too many variables, maybe even too many for an IBM 400 series. It can rain suddenly, thus affecting a team's game plan if it's a dry weather team. In fact there are at least twenty-two variables in action at one time: the players on the field. If one of those twenty-two suddenly goes flat and makes an error, or if one of those two dozen minus two do something spectacular on just one play, the end result will change accordingly. One can go so far as to say that the odds against the game going according to plan are, theoretically, the number of players on any one play multiplied by the total number of plays run during the match. Giving each team sixty plays a game, the odds are 22-1 or 1320-1 -per play and game, respectively--that everything will go according to plan. A team can always reduce that figure but there's always going to be some hidden factor that can rear its ugly head and upset a team. Needless to say, both clubs didn't beat the odds on Saturday.

A while back, Steve Crowe took me to task for saying mean things about our surefire first round draft choice, Peil Pennington. To tell you the truth, I was whispering sweet nothings about him after the Harvard debacle, but this northern hillbilly has now seen the light. Forget that Peil threw an exorbitant number of interceptions on Saturday afternoon, forget the fumble; remember number eleven led a seemingly beaten team from the depths to heights in what was an awe-inspiring performance. We had the thrill of victory crudely wrested out of our grasp but I hope that people realize that without Pennington we would never have come close. Peil Pennington will be a great pro quarterback: not only does he have the physical tools, he's got the fire and competitiveness that make the average athlete that much better, and the one who is physically great, unbeatable. It is true on the football field, and the gridiron of all Mankind.

Water Polo Team Breaks Winless Drought

With a small traveling squad and two games in four hours the UMass water polo club dumped both UNH 14-12 and Exeter Academy 23-20. Henry MacLean was outstanding offensively for the UMass squad, scoring 15 goals against Exeter and 10 goals against UNH. Goalie Tom Rhodes, playing an excellent game, was credited with at least twenty saves during the day. At Exeter, following a grueling game with UNH, high-scorer Henry MacLean fouled out, and Joe Niemczura went out in the final quarter with a bloodied nose, and Kathy MacDonald, who accompanied the team north, played a fine quarter for the men's team, helping prevent a final quarter surge by Exeter to bring home the two wins.

Angels-Brewers Swap Ten

ANAHEIM (AP) - The California Angels announced Monday that pitcher Clyde Wright has been traded to the Milwaukee Brewers in a 10-player deal that brings Brewers catcher Ellie Rodriquez to the Angels.

Other Angels going to Milwaukee are veteran relief pitcher Steve Barber, outfielder Ken Berry, catcher Art Kusnyer and a player to be announced later.

The Brewers reciprocated with pitchers Skip Lockwood and Gary Ryerson plus outfielders Ollie Brown and Joe Lahoud.

Harriers Trounce Spiritless UNH

By SCOTT HAYES

President Nixon fired Archibald Cox over the weekend, the Arabs and the Israelis continued to fight, the Oakland A's won the World Series, and the UMass Cross Country team won another meet. So what else is new?

At the apple orchard on Saturday it was the same old story. UMass overpowered (pick one: a. URI b. UNH c. BC) ..... in another spiritless meet, 17-47. The thinclads ran circles around their opponents, and did so without the help of co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, who were being rested for the Yankee Conference meet.

The outcome of the meet was apparent from the start. The UMass runners held the top six positions throughout the race, and only a last minute effort by freshman George Reed broke up the UMass pack.

Individual honors were shared by Tom Maguire and Paul Segersten who ran the shortened course in 23:25. The course had to be changed because there were horses in the apple orchard and fences were blocking the normal route.

Freshman John McGrail's "all out" effort paid off as he made the top seven of the team and will be running in Saturday's YanCon championships.

Reed was the first UNH runner to finish, completing the course in 23:54. Paul Doiron was right behind Reed, and took fifth in 23:56. Phil Broughton was the fifth UMass runner to finish, clocked in 23:58. Tom Wilson and Chris Chambers finished seventh and eighth respectively.

The harriers will travel to Springfield today, to face a good team that sports a 7-1 record. Charlie Dugan, who placed second in the New Englands last year, leads the Springfield squad. Arthur McCloud, Peter McGinty, Bruce Peltz and George Arthur round out the top five for Springfield.

UMass will be running without the services of their top seven runners, who will be preparing for Saturday's title meet in New Hampshire. Coach O'Brien stated that "it's going to be tough for us to catch Springfield on their home course." The team will have to show depth if they are to beat Springfield, and they have the personnel to do the job.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER --- UNH top runner Bruce Butterworth sat out Satuday's meet with a strained hamstring muscle. Butterworth suffered the injury in a meet last Wednesday against MIT and Coach John Copeland kept him out of the race, hoping to save him for Saturday's championship meet.

Sexism In The Pool

To the Editor:

This past Thursday evening while watching the men's and women's water polo matches against Boston College, I could not help but notice the ill and unfavorable treatment afforded the women's team by the game officials (i.e., the UMass and B.C. coaches.)

The women's game was scheduled to begin at 6:30 after the completion of the men's game. However, due to apparently unforeseen circumstances the men's game ran well into the women's time block finishing finally at 7:15. The women's game began at 7:20 and at 7:30, after just 10 minutes play, the officials announced that the water polo club's time in the pool had expired, but that the instructor of the class that was to follow would allow the team 5 more minutes of playing time.

The result: the men's team played their entire game with some delays; the women's team had 15 minutes, less than one-half of a game, in the pool because of the men's delays.

The decision to allow the men's team to use 45 minutes of the women's team's time was not only sexist, but it was inconsiderate and insulting to the women players, especially those from B.C. who had travelled two hours to be thus disappointed. In the future let us hope that the coaches and officials will not assume that the women players have no qualms about sacrificing their playing time for the good of the men's team.

"A Lot Of Character"

By BILL BALLOU

Dick MacPherson sat in his office, rhythmically slapping his shoulder. He'd just seen his team come back from a 34-14 third quarter deficit to go ahead 35-34, only to lose on a 31 yard run with 59 seconds left in the game.

He slapped himself harder as each reporters' question made him think back to the crazy, unbelievable, remarkable, mistake-filled, enjoyable, disheartening, thrilling afternoon that was Saturday's UMass-URI game.

"You gotta say that this team has a lot of character," he answered in response to a question about what he said to his men after URI had scored three touchdowns in the first six minutes of the third quarter.

"All I did was try to regroup them." The Rams had broken open a 14-14 tie at the half and made UMass look like the Worcester State freshman team. They needed regrouping.

"I told them that if the defense could hold, and get the ball back for the offense, we could score and get back in it. And we did."

And after the Minutemen had gotten far enough back in to go ahead, it looked like curtains for the Rams.

Bt they had one final chance and took advantage of it. They moved to the UMass 16 after recovering a Peil Pennington fumble deep in UMass territory, when an intentional grounding penalty moved the ball back to the 31. On a second and 25, Molly McGee broke a quick opener for the game-winning TD.

The Minutemen managed to take the ball all the way to the Rhode Island 20 before time ran out.

"What we were trying to do was get the ball back in field goal position," Rhode Island coach Jack Gregory explained as the "strategy" behind McGee's run. "We figured we'd hit 'em with a couple quick pops to get to the middle of the field and back in range."

"They had been coming from the outside, so we thought we could probably work the inside pretty well. But we didn't figure on that."

Because of the heavy UMass rush, McGee almost didn't get the ball. URI quarterback Steve Crone was being tackled by Tom Bradshaw and Dennis Kiernan as he was handing off. But once McGee was through the line, The Flash couldn't have caught him.

UMass' downfall once again proved to be the running game, or lack of it. The Minutemen gained just 17 net yards on the ground, forcing them to throw 48 passes.

"What can you do without the running game," sighed MacPherson. "We just had to pass and when we needed the run, we had to go to Peil. Imagine that, we had to go to Peil."

Between them the two teams scored 76 points, committed 16 turnovers (UMass lost seven interceptions and two fumbles, the Rams four interceptions and three fumbles), punted 15 times (UMass seven and URI eight), combined for 741 total offensive yards (Rhode Island 426, UMass 315), and 463 yards on returns (UMass 263, Rhode Island 200). Tim Berra alone accounted for 321 yards, including a 98 yard kickoff return that didn't go for a touchdown.

UMass now drops to 2-1 in the conference, putting them in a three-way tie for second place with Rhode Island and New Hampshire. Connecticut, at 3-0, is alone in first place. That sets a pretty important stage for next week's UMass-UConn game at Storrs.

INCIDENTALLY: It was the first conference loss for UMass since 1971, when Rhode Island beat them (Homecoming again) 31-3....It was also the first conference game UMass has lost that Pennington played quarterback in....Leading rusher for URI was McGee with 165 net yards, while Bob Wolfe led UMass with 25....The game marked the first official reunion of the undefeated 1963 team....Andy Dutkanicz gave the Minutemen their best placekicking of the season, converting five of five point-after attempts, all of them strong kicks....Attendance, 14,500, was good considering the weather, but disappointing for Homecoming.....

It was typical. Bernie Street closes in on paydirt, but lacks the push to carry it over. Everything went wrong for the Minutemen, including seven passes which were intercepted by the URI defense.

Booters Move Step Closer

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Another crucial weekend has passed and the Minutemen are still in the race, closer to the top than you might have imagined.

For a while UMass was convincingly defeating last year's Yankee Conference champs Rhode Island 2-0, UConn and Maine, this year's front runners in the conference, were playing to a 1-1 tie on an icy field at Orono.

This turn of events leaves the Minutemen in second place with a 2-1-1 record which gives them 4 points. UConn and Maine are still tied for first with 7 points apiece. What could prove their undoing is the fact that the Minutemen have played one game less than UConn and two less than Maine.

The UMass booters have a chance to make their own break next weekend when they take on Connecticut in a game that could ultimately decide the YanCon championship.

The hero in Saturday's UMass game was the defense. Goalie Carl Vercollone garnered his first shutout of the season but the credit should go to the fullbacks. Vercollone made nine saves in whitewashing the Rams, but time and time again the Rhody attack was stifled by stellar performances by the fullbacks.

Immense on defense for the Minutemen were Dan Ouellette and Gary McKenna, who played his best game to date.

Play started slowly on a cold, rainy field and neither team threatened early. The two teams traded miscues for the first 35 minutes until Tom Coburn could bring the ball, and the game, udder control. Coburn took an errant pass at midfield, dribbled past two Ram defenders, and when a third threatened he dropped a short pass to Bob Stanley on his left. Stanley, all alone, got control and pushed a slow roller toward the far corner that eluded URI goalie Kevin Daly.

The 1-0 edge would have stood up, but the UMass booters added an insurance goal at 18:39 of the second half. At that point, a UMass halfback lofted a high centering pass toward the Ram goal. In the confusion that resulted, a URI fullback miskicked on a clearing attempt and the ball came to Tony King who was stationed about five feet from the net. King gathered in the miscue, faked Daly wide, and popped a short blast into the near side, putting the game out of reach at 2-0.

Though the shots on goal were fairly even, 17-13 in favor of the Minutemen, the game was not. The UMass booters controlled most of the action with the halfbacks playing a key role. Mark Tyma was his usual brilliant self, and Jim Vollinger was also brilliant, despite turning an ankle in the early going and playing most of the contest in obvious pain.

KICKING IT AROUND-The win gives the Minutemen a record of 3-1-1- overall and a shot at a spot in the New England soccer rankings.

Vercollone's shutout was his first of the campaign and drops his goals against average to 1.7.

Tom Coburn was shutout in the goal scoring department. The Rams were obviously keying on him, and, when the going got tough, Coburn changed his style of play and set up the winning first goal with a perfect assisting pass. Coburn now has nine goals and eleven total points on the year.

The most encouraging aspect of the game from the UMass point of view was the fact that two different people cracked the scoring column. A diversified attack is a necessity if the Minutemen hope to defeat UConn next weekend and move into position as one of the conference frontrunners.

Boardwalk Past

"The memories, they're all gone now, the times, they're a changin' now, it's a whole new ballgame...now".

Boardwalk Past - Former captain Clarence Brooks paid his respects. He came back. So did many others. Alumni, friends, and nostalgia seekers of ol'. And briefly, for five seconds, the Ghost of the Boardwalk Bowl came back. But so did Peil Pennington...all the way back.

Homecoming 1973' certainly told a story. It told it blatantly. It told it with pain. It was a parable of comedy. An ordeal of frustration for the MacPhersons'. It was a story of how a college football team lost its integrity, only to gain it close to the end. And in so doing, the leader returned to the flock. For Peil Pennington...it was a most painful way to find out what you're all about.

Like the Prodigal Son, Pennington has once again established himself. He's returned. It took a couple of series on the bench in thought. But the competitor came out of the shell that hounded him with Maine and Villanova. Peil Pennington is the antithesis of what this 1973' football team is all about. Peil is character. Don't forget it. He's deserved better than he's received this fall. He's a winner. He knows how. Only the human element of error and a fumble gave the Ghost of the Boardwalk Bowl the right to tell Peil he'll watch in '73. But with 5 seconds left and Pennington still gasping the Ghost was a bit unsure...

Maybe he wept when it was over...Maybe he fired his helmet at the locker door in disgust. Why not. When he sprinted off the field at the final gun, he left behind the memory of Atlantic City and the ABC-TV camera showcase that were to preview to many the draftable talents of Peil, Berra, and punter Andy Dutkanicz. Boardwalk Bowls are made for people like Peil. Losses to Rhode Island aren't.

You say team speed is the difference between the Atlantic City reps of '72 and the unfortunate lot of '73? I say it's character. UMass doesn't have much of it. Oh, sure...As individuals we're overpriced in character with Peil, Timmy, Kiernan, Hansen when he's healthy, McAleney, Bradshaw...But as a team UMass is as unified as the Nixon Administration. And like Tricky Dick, the UMass football team doesn't know how to win... AS A TEAM...

You know, Reggie Jackson wouldn't publicly say that Dick Williams "taught me how to win" unless he meant it. How loyal. But I think he meant it. Dick MacPherson is as ardent, vociferous, timely, and as talented a manager as Williams. But he can't make his Minutemen win. They don't have the character. Pennington and Berra bathe in it...

They've played nearly two months of competitive football. They've yet to be solid for sixty minutes on any given fall afternoon. How pathetic. And it's too bad. The Boardwalk Bowl was beckoning. Now it's a stray whisper.

We miss a Clarence Brooks, a Paul Metallo, a Steve Schubert, a Dick Cummings...Mullen, Cunningham, Queeny...These kids knew how to win, how to go after it. They had character that you could turn to in need. They were winners. They were unified. They were inspired. They had leadership. The Minutemen of '73 are on an island. ALONE. Without these variables. And now...without the Boardwalk Bowl.

"It's a whole new ballgame...now".

Nixon To Release Tapes

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon capitulated Tuesday and agreed to surrender Watergate-related tapes and documents to a federal judge. The abrupt and astounding turnabout came about two hours after the House of Representatives took the first formal steps toward impeachment.

White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr., the President's top aide, discounted the seriousness of the impeachment move. But he said Nixon's reversal reflected a realization that there was a threat of grave consequences developing in the wake of recent events.

Nixon scheduled a nationwide radio and television address on the issue for 9 p.m. EDT Wednesday.

"This President does not defy the law," Nixon's lawyer told Watergate Judge John J. Sirica in announcing that the President will comply in full with a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals order requiring him to deliver White House tapes and related papers.

Nixon's earlier refusal to comply with the order led to his firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox and precipitated a crisis of confidence in his administration.

The decision to turn over the tapes was expected to ease the clamor for impeachment. But House leaders decided to go ahead with their earlier decision to begin a Judiciary Committee preliminary investigation to determine whether grounds for impeachment exist.

There also was growing support in both houses of Congress for legislation to establish a special prosecution force to replace Cox and assure its independence from the White House.

Meanwhile, the President's so-called compromise plan to give the Senate Watergate committee an authenticated summary of the tapes evaporated when Haig told newsmen at the White House that the offer had been withdrawn.

Nixon's agreement with the committee leaders appeared tenuous at best almost from the time of its announcement Friday night. And it was clouded further Tuesday when committee lawyers appealed Sirica's decision to throw out their lawsuit seeking the tapes.

Then the panel's chairman, Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., sent a telegram to the President saying his understanding of the proposal, to be put to the full committee Thursday, was far different from that described by the White House.

After Haig announced termination of the agreement, committee chief counsel Samuel Dash questioned whether the President's offer "was really a ploy."

"Obviously, we will now have to meet recognizing that this offer was not made in good faith," Dash said. "I don't think the President has heard the last from my committee."

Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., the committee vice chairman, said he still hoped some sort of arrangement could be worked out with Nixon to obtain the tapes.

Haig and presidential attorney Charles Alan Wright told a news conference late Tuesday that the White House had miscalculated the public outcry over the tapes issue.

"...the President concluded after very painful and anguishing discussion with me, with his counsel, that the circumstances were sufficiently grave" to reverse himself on the tapes issue, Haig said.

The President's sudden reversal took many of the principals by surprise.

Even Wright, who announced Nixon's decision in court, "didn't find out until 12:30 this afternoon himself," a White House source said. The announcement came less than two hours later.

"Two, Four, Six, Eight, Let's Get Rid of Watergate."

Wasn't It In '68?

The Crowd Marches On

"Two, Four, Six, Eight, Let's Get Rid of Watergate!" yelled the crowd of 200 as it left the UMass Student Union last night enroute to the Amherst Common for a rally to Impeach Nixon.

By the time it reached the Common, the crowd had grown to over a thousand. Led by SGA president Nick Apostola under a banner saying, IMPEACH NIXON NOW MORE THAN EVER, the marchers were met with enthusiastic response.

Residents of Central and the Quad cheered them on from third floor windows. As the parade passed Chancellor Bromery's house, a light from a second floor window flashed what marchers interpreted as a message of encouragement.

But it was on Orchard Hill that the march gained real momentum. In their biggest political demonstration since Grayson's Farewell to Spiro party two weeks ago, Orchard Hillers flocked to the balconies to cheer the crowd on. The carnival atmosphere was intensified by fireworks and fire crackers as the marchers, their numbers swelling, circled the bowl, enroute to Southwest.

Spirits high, the marchers passed through the Southwest towers as someone in Washington (how appropriate) sounded Taps.

The only negative response of the evening came from the brothers of AXA, who yelled "We love Nixon," as the parade passed their house. Undaunted, the marchers walked on-stopping traffic on North Pleasant St. chanting, "One down, one to go."

The flashing blue lights of UMass police cars led the way. Everyone was having a good time, clapping hands and chanting as they passed stopped cars, whose horns honked in approval.

Once the march reached the common, the rally was almost anticlimatic. Though each speaker was met with cheers from the crowd, the atmosphere had definately calmed down.

A return to student activism of the late sixties? Uh Uh. Some of the rhetoric was the same, but the crowd seemed to be more entertained than inspired. While rally organizers called for massive letter writing campaigns and announced plans for another rally Thursday night, the crowd seemed more interested in kicking Nixon around, before he isn't around to kick anymore.

Rally In Amherst

Nixon Impeachment Urged

By MIKE KNEELAND

Some 1,000 persons gathered on the Amherst Town Common last night to hear speakers urge the impeachment of President Nixon.

The calm audience applauded the loudest when Betsy Drinan, niece of Representative Robert F. Drinan, relayed a message from the Jesuit Congressman.

According to Ms. Drinan, Rep. Drinan called Nixon "the most lawless man in the White House in all of American history." She said her uncle wanted the 5-college audience to know that "Congress will continue to investigate all impeachment offenses of Richard Nixon."

Hampshire College Political Science Professor Ed Green, who holds a Yale Law degree, was perhaps the most articulate speaker.

"I believe there's nothing incriminating on the tapes," he said. "Nixon did not tape himself committing felonies."

Green said the controversial tapes were "clearly Nixon's ace-in-the-hole". He charged that Nixon deliberately kept them until the "going got tough to prevent his impeachment."

"Nixon hopes the tapes will defuse mass sentiment over his impeachment," Green said.

Speaking from the podium, which had such signs as "Dethrone the King" below it, Green argued that if Nixon is not impeached, the U.S. will go a large step towards "an authoritarian Presidency."

"I think Nixon doesn't understand that a certain point is reached at which people can't be manipulated any more and they say that's the end," he said. "That point was reached when he fired Special Prosecutor Cox!"

Professor Johnetta Cole of the UMass Dept. of Afro-American Studies, said there is more at stake than the tapes.

"Apparently the man has said we can have the tapes," she said. "What those tapes mean is that we have won a victory...the war has just begun."

Citing an Ethiopean saying, Ms. Cole said there is no shame where there is no honor. "And he (Nixon) ain't got no honor!"

She concluded her remarks asking the audience to unite. "When spider webs unite, even they can tie up a lion. If you various spiders are in readiness...we will begin."

Speaker Theresa Carr of the Young Workers Liberation League emphasized the development of Facism in America as grounds for Nixon's impeachment. She compared the developing U.S. Facism with Facism in WWII Germany.

"With unfilled government positions," she said, "he (Nixon) has more power in his hands."

Ms. Carr spoke of an increase in racism in the U.S. saying it is the key tool of Facism. "There is even evidence of concentration campus being recently built in the U.S.," she warned.

John Bracey, Associate Professor of Afro-American Studies at UMass, said "Nixon has committed enough crimes to do double time at Sing-Sing."

The Professor, who often drew laughter from the crowd, said the remaining Nixon years might become like the Eisenhower years. "The Eisenhower years were like having no President at all," he quipped.

Bracey suggested that Nixon might eventually resign his office but that he "wouldn't want to bet on it." He charged that the President is trying to bargain a position for himself that will make prosecution of his crimes unlikely when he does leave office.

"The best crooks know you plead guilty to lesser crimes," he said.

UMass President of the Student Government Association, Nick Apostola, said he was pleased with the turn-out. He told the audience that "students are not fooled by the latest political ploy to prevent Nixon's impeachment," referring to Nixon's surrender of the tapes.

Leaders said an Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon has been formed and that the Committee needs money to operate effectively.

Impeachment Process Explained

By VICKI VAN RENSSELAER

What is impeachment? What procedures are involved in the impeachment process? What happens if a President is impeached? In an effort to discern what the word "impeachment" is really all about, an informal interview with Dr. Loren P. Beth, a Professor of Political Science at U. Mass. specializing in Constitutional Law, was conducted.

The impeachment process runs as follows:

A. A Congressman introduces a resolution in the House of Representatives stating possible "grounds" for impeachment.

B. The House refers the resolution to a Committee for study (more than likely The House Judiciary Committee).

C. The Committee researches and reports on the resolution and offers a recommendation (the resolution can be approved, opposed, or "killed" by the Committee).

D. The House then votes on the Committee's recommendation with a simple majority vote being necessary for passage.

Taking the hypothetical instance in which the Committee's recommendation to impeach (meaning, "to bring charges against") the President is passed by the House, impeachment hearings commence. For such hearings, members of the House act as "prosecutors", members of the Senate act as "jurors", and the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court acts as "the presiding officer".

Witnesses are summoned and evidence is presented to substantiate or disprove the charges which have constituted "the grounds" for impeachment. The members of the Senate then render a verdict, by means of a two-thirds majority vote. If the verdict is "quilty", the U.S. Constitution specifies that the maximum penalty is "removal from Office". If the verdict is "not guilty", the President remains in office.

During impeachment hearings, the President loses his "executive immunity". There is a controversy as to what this actually means, but it is safe to assume that a President can be forced to provide materials or documents which directly concern the charges launched against him, provided that such evidence does not violate "national security". The President's subordinates can be forced to testify at impeachment hearings. It should also be noted that the U.S. Constitution is extremely ambiguous as to what constitutues "grounds" for impeachment.

If a President is expelled from office, the Vice-President (or failing him the Speaker of the House) becomes President. It is traditional for Cabinet Officers and high-ranking governmental officials to automatically submit their resignations, thus allowing the new President to decide how he wants to organize his Administration.

It should be remembered that impeachment proceedings against a President have only been launched once before in American History. That instance occurred in 1868 when President Andrew Johnson was impeached for violating the Tenure of Office Act. However, the Senate was one vote short of rendering a verdict of conviction on the charges.

Nixon Agrees To Tape Release

On Monday, the White House had quietly delivered to Sirica a copy of the President's compromise plan, which Cox had rejected, and gave the judge a proposed order accepting it that was prepared for Sirica's signature. When Wright went into court Tuesday, however, he withdrew the proposal and announced the decision to comply.

Cox had left a farewell party for him at the special prosecution force offices when Nixon's announcement was made. "I know that all citizens will be happy, as I am, that the President wisely chose to respect the rule of law," he said.

Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson, who resigned rather than fire Cox, had just held a nationally televised news conference and said the American people must decide whether impeachment of the President is the proper course. He declined to pass judgment on the question.

After the announcement, he issued a statement saying he hoped Nixon's decision would "overcome the wave of protest as a consequence of the firing of Cox." The latest move, he said, was a "constructive, statesman-like step."

Meanwhile, the new chief of the administration's Watergate investigation, Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Peterson, met with Cox's lieutenants to discuss the future of the case. He said the day's events were reassuring but that he had made no commitments to the Cox staff and received no assurances from them that they wouldn't resign en masse.

Vice President-designate Gerald R. Ford, who has supported Nixon's actions repeatedly in recent days, said the decision to surrender the tapes rules out any need to rehire Cox or anyone else as a special Watergate prosecutor.

"I see no need for that whatsoever," Ford told a news conference in Harrisburg, Pa.

Nixon, who spent the morning in Washington, returned by car to the seclusion of his Camp David mountaintop retreat in nearby Maryland. The White House said he was unaccompanied by family or aides.

The technicalities of the tapes turnover have not been finalized, but the tapes aren't to be made public for some time-if at all. They will be delivered to Sirica for the judge to listen to in private and decide what portions to give to the grand jury, which conducts its business in secret.

Their contents could eventually become public if they are introduced as evidence in future trials.

The Nixon decision and the later White House announcement that the Watergate committee will not get the tapes material may displease panel members, but other senators were pleased Nixon planned to give the tapes to Sirica.

"Thank God," said Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

Nixon Reactions

Relief, But...

By MIKE DUFFY
Associated Press Writer

The loud sighs of relief were only slightly muffled by reminders that the political battle over Watergate is not yet over.

The nation's political leaders expressed almost universal relief that President Nixon had finally agreed to release presidential tape recordings related to the Watergate case to a federal judge.

"Why in the name of God didn't he do it months ago?" asked Oregon Gov. Tom McCall, a Republican.

Democratic Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, who just Sunday had said Nixon was showing signs of paranoia, said the decision "relieves greatly my own concern about Mr. Nixon's ability to govern."

Gov. Dan Evans of Washington, chairman of the National Governors' Conference, earlier in the day had expressed his own "questions about President Nixon's ability to effectively govern the country." After the announcement of Nixon's decision, the Republican governor said he was delighted and added, "I hope this will lead to a resolution and satisfy those who have called for full and open disclosure of the facts surrounding Watergate."

Some officials, however, expressed concern over the dismissal of special prosecutor Archibald Cox and the future integrity of the Watergate investigations. A few said the impeachment move which had been gathering momentum should not be abandoned.

Tuition Increase: "It's Bullshit"

By BONNIE COHEN

There is a real threat of tuition rate increases at UMass, according to an article in the Boston Globe last week. The article cites numerous local and national reports proporting tuition increases at public institutions as the major cause of the possible tuition hikes.

"It's bullshit," according to Nick Apostola, President of the Student Government Association, and a member of the Board of Trustees of the University. Apostola feels that the need for low tuition is obvious due to the small amount of financial aid provided by the school and the number of students who are financially independent of their parents and are putting themselves through school. "Tuition may be low", said Apostola "but low tuition provides low cost--high quality education to those who can't afford to go to schools like Amherst and Smith".

Even if the Board of Trustees is "solidly opposed to tuition increases", as Apostola says, the final decision may not be up to them. It is up to the State Legislature to make the ultimate decision concerning tuition rate hikes. This issue will be brought up in the next legislative session which begins in January.

Many observers predict a long and polarized fight concerning this important issue. President Apostola warned students to "buckle down because there will definitely be a fight in the legislature."

Apostola appeared concerned about this "crucial and threatening" issue, but he set his priorities straight. "First we have to impeach Nixon and then devote our full energy to the tuition fight".

SW Women's Center– An Alternative

By CHERYL WALSH

If you walk to Southwest by way of Sunset Avenue, you probably pass their blue and orange door every day. If not, you may not know the Southwest Women's Center exists.

The Center, now in its third year of operation is located in the Mackimmie-Crampton apartment, which is directly across from the back door of Crampton House.

Behind the blue and orange door are five rooms of active women. There is a lounge with a stereo-system for meeting with friends, an adequate library and study room for in-between-classes and a main office from which ten three-credit courses on Feminists Studies and a few colloquium are organized.

According to Peggy Cookson, student co-ordinator, "The Center offers many services and facilities to women in the Southwest Community."

The Center is open Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Friday rom 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The 20 member staff has just been enlarged to include a part-time counselor. Ms. Althea Smith, a graduate nurse, will be in the center on Friday mornings from ten to noon, to counsel women on family planning, pregnancy, personal counseling and referrals.

A question often asked is, "Does the Center have a place for men?" Marggie Pasner, OUTREACH co-ordinators from all male dorms, and any and all ideas men would have. "The Center is anxious to have men become involved in what we are trying to accomplish," added Ms. Pasner.

Walgren Presents Petition

By MIKE ALLAIN

Eric Walgren presented a petition to the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night calling for his appointment to the Law Enforcement Study Committee.

Walgren, who brought eight of his supporters to the meeting, said he felt the Selectmen had not been responsive to Town Meeting Article 44 which requires that members of groups of "diverse life styles" be appointed to the LESC.

Walgren's petition stated that the LESC had recommended that Selectmen "authorize expansion of the Committee for the purpose of creating a representative body," and that the Selectmen "appoint Eric Walgren as a representative of the hippies."

It further stated that the Selectmen had refused to authorize expansion of the LESC and that they denied that the LESC is "in any regard unrepresentative of the Amherst community.

Walgren cited the need for a decentralization of Amherst government and more input from the student and "hippie" population he hopes to represent.

If appointed, Walgren said, he hopes to apply "pressure to decentralize the government in this town, which will become greater as the young people take a more active role in government."

The Board had planned to go into executive session to discuss Walgren's plea for appointment to the Committee, a procedure used when the Selectmen are to discuss matters dealing with "personalities" and reputations.

Instead, Walgren asked the Board to hear the matter "candidly and openly" in open session rather than go into executive session because, he said, "I am unembarassable." The Selectmen did not respond to his request.

Walgren also asked the Board to "challenge" his credentials, which include a Bachelors degree from Amherst College, a degree from Rutgers University Law School, and "experience in police-community relations."

Several young people spoke in behalf of the bearded, pony-tailed Walgren, who was dressed in sandals, a sweatshirt, and old jacket and pants, in contrast to the sportscoats and ties of the Selectmen.

One such spokesman, a 22-year-old art major at the University, told the Board that he likes "to do art, to have sex, and to smoke pot", and that the LESC needs a representative for people with similar interests.

Walgren then told the Board that he hopes to represent those people in Amherst who question or are in disagreement with current police enforcement methods.

Another Walgren supporter told the Board that "Eric has been my link to the town. It has been a great source of satisfaction for me to have someone who thinks something like I do and has the guts to go up there and represent me."

The Board cut short any further discussion of Walgren's petition after about 40 minutes, on the recommendation of Chairman Michael Sullivan due to "time limitations.".

Selectman Robert Garvey offered a motion to the Board that any further endorsements of Walgren be in the form of letters to the Selectmen. After Walgren protested that those present should have the right to be heard, Sullivan gave the Walgren delegation five minutes to sum up their case.

The Board then voted unanimously to pass Garvey's motion.

Reporters Receive Watergate Subpoenas

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) - Two Manchester Union Leader reporters were served subpoenas yesterday to appear before the Senate Watergate Committee in Washington Friday and bring with them all records pertinent to the 1972 presidential campaign.

The newsmen, R. Warren Pease and Arthur Egan, said they will fight the orders and directed their lawyers to fight to quash the subpoenas.

Egan said he and Pease talked voluntarily with Watergate investigators in September and that they have nothing new to add.

"We feel this constitutes harassment and interfering with reporting duties," Pease said.

Egan said the action "by interfering with us as newspapermen. . . is interfering with the freedom of the press and the people's right to know."

The subpoenas, served by a federal marshal from Concord, Egan said, state that the newsmen "will not be required to disclose any news sources either directly or indirectly."

CCEBS Sponsors Tribute Banquet

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

The CCEBS Students Counselors sponsored a banquet to all undergraduate students in the program as a "Tribute to the Future of Third World Students". The event was held in the Student Union Ballroom last Saturday, with the participation of about 500 students, faculty members and staff.

"The activity gave to Black, Puerto Rican and Chicano students a new source of motivation to keep going toward the achievement of a university education," said Edward J. Rogers, the moderator.

Dr. Rhody A. McCoy, CCEBS Director, and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery addressed the students.

Students with an academic average of 2.75 and more received merit certificates. Also Mrs. McCoy and Mrs. Bromery, as well that other distinguished guests received bouquets of flowers in recognition of their work and support to the Third World Community on campus.

Ms. Jean D. Moss CCEBS Director of Personal Counselors, was in charge of the banquet organization.

"The knowledge of self is primary to having appreciation for our brothers and sisters· intellectual development assures that the technical services that are necessary for the survival of Third World Communities will be provided," summed up Ms. Moss.

The Spanish American Students had different speakers such as: Mr. Edmundo Ramos, (Ahora chairman), Mr. Eddie Sotolongo, and Mr. Mariano Trujillo, (teaching the Mexican/Chicano Culture in Orchard Hill). AHORA presented a plaque to Ms. Rosa Blanco, a graduate student, for her participation with this Spanish American students organization.

The crowd enthusiastically applauded. Los Hermanos Santiago who sang Puerto Rican music.

The impressions of the students participating in the banquet seemed very positive. "It was a great opportunity to get together and share cultural values," said Ms. Gloria Ortiz.

Ms. Olga Rodriguez, a CCEBS Student Counselor in S.W., said that, "We appreciate the support given by the faculty and we hope that we can organize similar activity in the future."

War In The Mideast

Fighting Rages On Amid "Cease-Fire"

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Arab-Iraeli war raged on Tuesday as if the United Nations cease-fire never existed.

Egyptian and Israeli warplanes and armor clashed in hard fighting along the Suez front. Syrian jets and cannons tangled with Israeli air raiders and artillery on the northern front.

Israel and Egypt issued an angry string of accusations that the other had violated the precarious Security Council truce, to which both agreed Monday evening.

The Security Council was called into in an emergency session at U.N. headquarters in New York to hear an Egyptian complaint of what Cairo said were repeated Israeli attempts to grab more territory in the Egyptian heartland.

Syria, the other major combatant in the 18-day-old conflict, kept its silence and continued studying the U.N. appeal with no sign it was ready to accept it.

Israeli spokesmen reported artillery duels along the Syrian front and claimed their raiding warplanes scored "exact hits" on a fuel depot 12 miles north of Damascus.

Syria charged that about 60 Israeli warplanes streaked in over the Golan battleground "in waves" to bomb civilian targets north of the Syrian capital. The Damascus command said its Soviet-supplied MIGs roared up to meet the attacking jets and drove them off before they could carry out their mission in dogfights that sent 11 Israeli planes crashing to the ground.

But Tel Aviv claimed 10 Syrian jets were blasted out of the sky in the aerial combat and mentioned no losses of its own.

As the fighting continued, the United Nations alerted its 90 veteran truce watchers to prepare for a return to the war zone from which most were evacuated when the fourth Arab-Israeli war erupted Oct. 6.

This led to speculation they might be posted along the battle lines in an attempt to enforce the in-place truce ordered by the Security Council for 6:50 p.m. Monday as a first step toward negotiations aimed at a permanent peace for the war-scarred Middle East.

Israel claimed it has won "a very big victory" in the 18 days of fighting and said it holds about 750 square miles of land inside Egypt proper-west of the canal-and about 300 square miles in Syria beyond the land captured in 1967.

In his order of the day, Lt. Gen. David Elazar, the Israeli chief of staff, declared the Security Council had not moved when, he said, the Arabs attacked Israel two weeks ago but the Arabs "and their friends hastened to demand cessation of the fighting...once they realized they were close to defeat."

The Syrian front has been relatively stable for days about 21 miles from Damascus and 19 miles beyond the cease-fire lines established in 1967 when Israel seized the Golan Heights from the Syrians.

In Egypt, where the Israelis have trained their main fury in the last week, the Tel Aviv command claimed it has pushed forward in tank, air and cannon fighting to about 25 miles west of the Suez Canal along a foothold 30 miles broad-about a third of the canal's 103-mile length.

That would put them only about 50 miles from Cairo and give them mastery of the key road between the Egyptian capital and the canalside city of Ismailia.

The Israeli occupation of Egyptian and Syrian territory beyond the 1967 lines makes a valuable lever to pry concessions from the Arabs in the peace negotiations called for in the Security Council cease-fire, sponsored by the Soviet Union and the United States.

Egypt also claimed a bargaining trump of its own, saying Egyptian assault forces have retaken almost the entire eastern bank of the canal, which Israeli forces had occupied since the 1967 war, except at the main Israeli invasion point just north of Great Bitter Lake.

The cease-fire calls for each side to stay on the lines it held as of 6:50 p.m.-12:50 p.m. EDT-Monday.

U.S., Soviets Attempt To Instill Peace

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States is engaged in "intense diplomatic activity" in an effort to salvage the Middle East cease-fire and open peace negotiations, the State Department said Tuesday.

This attempt has resulted in the postponement of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's trip this week to mainland China, State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey announced.

He said the drive to end the fighting is aimed primarily at carrying out the U.N. Security Council resolution approved early Monday.

That resolution called for a cease-fire in place and immediate implementation of an earlier council act which provided vaguely for Israeli withdrawal from territories conquered in 1967.

Neither McCloskey nor other officials would discuss the details of the newest negotiations, but they obviously center on talks with the Soviet Union.

The United States and Moscow are the co-sponsors of the U.N. resolution.

McCloskey gave no hint as to U.S. expectations for a quick cease-fire. He noted that "I can't say there ever was a time the guns fell silent on the battlefield," although the resolution called for an end to fighting shortly after noon on Monday.

There was some indication that the United States hopes for a settlement by Wednesday. McCloskey, in turning back questions on the state of negotiations, said such inquiries might be better answered by Kissinger in a news conference tentatively set for Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon reported that it has reduced the pace of its airlift to Israel. A spokesman said it was understood the Soviet Union has also reduced its rate of delivery of arms and equipment to Syria and Egypt.

During the weekend there had been reports that the big powers were trying to create a cease-fire by using their arms shipments as bargaining weapons. The Pentagon said shipments were continuing but "at a somewhat reduced rate."

At the State Department, McCloskey flatly denied that the United States had threatened to cut off its arms supplies to Israel if the Jerusalem government did not accede to the cease-fire arrangement.

Mitchell-Stans Trial Postponed

By TED CRONYN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The trial of two former Cabinet officers, John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans, was postponed a second time yesterday, to await the outcome of efforts to obtain White House documents and tapes which might bear on the case.

The postponement was announced before one of President Nixon's White House attorneys said in U.S. District Court in Washington that the President would comply with a court order and turn over to Judge John J. Sirica nine Watergate-related tapes sought by former special prosecutor Archibald Cox.

It was not know what, if any, impact that action would have on the documents sought for the Mitchell-Stans trial, which was postponed Tuesday until Jan. 7 by U.S. District Court Judge Lee P. Gagliardi

The prosecution and defense both want White House tapes and documents pertaining to a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign by financier Robert L. Vesco.

The government has charged that Vesco, a fugitive also under indictment, made the cash contribution in hopes of influencing a federal investigation of his business affairs.

Gagliardi declined to rule on a defense motion to move the trial. Their lawyers had claimed Mitchell and Stans would get a fairer trial in Aberdeen, Miss., where a poll commissioned by the defense showed that a smaller percentage of the population thought the defendants guilty than in New York.

The prosecution's stake in getting White House material grew out of a ruling last week by Gagliardi that Dean's testimony could be barred unless relevant prior statements of the witness are made available to the defense. This would include any tapes withheld by President Nixon.

Mitchell, former attorney general and later head of the President's re-election committee, and Stans, former commerce secretary and later campaign committee finance chairman, were indicted last May 10. Vesco and Harry Sears, a New Jersey Republican leader, also were indicted, but Sears' trial has been severed.

Richardson Calls For New Watergate Prosecutor

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson called for the appointment of a new Watergate special prosecutor and said yesterday the American people must judge whether President Nison should be impeached.

Richardson, who resigned rather comply with Nixon's order to fire special prosecutor Archibald Cox, said he disagreed with the President's effort to curtail the independence of the Cox investigation.

His comments were made at a nationally-televised news conference before the announcement that Nixon will now comply with a court order and turn over White House tapes for a judge's private inspection.

After the White House announcement, Richardson called Nixon's decision a "constructive statesman like step" and said he hoped it would "overcome the wave of protest as a consequence of the firing of Cox."

He said he believed that the President's real concern has been protecting the confidentiality of the presidency.

Richardson said he does not consider himself a scapegoat for Nixon although the turn of events cost him his job in an administration he served from the beginning.

William D. Ruckelshaus, who was fired as deputy attorney general for refusing to dismiss Cox, agreed with Richardson that the Watergate probe ought to be returned to independent hands rather than remain in the Justice Department under the supervision of Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Petersen.

Petersen, meanwhile, met privately with Cox's staff in a move to encourage them to stay on the job, and pursue their investigations.

Acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork, who succeeded to the office and then fired Cox, summoned top department officials to a late afternoon conference to enlist their support for his caretaker administration.

Neither Richardson nor Ruckeshaus endorsed impeachment for the President, but they did not express opposition.

"The question of any ultimate judgment to be made on these facts is, in my view, a question for the American people," Richardson said.

Impeachment Proceedings Set In Spite Of Tape Release

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - House leaders decided yesterday to go ahead with an inquiry that could lead to President Nixon's impeachment despite his agreement to release the White House Watergate tapes to a federal judge.

They had already announced the start of the investigation before Nixon's about-face on the tapes, and said they would continue at least until the effect of his action becomes clear.

With the controversy over the tapes apparently stilled, Nixon's critics in the House said their major concern was to assure the continuation of an independent prosecution of the Watergate case and its many offshoots.

Nixon abolished the special prosecutor's office when he fired its director, Archibald Cox, touching off the uproar that led to the move for beginning impeachment proceedings.

"By giving up the tapes he showed Cox was right in insisting that he comply with the court's order," said Rep. Donald W. Riegle, D-Mich., in a House speech. "Now he should bring Cox back."

There seemed little doubt, however, that Nixon's decision would take some of the steam out of any impeachment drive. A chief criticism aimed at him during an emotional House session was that he had refused to comply with an order of the court.

Some key Democratic senators also said they expect the developments to defuse talk of impeachment.

However, Democrats such as Edward M. Kennedy, Philip A. Hart and Birch Bayh said they will press ahead with legislation to create a special Watergate prosecutor not subject to dismissal by the President.

Nixon To Address Nation Tonight

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon will make a television-radio address to the nation at 9 p.m. EDT Wednesday about the Watergate tapes controversy.

Alexander M. Haig Jr., Nixon's chief of staff, said Nixon's dramatic turnabout Tuesday in surrendering the tapes to U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica did not stem solely from fear of impeachment but reflected "the whole milieu of national concern" that included the firing of Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox and the departure from government of the top two Justice Department officials.

Haig said Nixon reached his decision about noon Tuesday after "very painful and agonizing discussions" with his staff.

Haig said that while Nixon will comply with court orders on the tapes "in every particular," he will not go ahead with his plan to reveal the content of the tapes to the Senate Watergate committee. Haig indicated the committee would have to fight in court, if it wants the tapes, as it moved to do Tuesday.

Asked if Nixon would comply with any future subpoenas for tapes or documents relating to presidential conversations that might be sought by Watergate investigators, Haig said he did not want to venture into that area which he described as a "minefield."

He did say that, in deciding to surrender nine tapes to Sirica, Nixon was making "this single exception" to his broad opposition to what he regards as breaching the doctrine of executive privilege.

Reminded that former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson expressed the view at a Tuesday news conference that a special Watergate prosecutor was desirable, Haig indicated Nixon would stick to his plan to "put the case within the institutional framework of the Justice Department."

Haig, who volunteered nothing on the subject of impeachment, was asked if he thought the White House had taken the problem seriously.

"No, I don't," he responded, adding that he felt that way both before and after Nixon's about-face on the tapes.

Haig said he discounted impeachment as a serious problem because he believes the American people have a way of discovering the truth, even after, "false starts and dialetic waves."

The White House staff chief referred several times to the dramatic developments that began unfolding Friday night as a "fire storm" but said Nixon had acted at each step "after assessing all the considerations."

He said, however, that the manner in which developments followed Nixon's Friday night announcement of his proposed solution to the controversy was "not preplanned, not desired, and, I think, not very well visualized."

Duc Tho Won't Accept Prize Until "'Guns Are Silenced''

By DICK SODERLUND
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM (AP)-North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho informed the Nobel committee Tuesday that he cannot accept the peace prize he shared last week with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. Tho's reason was that fighting still goes on in Vietnam.

"...Since the conclusion of the Paris agreement on Vietnam, the U.S. and the Saigon administration have continued to commit very serious violation of many essential provisions of the agreement," he said.

"The Saigon administration has, with U.S. support and encouragement, carried on its war activities. Peace has not been really restored in South Vietnam."

But the Hanoi Politburo member who negotiated the Vietnam cease-fire with Kissinger added that he would consider accepting his half of the $120,000 prize once "guns are silenced" in South Vietnam.

Announcement of Tho's present rejection of the prize came from Hanoi as the Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences ended the 1973 series of Nobel awards by naming scientists from the United States, Japan, Britain and Germany winners in physics and chemistry.

A foreign-born American a Japanese working in America and a young Briton shared the physics prize for their discoveries connected with the generation of power through superconductors. Their findings are practically applied in measurement and transistor techniques.

Japanese Leo Esaki, 48, and Norwegian-born American Ivar Giaever, 44, shared half of the $120,000 prize for pioneering investigations into electronic phenomena called "tunneling," where runaway particles penetrate barriers like a ball passing through a wall without leaving a mark. The two researchers work in New York State for IBM and General Electric.

The academy gave the other half of the prize to 33-year-old Brian Josephson who, as a 22-year-old student at Cambridge's historic Cavendish Laboratory, predicted new and unexpected phenomena in supercurrents in a theory named the "Josephson effects."

The chemistry prize went to 52-year-old Prof. Geoffrey Wilkinson of London's Imperial College and 55-year-old Prof. Ernst Otto Fischer of Munich, Germany.

They shared the prize equally for pioneering, independent basic research on the chemistry of "organometallic so-called sandwich compounds." Their highly theoretical work on these complex structures, although described as chemistry for chemists, has led to important practical applications for industrial use, such as new lead-free, antiknocking ingredients in gasoline and heat-resistant enamel paints.

Law Students Begin Proceedings Of Their Own

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP)-President Nixon's impeachment and a national day of protest are the goals of an effort at the nation's law schools being organized by law students at the University of California School of Law.

Julie Conger, president of the Boalt Hall Student Association, an organization of UC law students, said student bar associations at seven San Francisco Bay area law schools have joined in calling for impeachment and for the national day of protest Friday.

"We are calling for law schools to suspend classes and hold a teach-in on the constitutional and legal precedents for impeachment," she said.

The day of protest will either be a day of mourning for the U.S. Constitution or a "Law and Order" Day, she said.

Law schools across the country are being contracted by a student committee here to join the protest effort, she said. Students at four law schools in Southern California are considering joining the protest, she said, as are law students at Harvard, Yale, Temple and other Eastern schools.

Law students at UCLA, University of Southern California, Southwest University and University of San Diego were to meet to discuss the protest Tuesday, she said.

What's The Story?

Campus Plumbing: A Flushing Matter

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN

At the beginning of the semester many people were in an uproar because students were being housed in the Campus Center Hotel. A recent story in the Collegian stated that rumor had it that these students without dorm rooms were now being housed in the Fine Arts Building. I contacted the Housing Office to find out what the story was. While it was true that students were living in the hotel at the beginning of the semester, all students have now been placed in dorms. The reason they were not assigned dorms in the first place was most often because they did not pay their bill on time or decided at the last minute to move on-campus. Some roommates were split up because one of the roommates did not pay the bill on time.

It would have been impossible to place these students, in most cases, in the dorm area they originally requested. Requests by students who had paid their bill on time were running six times the number of spaces available for Central and Northeast areas.

There was also a rumor circulating that there were many triples on campus. According to the Housing Office, any triples that do exist on campus are voluntary, that is the students chose to keep three people in the room.

Most dorms are filled to capacity at the present time, but students who wish to change their rooming assignment for the Spring semester should contact the Head of Residence of the dorm they wish to get into soon.

The UMass Transit Operations seems to be in the midst of mixed blessings. Many commuters are overjoyed that the South Deerfield and Belchertown routes have been reinstated. Other commuters are somewhat less joyful over the Sunderland Route situation. When I've ridden the SN Route (both inward and outward bound), about the time the bus pulls into the Townhouse-Brandywine complex, moans and groans can be heard from many of the passengers. When the bus again pulls into Puffton Village the moans and groans usually turn into the question, "Why the hell do we have to go into the apartment areas? Why can't the bus just stop on the main road and let the people walk the rest of the way?" On the other side of the story, commuters who live in these complexes complain when the busses do let them off on the main road and make them walk the rest of the way.

I talked to Jeff McCormick, Assistant Student Manager of the Transit Operations, to find out what the story was. Jeff told me that the way the bus schedules are set up now the SN Route will stop inside Puffton Village and Townhouse-Brandywine except during the 2:00-5:00 p.m. rush hour. People boarding the bus will be given notice by the bus driver if that particular bus is not going inside the complexes. The best bet for people waiting for a bus to Sunderland in these complexes is to walk out to the main road.

I asked Jeff why the SN Route couldn't be a direct trip, leaving the North Amherst bus to weave in and out of the complexes. He explained that there are four busses on the NA Route. In order to keep within the time schedule the NA busses do not go as far as Townhouse-Brandywine. There are eleven busses that make the "Super Loop" which is the Sunderland to Orchard Hill, to Southwest, to Belchertown run. If a bus on this run is heading for Sunderland, and is overloaded, the driver can call in for permission to skip the apartment complex weave. If there is an extra bus, it will then be put on the NA Route (only in the morning).

Jeff Further explained that the bus system has been set up in the interest of all commuters. Even though the direct Sunderland riders get impatient, the stops in the complexes provide a service for certain apartment residents which must be considered.

Q. Is it true that there are only two plumbers serving campus dorms? If so, why?

A. I contacted Bill Marren, Supervisor of Maintenance for the East Area (this includes all dorms except Southwest). Bill told me that there are currently two plumbers serving Southwest and one plumber for the East Area.

He admitted the number is insufficient, however, he explained the reason for only three plumbers is a matter of recruitment. The University does not pay their plumbers union fees, and so the pay scale is much less than what a plumber would be paid if working on the outside. Therefore, it's almost impossible to get a plumber to work for UMass. Bill proved this point by noting that the yellow sheet (a paper which announces openings within the University) has been requesting plumbers week after week for the past two years with no success.

I asked Bill how UMass expects to get any plumbers under those pay conditions? He explained that UMass uses two lures. First, is the type of pay scale they offer plumbers. Beginning plumbers on the outside start at step one on a pay scale and work their way up. The University offers their plumbers a starting pay at step six. This doesn't seem like very good incentive to me because in only a matter of time a plumber on the outside could work his way up the steps and soon be earning much more than UMass offers.

The second reason was fringe benefits. A plumber at UMass is guaranteed 52 weeks of work. Again, this appears weak to me because I think outside plumbers are in enough demand so they don't have to worry about stability.

I then asked Bill how long it usually takes a work request to be answered. He told me that this depends on the urgency of the matter. If one toilet on a floor is broken but there are five other working ones, or if a

Chess Lectures Start Tonight

The Campus Center Chess Club, an activity of the Program Council, will sponsor a series of beginners' chess lectures. These are designed for the people who already know the rules of chess and want a better understanding of how to conduct a complete game successfully.

Each lecture will last about an hour and cover a different aspect of chess strategy and tactics. A large demonstration chess board will be used to show everyone the moves under discussion.

The first lecture, on endgames, will begin at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Campus Center room 165-169. The lectures are open to the public at no charge. At the end of tonight's lecture, Hampshire College chess champion Andy Gordon will play simultaneously against everyone attending.

In last week's simultaneous exhibition, expert John Stopa took on 38 challengers at once. He defeated 23, drew with eight, and lost to seven, for a score of 71 per cent. Those defeating him were David Bixby, Charles Bliss, Andy Gordon, Dan Grego, Scott Jones, Brad Pulver, and Milton Watt.

Obscenity Laws Under Question

By VERNON A. GUIDRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The deep division of the Supreme Court over obscenity flared anew yesterday with an accusation of four justices that the court has fashioned rules too vague to follow.

The accusation, not a new one in the thorny issue, came just a few months after a new majority attempted to bring what it called more definitive standards to the controversy.

"Every author, every bookseller, every movie exhibitor, and perhaps, every librarian is now at the mercy of the local police force's conception of what appeals to the 'prurient interest' or is 'patently offensive' " wrote Justice William O. Douglas.

He was joined in the dissent by Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Potter Stewart.

In other decisions the court:

-Refused to interfere with $300 contempt of court fines assessed against two newsmen for reporting on a public hearing in Louisiana despite a court order not to do so.

-Agreed to decide whether states may lawfully give tax breaks to widows that are denied to men who lose their wives.

-Upheld a lower court order prohibiting the sale of liquor on Amtrak trains crossing Kansas.

-Agreed to expand its examination of the constitutionality of military laws by accepting for review the case of Dr. Howard B. Levy, who was convicted in 1967 for refusing to train aid men bound for Vietnam.

-Let stand a state supreme court decision that struck down New Jersey's method of financing public education largely through local property taxes.

In a series of decisions last June the court's majority said local standards of propriety should apply in determining what is obscene and removed the stringent requirement that for a work to be judged obscene it must be found utterly without redeeming social value.

Douglas noted recent court decisions which pointed out that vague laws inhibit the exercise of guaranteed freedoms, "try the innocent by not providing fair warning," and delegate basic policy matters to policemen and the courts for subjective judgment.

"The exceptions to the First Amendment written into the constitution by the majority . . .could not more clearly exhibit these evils of vagueness." Douglas wrote.

The sharp complaint about the effect of last June's decisions came as the court majority routinely processed 11 obscenity cases still on its docket.

Ode To Dining Commons

By JON BRAVERMAN

You walk into the Dining Commons
And reach out for a tray,
Then realizing the meal you face
You pause for a moment and pray.

The fat old gray haired lady smiles
The tragic smile of fate:
Says she "every life must end sometime,
The more you eat, the less you wait".

You sit down and you sniff it,
That tantalizing smell,
To the hungry nose 'tis Heaven,
To your stomach holy Hell.

Then, all at once it hits you,
You realize what you've done:
You put a napkin to your head
And wish it were a gun.

And then you feel a churning,
The pain can't be ignored,
Your Dining Commons repast
Eating a hole right through your gourd.

Although you try to hide it,
That look is on your face,
One hundred thousand soybeans
Reduced to human waste.

When students are all Masochists
That food will be divine.
But, until that day arriveth
I stand in the basic line.

Monday night at the White House...

"Richard, Richard!!"

"Who's calling me? Oh my God, my coleus is on fire!"

"Richard!!"

"Now it's talking to me. I told Pat this job was getting to me, but..."

"Richard! This is God!"

"Now I know this job is getting to me. I'm hearing God from a burning coleus plant."

"Listen to me Richard. You must turn over the tapes!"

"Archibald, is that you playing tricks again? I warned you about that."

"This is not Archibald. THIS IS GOD!!! You must turn over the tapes to Judge Sirica!"

"No! It'll ruin me. If they find out what's on those tapes, they'll impeach me!"

"Richard, if they don't find out what's on those tapes, they'll impeach you. This way, at least you'll stand a chance."

"Yes. You're right. I'll have to turn over the tapes that won't hurt me. That way, maybe I'll get away with it. I'll have to get in touch with John Sirica and tell him."

"There's no need for that. I'm due at his gardenia in fifteen minutes. There's just one more thing Richard."

"Yes, your holiness, what's that?"

"If you keep doing the things you've been doing, I can't help you any more. I'll have to refer you to a lower source, if you know what I mean."

"No, no, don't do that! I'll repent. I promise! I won't use any more campaign funds illegally. I won't use any more corrupt campaign tactics. I won't defy the Supreme Court any more. I won't even bomb any more women and children. Please, believe me."

"I'm from heaven and I'll have to see it to believe it."

"Well, if you knew I was so corrupt, why did you decide to help me?"

"We forgive just about anything up here. Besides, I donated to your campaign. After all, nobody's perfect."

"Well, thank you very much, and may I say it's been a pleasure doing business with you. Goodbye."

"Goodbye, Richard."

Star Gazing

Mindlessly watching television the other day (first time in years, I think) I saw Bill Cosby on the Mike Douglas Show. What caught my attention was his T-shirt. He wore one of those grey ones that say "University of Massachusetts" in maroon lettering that everyone and his cousin has, myself included. How cute. He never mentioned his Alma Mater. I've never seen him here either.

Roberta Flack is enrolled at the School of Ed. I've seen her in concert in Boston but I've never seen her in the classroom. Shucks.

I read an article on the Sports page mentioning Yogi Berra's son Tim. He's a senior but I've never seen him around in the two years that I've been here.

Nicholas Johnson was supposed to teach a course I'm taking (probably one reason why I took it) but by some political move by the party in power, he was asked to return to his FCC position. (He's a Democrat and I think that the Republicans wanted to keep some people happy). So I got stuck with my advisor as my professor. I wanted to be enlightened by a celebrity.

I'm a groupie.

I've seen celebrities before. In concerts, in drugstores, but never here at my school. In my travels, I've accidently stepped on Ed Sullivan's foot on an elevator. I bumped into Kirk Douglas in a Men's Room. I smoked a joint in the waiting area before you go through Customs with the drummer from Rare Earth. Long before the primaries, I bummed a quarter from George McGovern (I have no pride). And I gave my phone number to Mickey Mouse when I saw him in Disneyland. Each time I encountered a celebrity, I walked away a little different, a little more worldly. I walked away each time with the feeling that they were no different than I, except that they were famous.

I don't have any particular group or person in mind, but celebrities fascinate me. I hear lots of stories about famous and semi-famous people and sometimes just famous weirdos floating around the UMass campus, but I never see them. Where are they? Are they really here? Or are there just rumors zapping around that this is a university of stars? I want to see them. I want to see what they look like up close. I want to know if they have pimples or circles under their eyes or dandruff like regular people. I'd also like to know why they're here, why UMass, and what they're into. That is, if I could find them.

I don't know. Maybe I'm star gazing. All the talk about famous people at UMass makes me forget about all the familiar faces I see twelve times a day. Maybe looking for the already recognizable celebrities is blinding me from recognizing the real stars of UMass. (What do the UMies and the freshman class and the C.C. night shift look like anyway?) Maybe those names I read and hear about every day aren't the only stars that are around. Perhaps there are lots of weird people in this school and not all of them are famous. I'd like to meet them.

Remove Nixon

By FREDERIC C. WEISS

Move to remove Nixon because by his authoritarian rule he is subverting the very Constitution which he has sworn to uphold.

Move to remove Nixon because he has continuously hid his mistakes through abuse and misuse of the "top secret" classification system.

Move to remove Nixon because this nation can no longer afford to have a man sell stock in the Presidency to the highest corporate bidder.

Move to remove Nixon because he has put men like Phil and Dan Berrigan in prison.

Move to remove Nixon, because he has pardoned men like Mafia Cheiftain Gyp DeCarlo, and Teamster biggie Jimmy Hoffa out of prison.

Move to remove Nixon because after a while it gets mighty sickening to see the man form repressive policies (No knock laws, illegal wiretaps) in the name of mom, apple pie, the flag, and the National Football League.

Move to remove Nixon, because he does not believe in following the judgment of the Court of Appeals in the famous "tapes" case.

Move to remove Nixon because sometimes things just get a little bit frustrating when a guy watches football games, while thousands of people are trying to "petition their government" by marching on the White House.

Move to remove Nixon before he sees Costa Gavres movie "Z" and draws the same inspiration in pulling an Executive Coup and taking over the government. (Remember, Nixon sent troops into Cambodia after watching George C. Scott in Patton)

Move to remove Nixon, because Nixon deserves to be removed.

Letters To The Editor

An Invitation From C.U.S.P.

To The Editor:

C.U.S.P., the council of Under Graduate Students in Psychology, invites all students interested in psychology (majors, non-majors, etc.), to attend its first general meeting of the year on Thurs. night Oct. 25, at 7:00 p.m. in Rm. 207 Tobin Hall.

We are organized as a combination psychology interest group and a lobby for undergraduates in the department. Our main goal is to provide a forum for open communication between faculty and students. If you read last Friday's front page story in the Collegian, you know that this can be quite a problem at times. One way in which we hope to have this open communication is through our soon to be opened office in Tobin Hall (Rm. to be announced at Thursday's meeting). The main function of this office will be to provide a student "drop-in" advising system whereby students can come in and talk informally with other psych students (CUSP members) about any questions, suggestions, problems and gripes that they have that are related to the dept., e.g. courses, instructors, T.A.'s, getting into special problems about psychology. If we can't help you with your questions or problems, we'll refer to someone who can.

This all sounds great on paper, but in actuality we can't do it alone. We need student involvement. WE NEED YOU!!!! People are needed to staff the office, work on the newsletter to psych undergrads, and the other projects that CUSP has planned. Some of the things that are on the agenda are a Graduate School night (where you can find out about your chances of making it in, requirements etc.), various seminars and colloquia by faculty and guest speakers involved in the different areas of psych, and an open house in the psych dept. where students could come in before pre-registration and meet with the faculty members that will be offering courses the following semester (in an effort to go beyond the usual course descriptions in the University course guides).

The possible things that CUSP can get into are only limited by our imagination, and the amount of involvement that you as a concerned person are willing to put into it. Now is the time to come forth and be heard! This is a chance for someone to listen to what you have to say, and a chance for you to take an active role in seeing that things get done.

If you're interested in getting involved in CUSP but can't make it to our Thurs. night meeting, leave your name and phone number in the CUSP mailbox Rm. 522 Tobin and we'll work something out.

Don't forget Thurs. night 7:00 p.m. Rm. 207 Tobin Hall. See you there!

Where Do We Fit?

To The Editor:

On behalf of the Student Government Association and the Student Body, I would like to request that the MSP-AAUP publicly in these pages state what they believe to be the student's official position in the collective bargaining process.

It has been difficult to ascertain exactly where the organizers of the proposed faculty union stand on this matter and we believe long before the faculty are asked to vote on this crucial issue, they should be duly informed of where the MSP believes a large part of the academic community fits into this process.

Message To Students

By CONGRESSMAN ROBERT F. DRINAN

I commend and congratulate all of the students who have organized this rally designed to protest the lawlessness of President Richard Nixon and his administration.

Even though the lawyers for President Nixon capitulated to the courts this afternoon because of tremendous pressure across the country, the Congress will continue to investigate all of the impeachable offenses of Richard Nixon.

On July 31, 1973 I filed the first resolution of impeachment against Richard Nixon in this Congress. This resolution did not even make reference to Watergate much less rely upon all of those scandals. Among the several acts of lawlessness which I indicated as impeachable acts were the secret bombings of Cambodia for 14 months prior to April 30, 1970, the establishment of a secret police state for at least 5 days, and the impoundment of billions of dollars of authorized and appropriated funds despite the fact that at least 21 federal courts have demanded that the Nixon administration release these funds to the people of America.

I plead with the student here therefore to continue your determination and campaign to bring about the removal of the most lawless occupant of the White House in all of American history.

(Editor's Note: The following comments were made at last night's rally in Amherst Common.)

Oh-So-Naughty

To The Editor:

The Monday episode of Kampus Kapers illustrates only too well the rut that Kris Jackson has fallen into. He seems to equate "cleaning up the act" with omitting supposedly offensive words such as "fuck", "suck", and "shit". Then like a little boy who has been denied his pacifier and settles for his thumb he sneaks those oh-so naughty words back in again disguised by printer's black-out symbols to mislead the readers that censorship is the issue. The only censhorship taking place here is the high caliber of cartoon material that never appears because Jackson is too high on his town trip. The only thing that offends me is the lack of talent and imagination we are showered with daily. And that is no clean-up. It's just the same old shit.

Chris Whitman

Letter To Rep. Conte

Dear Representative Conte:

Because of your presence on the Foreign Operations Appropriations Sub-committee which will draft final legislation for Foreign Aid appropriations to be ratified eventually by both houses, you will hear proposals regarding essentially the transfer of funds from this disintegrating economy, financed by taxes we pay, to those like the Thieu military regime, secret police forces and public safety programs of AID which train and finance cruel repressive operations. Only today another report in the New York Times adds to the awareness of how aid, i.e. tax money is being used. The report mentions training Latin American military personnel and notes how 10,700 men will attend the Jungle Operations training Center at Fort Sherman in fiscal 1973 and how as an example of training at Fort Bragg a "captain also demonstrated how to kill a chicken silently stretching and biting through its neck. A volunteer from the 82d drank the chicken's blood which 'has lots of vitamins,' the captain said. Besides financing this kind of training here or on U.S. bases, much money is sent to governments who have their own style and motivation in training. These governments can only stay in power by depending on up-to-date trained death squads, secret police and military. Thieu of South Vietnam has 1.1 million men in his army, the largest in Asia outside of China. His 300,000 member police and security force and over 1,000 jails and prisons holding up to 200,000 political prisoners is financed by the U.S. government. Over $150 million has been spent to date on South Vietnamese prisons. In June Senator Kennedy disclosed that the Department of Defense requests for this coming fiscal year to finance the South Vietnamese police and prison system would amount to $14.8 million if approved. It is not as if Thieu has already been cut off from funding for estimates are that $200 to $1,200 million still remain in the "pipeline", for example the $140 million Food For Peace money which goes to the South Vietnamese army. All this money perpetuates warfare, maintains the torture and incarceration of teachers, priests, doctors in the Tiger Cages and is in violation of the Jan. 27 Paris Peace Agreements. The whole world knows of this and yet we are constantly asked to turn inside-out our pockets to finance such barbarism.

Rep. Bella Abzug cited a recent study in the Oct. 3 Congressional Record, "past, present, future military aid, veterans benefits, interest on the national debt, cost in future income of dead, disabled, exiles, etc., social costs of 100,000 drug addicted Vietnam veterans and the costs of conversion. His final total is $676 billion. With this huge figure in mind, how can we countenance enlargement of the tragedy?"

Rep. Conte, at this time when people in this district face hardships partly due to the long, costly Indochina War, the excess profit making armaments industries with their cost over-runs and also their tax-free privileges never granted to private citizens, as this district's representative, you should make special efforts to propose and vote for conservative allocations.

First, because of the excessive aid Thieu has already received, because aid will continue to go to him because of past commitments and because making new allocations in economic or military aid to Thieu is in violation to the Jan. Paris Peace Agreements, it would be reasonable for you to sponsor and encourage you colleagues to support an amendment which would curtail further aid to Thieu. In the draft on "postwar reconstruction" the Senate's figure of $376 million should be the upper limit considered for the final draft proposal.

With the prospects of an impending impeachment, Congressional business will be carried on, but legislation must rely less on administration proposals and more on the cautious judgments of representatives and senators such as Harrington, Abzug, Pell, Abourezk, Hughes and Leggett who have all offered conservative amendments in regard to foreign military aid appropriations. Those most distant from the Watergate intrigues and from the hands of scandal and graft must act on behalf of those they represent. We will respect your careful attention to the proposal that you author an amendment to the forthcoming military aid legislation to end aid to Thieu and adhere to conservative figures in economic aid to Indochina so as to stay within the confines of the Paris Peace Agreements and within this country's economic ability to maintain the outflow of resources.

Revision In Policy

To The Editor:

The 1973-74 Concert Committee would like to inform the UMass community of a revision in our policy concerning ticket sales for the October 28th concert in Curry Hicks Cage, featuring Donny Hathaway and Chick Corea with Return to forever, as a result of an unexpected series of events which threaten our financial stability.

It was originally our intention to limit ticket sales to the undergraduates on campus who have subsidized our concerts with their Student Activities Fee. However, due to the sudden threat of a reduced ticket sales income, we are opening up sales to the Five College Community. The Hathaway-Corea concert was booked to provide a low-key, high quality introduction to the return of musical concerts to Curry Hicks Cage, with an eye towards creating a unique (to this campus) musical event; we are hoping that the entire community will support us in our efforts to make this show safe, successful and musically memorable. As an on-going series dependent upon ticket sales to perpetuate our existence, we are concerned about the future of concerts on this campus. After three years of work, planning and effort, we have proved that students working for students can effectively produce shows to fill the musical void we have experienced at UMass. This is a goddam good show and we don't want to see it go down the drain.

Ticket sales will continue from Monday-Friday at the Student Union Lobby Counter from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. In addition, tickets will be on sale at that same location on Sunday, October 28 from 3 p.m. to 9 p.m. Other ticket sales locations are being established at several of the Five College sites. An Apology

To The Editor:

Referring to my article of October 18th, my most sincere apologies to the ladies of the Hatch for an ill-chosen use of descriptive verbiage. A repetition of that sort shan't reoccur.

Teacher Training Protested

..BOSTON (AP) - Faculty representatives from the 11 state colleges in Massachusetts have protested a report that suggests changes in traditional teacher training patterns.

An unpublished master plan for the college curriculum states that more and more applicants to the school will be unable to pursue teaching careers because of declining birth rates and school enrollments. The conclusion, according to the report, is that the 11 colleges must broaden its curriculum and change tenure policies.

The objections of the faculty commission claimed that the plan, to be voted on by the trustees Nov. 8, is "the beginning of a systemwide and totally coordinated program."

Harvard Establishes Management Company

BOSTON (AP) - Harvard University said yesterday it will establish its own management company to handle a major portion of its $1.5 billion endowment, largest of any university.

Treasurer George Putnam said the wholly-owned company would manage one-third to two-thirds of the endowment. He said the rest would be given out to three existing firms, not yet chosen, in lots of $100 million each.

Putnam said Harvard is seeking an individual to head its management company who is "around 40 to 45 years of age, who will be paid a salary higher in scale than the top investment man at most banks or insurance companies."

Harvard's endowment currently is managed by State Street Management Co., which has had the job since 1948 when the endowment was $200 million.

Drug Rehabilitation For Prisoners

PORTLAND, Conn. (AP) - On a picturesque hill, where Army missiles once guarded the Northeast, young men now learn to protect themselves from a common enemy, narcotics.

The cinderblock buildings that once housed nik radar equipment and Army personnel now from Futurity House, one of the country's few state centers used solely for drug rehabilitation of prisoners.

Set alone on the edge of Meshomasie state forest, the site is one of a dozen state nike bases created in the late 1950s and abandoned a decade later after a thaw in the Cold War.

The 35 to 40 inmates, wearing street clothes and no longer locked in cells, run day-to-day activities by themselves. They are guided only infrequently by the State Department of Correction staff, Director Salvatore J. Fazio said in an interview.

The record of the facility's first year and a half speaks for its success. One hundred inmates between the ages of 16 and 25 have been accepted from state's correction centers in Cheshire and Somers. Of the 28 who have been paroled or discharged only three have been rearrested, Fazio said.

Another 40 have been returned to their institutions, unable or unwilling to make the necessary transformation. Only two fled the camp and were free for a brief period, he said.

"We've been doing it," said 17-month resident Mandy Moody, 19, of Hartford, "Saving lives, protecting them against what they're going to find on the street."

Moody, who will return to the "street" next month after a term for drug possession, has not found life very easy either at Futurity House or on home furloughs.

Commission Investigates Overloaded Trucks

BOSTON (AP) - Two contractors subpoenaed to testify Tuesday before a special legislative commission investigating overloaded trucks have been granted at least a week's extension, according to Rep. Richard McGrath, D-Watertown, commission chairman.

Both contractors supply fill to Logan Airport construction projects.

The commission has stepped up its investigation of overloaded trucks following the fatal truck accident Sept. 10 which partially collapsed the Mystic River Bridge. That gravel truck had been on its way to the Logan Airport site.

The two contractors scheduled to appear Tuesday with their company records in hand were Vincent J. Barletta, president of the Barletta Co., and Gerald J. Kelleher of the Gerald J. Kelleher Co.

An attorney for Kelleher said a recent illness had prevented him from gathering company records in time to present them to the committee, McGrath said. The attorney, Frank J. Kozol, said he could appear within a week with the required records.

When the commission adjourned it had not yet heard from counsel for Barletta, Timothy Murphy.

Murphy said he was tied up in court but thought he had gotten a message to the commission that he would be late.

"I guess we just got our wires crossed," Murphy said. He added that he had since spoken to McGrath and turned over copies of some company records. He said Barletta would appear before the commission next week.

Three other Logan Airport contractors have been subpoenaed to testify Thursday, and bring their records for the past six months.

"With the benefit of these records the commission will have documentary proof of the extent and degree of overloading as it exists within the trucking industry today," McGrath said.

Bicyclists: New Safety Regulations

BOSTON (AP) - A new bicycle safety law is scheduled to go into effect in Massachusetts starting in mid-December.

The new regulations would allow bicyclists to ride on any street in the Commonwealth except limited access and express highways where signs are posted.

The bicyclist will be required to ride single file with the flow of traffic, to obey all traffic signs and signals, to signal for turns and to yield right-of-way to pedestrians.

The new law also provides that all new bikes sold in the state after Jan. 1, 1974, have effective brakes, a front-facing colorless reflector, a rear-facing red reflector, pedal reflectors and additional reflective material on both sides of the bicycle.

Violation of any of the new rules can be fined by up to $20.

Birth Control Offered

As a part of a comprehensive student health program, information, counseling and prescriptions for contraceptives are available to students through the University Health Services. Staff members provide non-judgmental consultation to help you make your own decision in a safe, informed and responsible manner.

Women utilizing the contraception services for the first time must attend an educational session. Men are most welcome at this informal program and no appointment is needed. These hour-long sessions are held in Room 302 of the Health Services on Monday at 3:00 p.m., Tuesday at 7:00 p.m., and Thursday at 3:00 p.m. Starting October 31, educational sessions will also be held on Wednesday evenings at 7:00 p.m.

Contraception Clinic appointments are scheduled on Monday through Thursday evenings. If a woman wishes to receive a new prescription for birth control pills or to be fitted with a diaphragm, she will be given an appointment on Monday evenings. If she desires an IUD, she will be given an appointment for an initial consultation on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday evening with a nurse practitioner. An appointment for the IUD insertion will be made with a physician later. Appointments for re-fill prescriptions, routine pap tests, and check-ups are available with a nurse practitioner on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings.

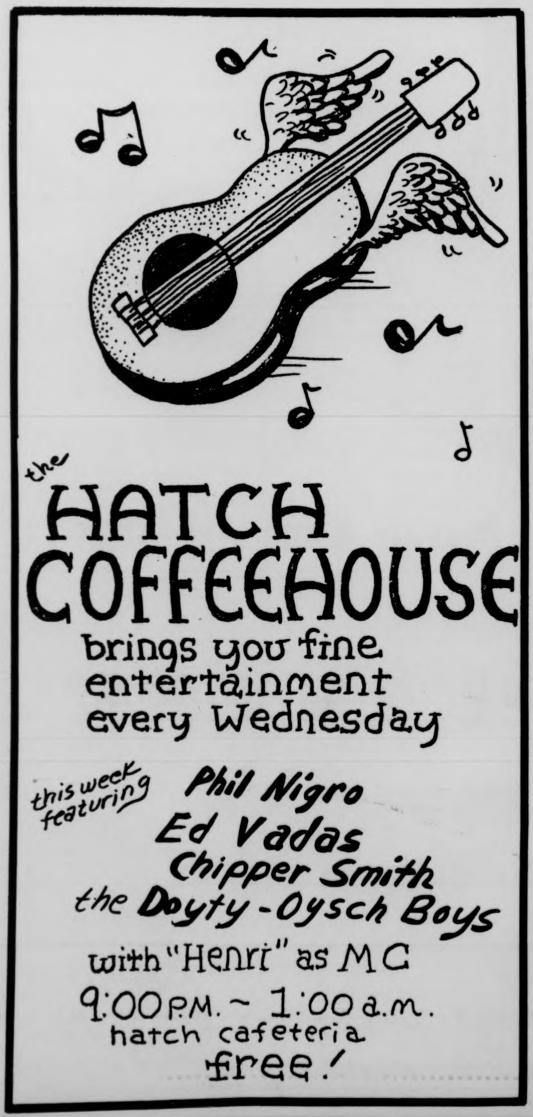
Call 545-0057 between 5:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, for clinic appointments. If you have any questions, please call the Health Education Office at 545-2492.

Second Robeson Lecture To Be Held

The second lecture in the Paul Robeson, Sr., Lecture Series organized by UMass Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, the Institute for Pan African Culture and others in the University community will be delivered by Mr. C.L.R. James, professor of history and literature, Federal City College and Rutgers University. His subject will be "Mr. Paul Robeson and The International Struggle for Freedom and Independence."

The lecture will take place Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 8 p.m. in SBA 120. The public is invited. Mr. C.L.R. James is the author of "The Black Jacobins," the history of the San Domingo revolution, and "World Revolution," a study of the rise and fall of the Comintern. He has carried on dialogue with such leaders as Paul Robeson, Jomo Kenyatta, Kwame Nkrumah, and George Padmore. He is also a novelist, playwright, and literary critic.

His important relationship with Paul Robeson was their appearance on the London stage together in one of Mr. James' plays.



What's The Story?

faucet is leaking, it may take up to a couple of weeks. If a toilet is overflowing a plumber will attend to it immediately. If crisis repair work is needed after 4:30 p.m., UMass will hire an outside plumber to do the work.

Bill estimated that there are 25-30 requests a day for repairs. It is less of a problem in Southwest where the dorms are condensed, but in the East Area the range of dorms is from Butterfield across campus to the Sylvan Area (this breaks dow to 26 dorms, 5,600 residents). Many of the dorms in the East Area are 15-25 years old and repair needs run in a pattern-everything goes at once-traps, valves, toilets, etc. Another reason repairs are needed so often is that residents sometimes use toilets and sinks as garbage disposals and trash cans. The plumbing in dorms is just not designed for this.

Bill expressed concern that students think the only way to report that repairs are needed is through their Head of Residence or counselor. The most direct way for a student to call on their own is to dial 5-0097, after 4:20 p.m., 5-0600. If repair is not urgent it can be reported to the dorm janitor.

"What's the Story?" will be a regular feature in Wednesday's Daily Collegian. I will be looking into various areas of the University system that may be of interest to or need clarification for the University community. I will also answer any questions or problems people are having within the University. So if you are having a hard time finding out the answer to your question, write it down on a piece of paper and drop it in the "What's the Story?" box in front of the Campus Center or bring it to the Ombudsman Office at room 919 Campus Center.

NE Leaders Relieved Nixon Released Tapes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Governmental leaders in New England expressed relief yesterday at President Nixon's decision to give the Watergate tape recordings to a federal judge but indicated this did not end talk of impeachment.

"There is no doubt that the President in turning over the tapes has put a damper on the fire of impeachment," said Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., the House majority leader.

"But, in no way, in my opinion, has it completely halted congressional action. The Committee of the Judiciary is moving forward to formulate plans and procedures to handle the various resolutions that have been filed concerning impeachment."

But, Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R-N.H., said that "hastily initiated resolutions" for impeachment now should be withdrawn.

"The President has now complied with U.S. District Judge John Sirica's order and those who thought to anticipate a refusal on the President's part as grounds for impeachment should not recognize this fact by withdrawing their hastily initiated resolutions," he said.

Rep.. Robert F. Drinan, D-Mass., said his impeachment resolution did not mention Watergate tapes, but involved secret bombing of Cambodia.

O'Neill said that "six or seven impeachment resolutions bearing 60 or 70 names of congressmen were filed."

The resolutions were referred to the House Judiciary Committee, and Rep. Harold D. Donohue, D-Mass., a member of that committee, took a view similar to O'Neill's.

"In my opinion, the crisis in national confidence that has now been generated by the President's actions, not withstanding his late hour agreement to release the tapes to the federal court, leaves the Congress little or no choice other than to initiate inquiry into and determination of the question of the existence of sufficient grounds to institute presidential impeachment proceedings," Donohue said.

"...I have urged committee chairmen to promptly begin appropriate action for consideration of resolutions that now are pending before the committee for that purpose."

Donohue said he did not think Nixon's action Tuesday "defused" the impeachment question.

Republican Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire, who has backed Nixon throughout the controversy, said Nixon's decision to turn over the tapes was unnecessary and that the President was pressured into it by "a liberal press and the failure of his own Republicans to support him."

Thomson said he believes the tapes are privileged and cannot be taken from Nixon "even by court order unless he wants to give them up."

Wyman, however, said, "I have long felt that the ultimate resolution of the tape controversy would be having the courts examine the material in private and excerpt therefrom those portions relative to any pending criminal cases."

Rhode Island's two Senators-John O. Pastore and Claibrone Pell, both Democrats, said they were pleased with Nixon's decision.

Pastore said it would "relieve the tension" and, "It will end an all-too-long, unnecessary controversy, and, hopefully, now we will be able to get at the truth and turn to other vexing problems which confront and plague our people."

Pell said the action would "cool off" advocates of impeachment, and he said he hoped that "since the reason given for the firing of speical Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox was his intention that the court's order should be obeyed, that now consideration will be given to continue the operation of Cox." He said he hoped Cox would be reinstated.

"If the separate investigation is not started up again, it would lend credence to the view that there is more involved in the firing of Cox than just the tapes, that perhaps his investigation was getting close to home," Pell said.

Rep. Margaret M. Heckler, R-Mass., said she was "relieved" by Nixon's decision, but, "I wish he could have taken this position last week so we could have averted the loss of three very distinguished persons."

David LaRoche, New Hampshire Democratic chairman, expressed a similar view: "It's tragic that three courageous men had to sacrifice their government service to bring this about."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

For a fierce ally, choose Scorpio. These persons have proverbial second wind and can come up with cash when most needed. Perhaps more important, the native of this zodiacal sign can inspire and rouse others to emotional heights. Scorpio and Leo often clash but find each other fascinating. Scorpio takes pride in "discovering" Leo and Leo feels more secure while Scorpio maintains interest. Exchange of ideas between Scorpio and Leo often lead to provocative articles and books. This admittedly is an odd combination, but it is one which can endure despite arguments, conflicts, much sound and plenty of fury.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't attempt to tie others down--contracts break out in loopholes. Lie low. Listen, observe and learn. Leo, Aquarius persons are likely to be in picture. Refuse to be cornered in connection with investment plan. Leave room for change, revision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What you took for granted rears, bucks, demands attention. Budget may have to be expanded or diminished. But very little will remain static. You are able to gain overall view. Recognize facts when you encounter them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may feel that too many things are happening at once. Key is control but that may seem far away. Quick changes are indicated. Ride with the tide but be aware of direction. Young persons who seem rebellious are awaiting guidance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be aware of details, fine points. Deal with Scorpio, Leo, Aquarius persons. Accent is on home, property, ability to build on solid base. Key now is to be frank. Specific statements get results. Know it and act accordingly.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): Some relatives feel now like arguing just for kicks. Know it and refuse to take others, or yourself, too seriously. Forces tend to be scattered. Ideas abound but you should strive to be selective. Don't substitute flash for solidity. You will understand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasis is on money, valuables, ability to collect what you need. Relative becomes part of picture in area of finance. Make intelligent concession for sake of peace at home. Taurus, Libra persons could be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are now in enviable position to correct past mistakes. Cycle is high and your timing is on target. Be selective. Avoid any tendency to find excuses for direct action. Pisces, Virgo persons could figure prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You gain through discreet meeting, conversation, agreement. You can deal from position of strength. Work in conjunction with group, organization, institution. You gain incentive through what amounts to a "secret message."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friend who seems unstable actually can provide solid aid. Know it and don't be too quick to pass judgment. Finish what you start. Deal with Aries, Libra persons. Emphasis is on gain as result of business, professional endeavors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent is on added incentive. Professional associate or superior plays key role. You move close to goal in unorthodox manner. What appears a setback is due to boomerang in your favor. Know it and respond accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on knowing, perceiving, respecting knowledge. gain shown through writing, advertising, publishing. Look ahead. See picture as a whole rather than in bits, pieces. One in authority may change travel plans.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Areas previously regarded as secret or obscured from view will open. You get accounting. You may be surprised by what has accumulated. Be sure you get what is due. Ignore one who has sob story or sings blues.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have resonant voice. You are diplomatic. You are loyal to family. You are creative and frustrated. You are ready to embark on what could be a new lifestyle. Give yourself a chance. It is time to think of you--it is time to stop being "Mr. Nice Guy." Accept opportunity to be more independent in thought, action.

Fellowship Opportunities Announced

Students interested in a career in public administration at the national, state, or local level are offered an opportunity to apply for a fellowship to study at two state universities. Fellowships for single fellows have a total value of $4600 of which $3300 is a cash stipend and $1300 the value of remission of fees and tuition. Married fellows receive an additional cash grant of $400.

Beginning about mid-June the Fellows will serve a ten-weeks internship in a state, local, or federal agency in the South. During the 1974-75 academic year the Fellows will spend the Fall semester at either the University of Alabama or Kentucky and the Winter and Spring quarters at the University of Tennessee. Fellows who complete the Program satisfactorily will receive a Certificate in Public Administration. Fellows also may complete an MA or MPA at one of the universities attended. The Program provides all course work necessary for these degrees.

Candidates must be American citizens who have completed or will complete a bachelor's degree with any recognized major by June of 1974. Fellowships are awarded to those students who demonstrate a combination of high academic achievement and a real interest in a career in public administration in the South.

Applications should be submitted as soon as possible but must be received by March 1, 1974. For information and applications write to: Coleman B. Ransone, Jr., Educational Director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, Drawer I, University, Alabama, 35486.

Smith Presents Theatrical Production

At 8:00 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, October 26 and 27, and Friday and Saturday, November 2 and 3, the Smith College Department of Theatre and Speech will present the first play in this season's Theatre 14 Series, The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds, by Paul Zindel.

The play is about the lives of a woman, Beatrice, her two teenage daughters Tillie and Ruth, and their senile boarder, Nanny. The title is drawn from the content of the play, in which Tillie performs an experiment for her science class in which she exposes the seeds of man-in-the-moon marigolds to gamma rays, plants the seeds, and gives a report on the results. Just as the gamma rays produce mutations in the marigolds--some are dwarfed and stunted, some are huge and exotic -- so the interaction of the characters with each other and with the world produces strange "mutations" in their personalities: Ruth is distrubed -- a chronic liar and an epileptic, while Tille is brilliant though peculiar and withdrawn; and Beatrice, who shapes their lives, has in turn become a recluse from the world which she hates.

The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds is a beautiful play about the frustrations and beauties of life. Although it is serious drama, it has moments of comedy and lightness.

Tickets are available from the Theatre Box Office, 584-2700, ext. 840, weekdays from noon until 5 p.m., and one hour before performances.

Peace Corps, Vista Set Week-Long Drive

A half-dozen former Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers will be on the UMass campus beginning Monday, November 5 to talk to seniors and grad students about opportunities both here and abroad.

Todd Baumgardt, an ex-VISTA, says that job opportunities in both organizations have never been better. "In past visits we spent as much time reassuring people that Peace Corps and VISTA weren't about to fold as we did recruiting. This time, it's good to report that Congress has just okayed a new bill assuring VISTA's future and that Peace Corps' funds are set."

Programs have been tightened up and job descriptions are specific. "If you've been looking for a good job -- one that will benefit you professionally as well as give you an opportunity to help others -- we've got 'em," said Baumgardt.

"While your major is important, we're also interested in people who have rural backgrounds, people who've done community organizing, people with farm experience and people with general problem-solving abilities," said the recruiter.

VISTA-Peace Corps representatives will be on campus Monday, November 5 through Friday, November 9 at the Placement Office - Berkshire House and in the Campus Center from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Interested students (seniors) are urged to sign up in advance for an interview in the Placement Office or stop by the Peace Corps-VISTA table in the Campus Center.

Novice Chess Tournament Coming Sunday

This Sunday, Oct. 28, the Campus Center Chess Club will hold the 3rd UMass Novice Chess Championship. This tournament is open to everyone who has never played in a U.S. Chess Federation tournament. There will be a concurrent rated section for the experienced players, plus those beginners looking for a stronger level of competition. Entry fee is $1; the winner of each section will receive a trophy engraved with his or her name. In the novice section, pairings will be by the Fluid Swiss system, in which no one is eliminated. For each of the five rounds, players are paired as their games end, with players of comparable scores probably end up playing somebody who's worse. Registration closes at 9:30 a.m. Sunday in Room 805-809 of the Campus Center; the event should end by 6:00 p.m. or so.

Letters To The Sports Editor

McCafferty No Sexist

To The Editor:

In response to Richard Chaisson's letter concerning sexism in the pools, I would like to say, as a member of the women's water polo team, that Bill McCafferty, the UMass coach, is anything but sexist. He has been an excellent and extremely fair coach and has encouraged female participation in a predominantly male sport. Without Mr. McCafferty, there would be no women's water polo team. The incident at Boyden pool Thursday night can in no way be attributed to the coach; it was an unavoidable situation where two time blocks clashed. The women's team was aware of the shortage in time before they began their game. I refrain from comment on the B.C. coach.

Kathleen Zaffino

The Word From The Coach

To The Sports Editor:

For the sake of the women's water polo club, I would like to clarify the events which led to the termination of the women's scrimmage after the third quarter (not less than half). Our women's team travelled to Boston College last week, however the entire B.C. women's squad was not present and our women defeated a B.C. team which included two men players. Similarly, the men and women from B.C. arrived Thursday night, a half hour late, with only four women to play. It was agreed by the coaches that our women's team would play their four women plus three men players from B.C. in a scrimmage following the men's game.

If you were there, you would have seen that our women were in the pool warming up and ready to play with ample time to complete their game, while the B.C. women were still dressed and undecided about the scrimmage. When the game did begin, late, I was personally informed by the assistant to the Dean in charge of facilities that, as agreed upon between our RSO representative and his office, we had to be out by the scheduled 7:30 class. Rather than risk losing what available pool time we now have (eight in the morning daily), it was agreed by the two coaches to terminate the game following the third quarter. Note that our women defeated their mixed squad 6-1.

It is my opinion that the insult to our women was the result of Boston College's inability to get their team together for a game either at home or away. It was unfortunate that the eventual scrimmage was cut short, but to imply that the women's team is being treated unfairly is an injustice to the women who practice and scrimmage every morning at 8 with the men, and to the dedication of the women who are now 3-1 for the season.

A Record Homecoming

By BILL BALLOU

So you want something permanent you can keep through the ages and give to your grandchildren to prove that your really were at the football game Saturday? Well, clip this and save it. It lists, as completely as possible, the various records set or tied as a result of the game.

TEAM:

--Most first downs passing--16-- breaking the old record of 15 set at the Holy Cross game this season.

PEIL PENNINGTON:

--Most passes completed in a game --23-- breaking the old record of 22 set by Pennington in the Holy Cross game.

--Most passes had intercepted in a career --42-- breaking his own record of 36. He adds to the record every time he throws an interception.

--Most passes completed in a Yankee Conference game --23-- breaking record of 22 set by Maine's Dave Wing in 1968.

TIM BERRA:

--Most receptions in a season --45-- tied Steve Schubert's record set in 1972.

--Most career receptions --82-- tied Bob Meers' record set 1964-66.

--Most touchdown passes received in a season --9-- tied Schubert's record set in 1972.

--Most touchdown passes received in the Yankee Conference in a season --5-- tied Schubert's record set in 1972.

--Most touchdown passes received in a career --12-- tied Tony Chambers' record set 1952-54.

--Most kickoffs returned in one game --7-- set a New England University Division record.

Also, there are no records on the books for team or individual interceptions thrown in a game, but it would seem likely that the seven against URI would set a team record, and Peil Pennington's six would set an individual record. Al Beaubien of the Sports Information Office will be checking the archives.

Rugby "A" Team Ends Skid

By WADIE BAHOU

The UMass Rugby team, trying desperately to get untracked from its 2-5 record spanning the past three weeks, managed a split this past Saturday against Hartford, but, more important, the "A" team won its first game in three weeks, impressively beating a previously-undefeated Hartford team 7-0. the "B" team, however, suffered another setback, 8-0, as many of their personnel were filling in for the injury-plagued "A" team players.

Displaying a very fine defense, and a patient, steady offense, the "A" team hustled its way to a victory, saddling the Hartford team with its first loss of the season. Forward Dan Georgianna picked up a loose ball in the first half and bulled ten yards in for the score, as Hartford defenders hung all over him like vines on a pine tree. Later, in the second half, fly-half Brian Kane added a penalty kick to create the seven point margin of difference. Once again the overall play of the forwards was excellent, as they continually won the ball for the UMass backs, and showed tremendous hustle on defense against a very well-drilled and disciplined Hartford Offense.

The "B" team suffered a disheartening 8-0 shutout, but consolation lay in the fact that many of the "B" players were either hurt or playing for an unnermanned "A" team. Nonetheless, it was an encouraging effort, as the "B's" played a very inspired game.

UMass travels to Medford this Saturday to play one of the better Rugby teams in the area, the Charles River Rugby Club. Game time is 1 p.m.

Notice

Students who are interested in intramural volleyball officiating must attend the following meetings: Thursday, Oct. 25 8:30 p.m. IM office. Monday, Oct. 29 at 8:30 a.m. IM office.

Golfers 7th At Yale Tourney

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass golf team concluded a successful Fall season with a respectable seventh place finish in the first annual Bulldog Invitational Tournament at Yale this weekend.

The two day, 54-hole tournament in New Haven attracted 22 of the finest teams on the Eastern Seaboard. Temple University captured the team championship with 932. North Carolina finished a close second, three strokes behind a 935. The best four out of five team members scores from each day were used.

The UMass team had a decent first day showing and was still in the chase for the team championship, 11 strokes behind front-running Temple. Joe Artman had a fine round and was four shots behind for individual medalist honors.

On Sunday, the final day of the tournament, Artman contracted an intestinal virus which had bothered team member Dave Kern all weekend. Artman and Kern are ranked one and two on the Minutemen squad and their inability to score well on the second day led to the UMass demise. Freshman John Lasek was the team pacesetter for the second straight tournament with 239 for the 54 holes.

UMass coach Fan Gaudette pointed out that teams such as North Carolina, Maryland, and Temple have as many as twelve golfers on full scholarships. He was satisfied with his teams performance against these powerhouses of Eastern golf especially since UMass offers no golf scholarships. Al Martino of Temple, playing on a full scholarship, was the Tournament Medalist at 225.

The seventh place finish on Sunday was the final chapter of a Fall season that saw the Minutemen capture their first ECAC Regional title, finish second in the Connecticut State Open tournament, and qualify and finish a strong fifth in their first ECAC Fall Championship.

Joe Artman played up to his advanced billing as the team's number one player. He was medalist in the Western Conn. State Open with a 75 and qualified for medalist play in the ECAC Championship with a 77 at Hickory Ridge in the Regional competition. In both of these rounds Artman finished in the dark, and artificial light from automobile headlights and spotlights were employed so he could complete his rounds.

Dave Kern played consistent golf throughout the Fall, breaking 80 in most of the tournaments. He was co-medalist in the ECAC regionals with a 76.

The play of freshman John Lasek was a pleasant surprise to Coach Gaudette. Lasek, playing in his first major competitions, was team medalist at Pleasant Valley in the ECAC Championship and this past weekend at Yale. Other team members Jim Duane, Bill Rubin, and Frank Agostino played consistently as well.

Coach Gaudette said, "we gained valuable experience this Fall by playing in head to head competition with some of the finest teams in the East. This should benefit us next Spring."

Sox Deal

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Red Sox announced Tuesday that they had acquired veteran infielder Dick McAuliffe from the Detroit Tigers in exchange for Ben Oglivie.

McAuliffe, 34 years old in November, is a left handed hitter, and was primarily a second baseman during 14 years with the Tigers.

He ranks among the top 10 players in Tiger history in games, at-bats, runs, triples, home runs, total bases and extra base hits. During the 1973 season, McAuliffe hit .274 with 12 home runs and 47 runs batted in. He played in 106 games. His life time average is .249.

McGee Heads Weekly YC All-Stars

Rhode Island halfback Sylvester "Molly" McGee (Haverstraw, N.Y.), New Hampshire linebacker Rick Langlois (Haverhill, Mass.), and Connecticut quarterback Lou Mancari (New Castle, Del.) have been chosen the top offensive, defensive and rookie players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

McGee, a 5'10 - 200 lb. senior, scored a touchdown on a 31-yard run with 59 second left in the game to give the Rams a 41-35 win over Massachusetts. McGee gained 165 yards rushing in 21 attempts against the defending conference champions, and his 58 yard run from scrimmage in the third period was the longest scoring play of the game.

Langlois, a 6'1 - 205 lb. senior, who is one of the cocaptains of the Wildcats made eleven tackles and intercepted a pass which set up a field goal as New Hampshire defeated vermont 19-7. The win puts New Hampshire in a three-way tie for second place in the conference standings.

Mancari, a 6'1 -179 lb. freshman, quarterbacked Connecticut to a 30-3 win over Maine and first place in the league standings. Lou completed 8 of 15 passes for 127 yards and two touchdowns as the Huskies were recording their third conference success of the season in as many starts.

UMass Cracks S-Conn, 1-8

Field Stickers Remain Unbeaten

By MDC STAFF

Displaying a fine team effort, the UMass Varsity stickers ripped Southern Connecticut 1-0. South-Conn had the edge over UMass in the first half, but the Minutewomen defense held their ground. Kate Stanne and Jo Smith spoiled the South-Conn attack by intercepting numerous passes. As the dust settled at the end of the first half, the score remained 0-0.

UMass put it all together in the opening minutes of the second half when Kathy O'Neil put them on the scoreboard. A shot from the top of the circle by Elaine (Slink) Senosk rebounded off the South-Conn goalie and O'Neil tipped it home for a bingo. Determined to come back, South Conn put the pressure on the UMass defense, only to be met by Lori Naza and Kathi German.

The remainder of the game proved to be exciting as both teams displayed excellent open field play. With less than two minutes to play, South-Conn, in a final attempt to tie the game, was stopped short by goalie Nancy Barr as she rushed to the top of the circle and foiled a two-on-one breakaway.

UMass remains undefeated as they await their next opponent, Smith College. The game will be played Thursday night under the lights in Northampton at 8:15.

JV'S SLIP, 6-1

The J.V. team played perhaps its worst game of the season in losing to Southern Connecticut 6-1. Although the score didn't reflect it, the skill level of the teams was comparable, and although neither played a sharp game, South-Conn came up with the key plays.

UMass' Mickey Locke scored when the play was bunched just outside the goal cage. Her stick found the ball and pushed it home, making the score 2-1 at the half.

The second half proved to be UMass' downfall. Southern's right inner stole the show and scored four goals.

The game was marked by slashing sticks, lazy footwork and crowding, and UMass could not play its normal spread out game. The team now turns its thoughts toward Smith College who will be the opposition on Thursday night at Smith.

Benefit

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Whalers of the World Hockey Association said Tuesday their game against the Los Angeles Sharks Saturday at Boston Garden will be for the benefit of the city of Chelsea.

The city was struck by a massive conflagration Oct. 14. The flames struck 30 city blocks and did damage estimated as high as $100 million. Proceeds from all ticket sales, less operating costs, will be donated to the city.

Whalers President Howard Baldwin said "The involvement on the part of the New England Whalers is to be given to the city of Chelsea and will be, used as deemed appropriate by Mayor Philip Spelman and the city council to help the fire-ravaged city get back on its feet."

Tired Thinclads Fall To Springfield

By SCOTT HAYES

"They were digging down deep, but there wasn't anything to get."

That's what Coach Ken O'Brien had to say about yesterday's tired cross country team that suffered a 40-19 loss at the hands of Springfield.

Springfield, a fairly good cross country team, normally wouldn't have given UMass any trouble. The top eight UMass harriers, however, were not in the race because of the important Yankee Conference meet on Saturday. Tom Wilson and company gave it all they had anyway, but came up far short.

Charlie Dugan won the race with a time of 26:00, followed by teammate Art McCloud. Tom Wilson captured third for UMass in 26:45. Jim Housinton and Bill Mousitis finished fourth and fifth respectively for Springfield. Phil Broughton came in sixth, covering the course in 27:29.

Broughton expected a tough race from Springfield, because there are several good individuals on the team. Broughton knew that his job was to "go out there and try and run with McCloud." Broughton and Wilson were able to keep up with McCloud for the first two miles, but a cramp slowed down Broughton after that, and McCloud beat Wilson. Phil explained that he had his mind made up before the race that "he had to get right up there and stay there."

Broughton also expressed his feelings toward John McGrail, Chris Farmer and Paul Doiron, the three freshmen who have made the varsity squad for the YanCon championship meet. He referred to them as "something else", and said, "it's good to see them up there because it keeps the team going."

Freshman Mickey Hawkes explained that the team had a bad day and said of Springfield, "they weren't that good." The first year speedster also stated that "Our full team could have beat them."

Pete McGinty and Art Peltz finished seventh and eighth for Springfield while Jim Hunt placed ninth for UMass. Hunt was clocked in 27:55. Mike Gillen captured tenth with a time of 27:56.

Andy Levey and Mickey Hawkes placed twelfth and thirteenth for the harriers, now 5-3 overall.

Coach O'Brien also felt that UMass wouldn't have had any trouble beating Springfield ordinarily. "The schedule is too much to handle," said the mentor. He was referring to the schedule that this year has three meets in seven days. In order to keep his team fresh, O'Brien has to rest some of his best runners to prepare for the more important meets.

As for the Springfield team, O'Brien said they are "probably the sixth best team in New England."

Tim's Dad Yogi Signs 3 Year Pact

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

HAWORTH, N.J. (AP) - The last time Yogi Berra lost the seventh game of the World Series, he also lost his job. That was 1964 with the New York Yankees. He did much better in 1973 with the New York Mets.

Less than 48 hours after the last out in Oakland, Berra was granted a new three-year contract by the Mets with a substantial raise. The guessing is that the numbers on the new deal are something around $75,000.

That's not bad for a man who was being fired almost all summer long when the Mets were languishing in last place in the National Legue's East Division.

Berra said the Mets had offered to renew his contract before the end of the season. "I said, 'Let's wait until it's all over.' I could have signed earlier but I said I'd rather wait until after the season."

Berra said the length of his new contract was his idea. "I asked if I could have it and they said, fine," said Yogi.

When the Mets were struggling in July, M. Donald Grant, chairman of the Board, said Berra's fate was in the hands of the fans. But when General Manager Bob Scheffing announced Tuesday's re-hiring of Yogi, he said, "There never was any doubt of his returning."

Now that he knows for sure where he'll be working next year, Berra has some ideas on how he'd like to change his team. "We'd like a right-handed hitter," he said, "but I won't trade any of my good pitchers if I can help it. We'll keep shopping."

MacPhail Named AL President

By JOE MOOSHIL
Associated Press Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Lee MacPhail, general manager of the New York Yankees, was named to succeed Joe Cronin as president of the American League Tuesday.

The appointment, made by league owners, is effective Jan. 1, 1974.

Cronin, who still has two years to go on his contract, said he will remain as chairman of the board when MacPhail takes over as league president.

Cronin read a statement from the Yankees that it was with great "trepidation" that the Yanks gave MacPhail permission to accept the appointment. The Yankees said they regretted his loss but that the loss of the team was the gain of the league.

The Rookie Shave

The sign on route 6 said "Boston--72", but the mileage between the Cape Cod Coliseum and Boston Garden might be more properly measured in parsecs for the members of the Cape Cod Cubs.

Their ages range from 19 to 26 and the Cubs, they hope, will be the first step on the way to the National Hockey League.

The Cape Cod Cubs. Located in South Yarmouth, Massachusetts and members, charter members, of the three-week-old North American Hockey League.

All the names, except one, mean nothing. Paul Perras, Jim Ivison, Rick Molinaro, Wayne Bell. And Pat Keenan. The one that means something.

Keenan. The greatest scorer in UMass hockey history, he had a tryout with the Bruins, got cut, and signed with the Cubs. He's the only one left out of fiveUMies who tried the pros.

On this night, Sunday, October 21, the Cubs were playing the Johnstown Jets. 1700 fans sat on the Coliseum's aluminum bleachers to watch.

Keenan spotted me in the stands as he was skating around before the game. "Did you pay?" he asked.

"Of course," I replied. "How the hell else could I get in?"

"All right. I'll talk to you after the game."

It was a good game, the Cubs winning 4-0. The quality of play in the North American League is somewhere between the Stanley Cup playoffs and Gunsmoke. The skating is fast, the hitting hard, the defense lacking. This night play tended toward the Stanley Cup and the fans saw a good show.

Keenan played well. His style hasn't changed since UMass days. Lots of moves, lots of scoring chances, good stick-checking, little backchecking.

He scored a goal, the first of the game and the game winner. It came on a power play. He won the draw to the right of Johnstown goalie Ron Docken, getting it back to Mike Demarco on the left point. As Demarco fired Keenan cut for the net and tipped in the waist high slap shot.

He was first out of the lockerroom after the game.

"Look at what they did to me" he moaned, pointing to his head where once grew about three pounds of protein. Now there was about three ounces.

"They gave me The Shave". The Shave is a hockey tradition, a rookie's introdutction to the pros. The veterans pin you down and in the most painful and brutal way relieve you of as much hair as they can.

"Was I mad," he continued. "I was furious. I was ready to pack up and go home after that."

"Hell, that's a tradition. It happened to Bobby Orr," I said.

"I don't care who it happened to, it was my hair. My God, I thought that was Medieval."

He was mad about his ice time. He wasn't getting enough. "Right now I'm only playing about 18 minutes a game. Bronco (Cubs coach Bronco Horvath, ex-Bruins' star) doesn't use me on the power play, or killing penalties. About all I do besides my regular shift is come on when we pull the goalie."

Ice time means scoring chances, which mean goals, which mean money. He's a pro now.

"Every goal counts. This isn't like UMass where you're playing for a few free beers at Mike's. Goals mean bonuses."

If he continues scoring like he has been, he should pick up plenty of money. He's got four goals in the six games the Cubs have played, and three assists. His team is 3-3, tied for third place.

The NAHL is a tough league. Small men like Keenan have to learn to fight to survive. He's already had his first.

"After four years of not being able to fight in college, you get rusty. We had a fight down in Long Island and I was just skating around in front of their bench when--wham--this guy had me from behind and I was leaning over into the bench. Did I get it."

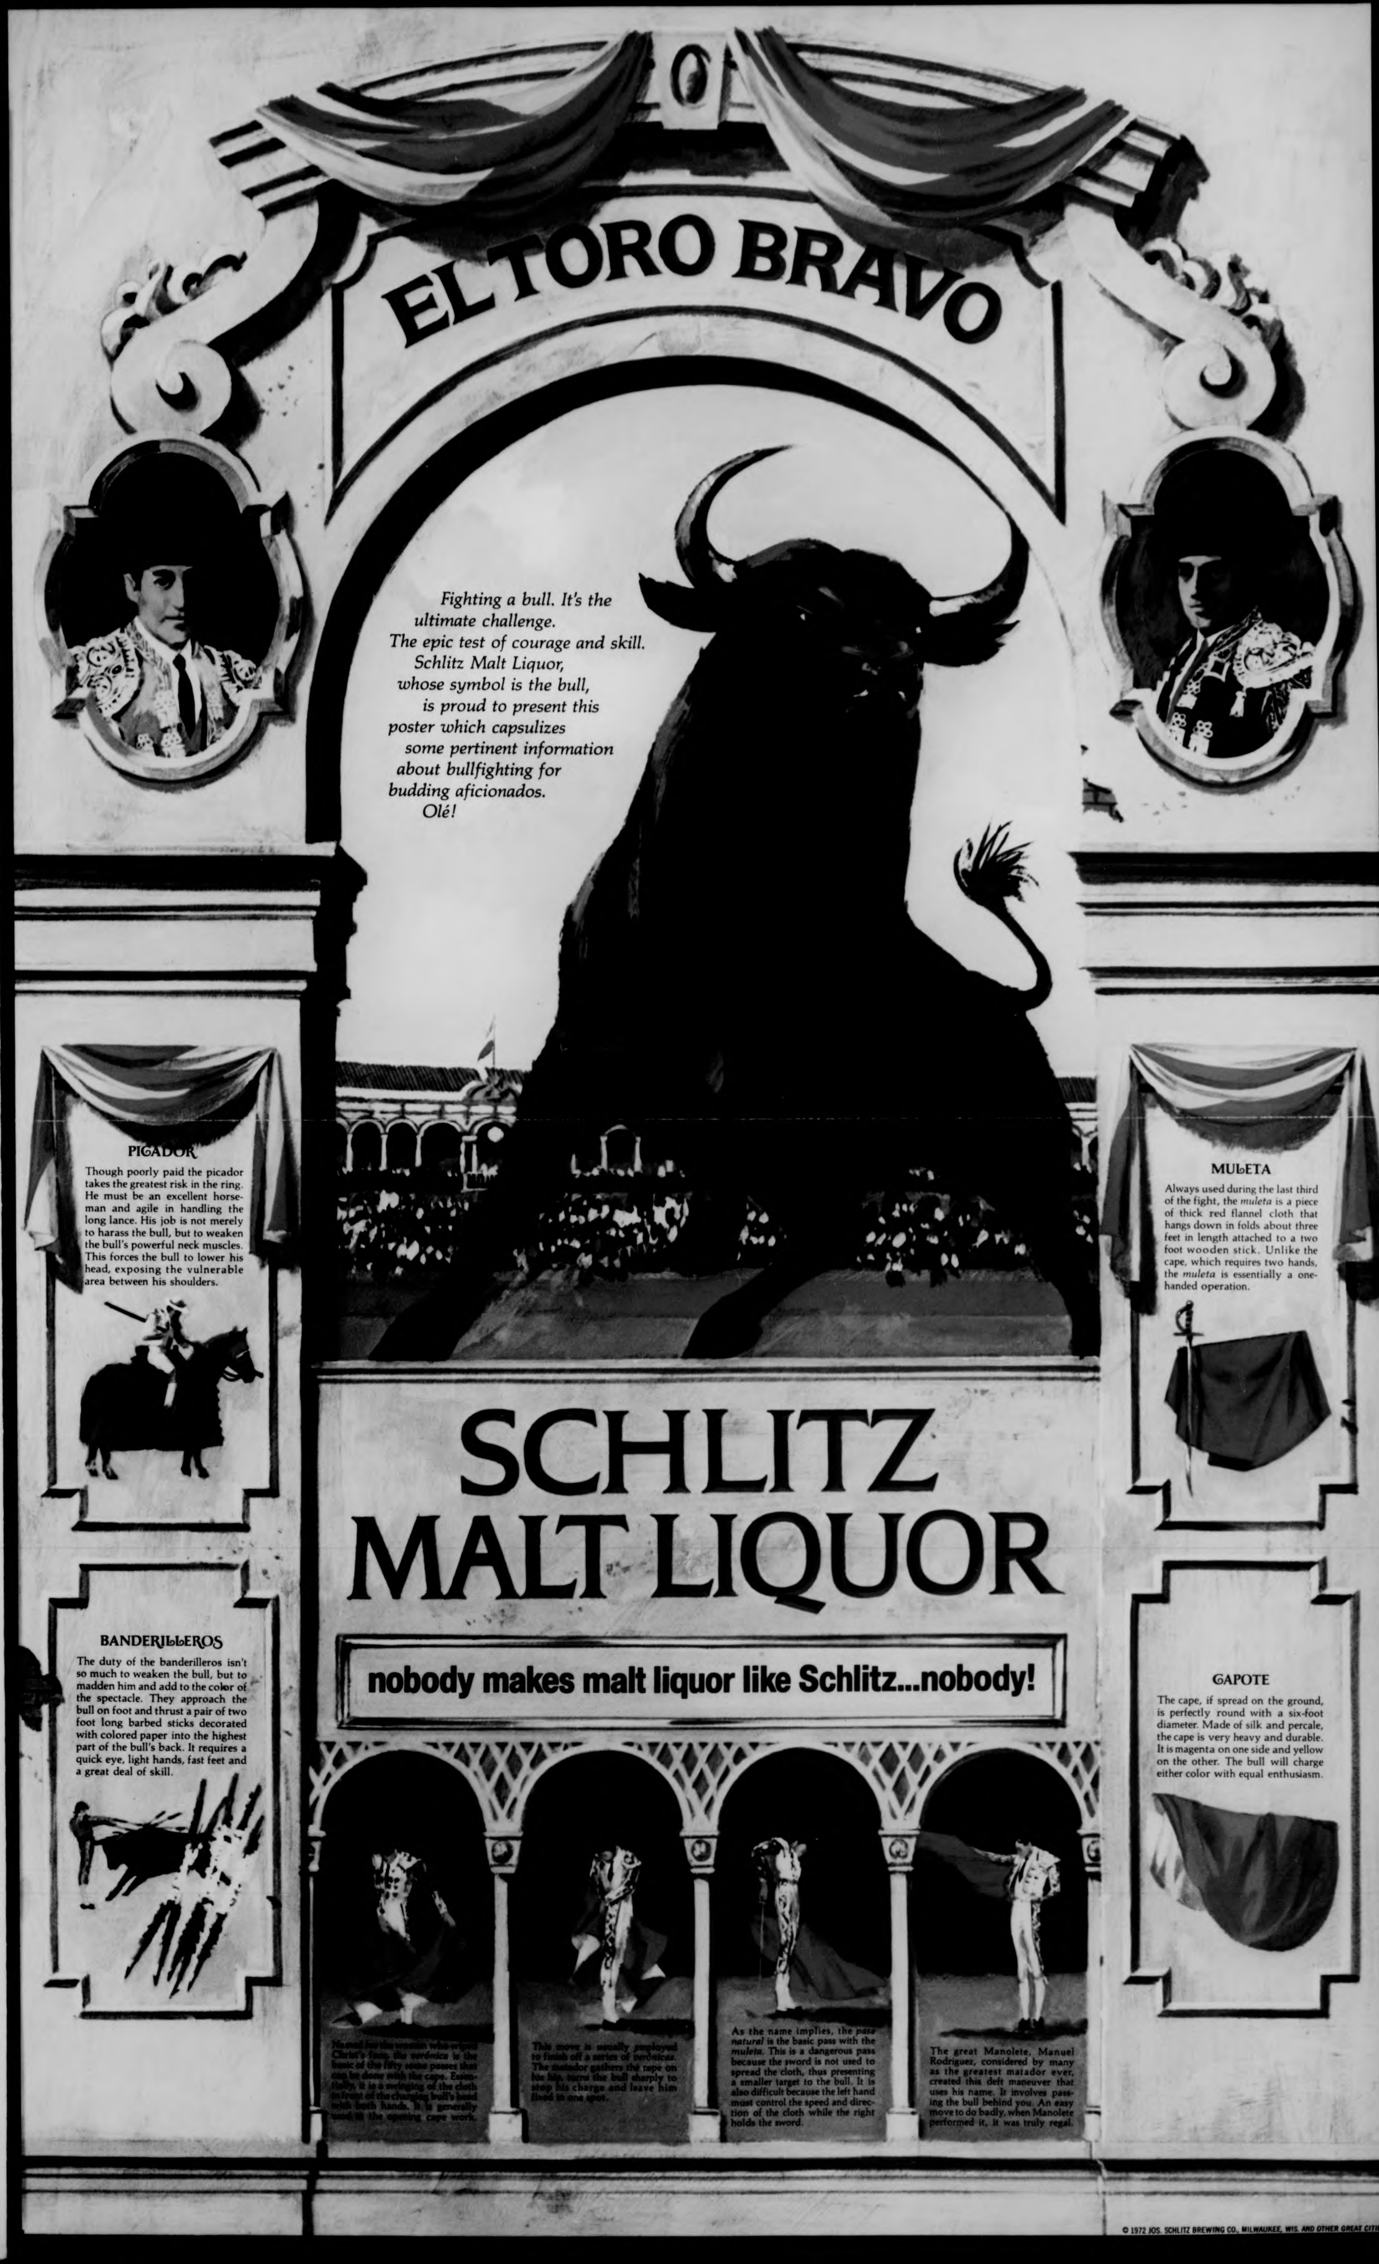
"What was the guy's name," I asked.

"I don't know, there were sixteen of them. It had to be the whole team."

He's happy. He likes living on the Cape and he's heard that the Braves might be moving down there after this season.

"I still think I got a bad deal and should have had a better shot with them. But I'm damn sure I want to play for them next year."

Let's see, four goals in six games. That's about 52 in 76 games. He might be there sooner than he thinks.



EL TORO BRAVO

Fighting a bull. It's the ultimate challenge. The epic test of courage and skill. Schlitz Malt Liquor, whose symbol is the bull, is proud to present this poster which capsulizes some pertinent information about bullfighting for budding aficionados. Olé!

PICADOR
Though poorly paid the picador takes the greatest risk in the ring. He must be an excellent horseman and agile in handling the long lance. His job is not merely to harass the bull, but to weaken the bull's powerful neck muscles. This forces the bull to lower his head, exposing the vulnerable area between his shoulders.

BANDERILLEROS
The duty of the banderilleros isn't so much to weaken the bull, but to madden him and add to the color of the spectacle. They approach the bull on foot and thrust a pair of two foot long barbed sticks decorated with colored paper into the highest part of the bull's back. It requires a quick eye, light hands, fast feet and a great deal of skill.

MULETA
Always used during the last third of the fight, the muleta is a piece of thick red flannel cloth that hangs down in folds about three feet in length attached to a two foot wooden stick. Unlike the cape, which requires two hands, the muleta is essentially a one-handed operation.

CAPOTE
The cape, if spread on the ground, is perfectly round with a six-foot diameter. Made of silk and percale, the cape is very heavy and durable. It is magenta on one side and yellow on the other. The bull will charge either color with equal enthusiasm.

SCHLITZ MALT LIQUOR
nobody makes malt liquor like Schlitz...nobody!

Named for the woman who wiped Christ's face, the verónica is the basic of the fifty some passes that can be done with the cape. Essentially, it is a swinging of the cloth in front of the charging bull's head with both hands. It is generally used in the opening cape work.

This move is usually employed to finish off a series of verónicas. The matador gathers the cape on his hip, turns the bull sharply to stop his charge and leave him fixed in one spot.

As the name implies, the pase natural is the basic pass with the muleta. This is a dangerous pass because the sword is not used to spread the cloth, thus presenting a smaller target to the bull. It is also difficult because the left hand must control the speed and direction of the cloth while the right holds the sword.

The great Manolete, Manuel Rodriguez, considered by many as the greatest matador ever, created this deft maneuver that uses his name. It involves passing the bull behind you. An easy move to do badly, when Manolete performed it, it was truly regal.

Impeachment: "Wait And See"

By FRITS GEURTSEN

Reactions and feelings about the possible impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon are varied throughout the five college area. Although a sizable proportion of the student population in each of the schools holds anti-Nixon sentiments, the number of those supporting impeachment is considerably less. There is also a widespread attitude of "let's see what happens next" among students.

A newly-formed, local group, the Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon, is holding an open meeting tonight at six-thirty in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The purpose of this meeting is to plan and discuss further actions to be taken both locally and nationally in regard to the impeachment.

A spokesman for the group said that the march on Washington planned for this weekend was off, but went on to say "We are sending several representatives to New York City this weekend. The National Student Association is holding a meeting there and the agenda has been changed to include the issue of impeachment. We hope to get some national student action going. We don't think that this is the time for a strike or anything of that sort, however."

The student population of Hampshire College in a meeting of the entire student body voted on four proposals concerning the impeachment. Those proposals were:

1) that Hampshire College, as an institution, call on Congress to proceed with measures necessary in the impeachment of the President.

2) that Hampshire College, as an institution, ask Rep. Silvio Conte to publicly state his intention to vote in favor of impeachment.

3) that Hampshire College, as an institution, urge all members of Nixon's administration to voluntarily resign their posts.

4) that Hampshire College, as an institution, give aid to the American Civil Liberties Union in their pressuring of the House of Representatives for impeachment.

The first, second, and fourth proposals were passed; the third was defeated. One of the students commented that the majority there felt that it would be more effective to pass these motions through the entire institution rather than just the student body. A student spokesman said that there was a great deal of mail in the form of letters, telegrams, and cards leaving Hampshire on a daily basis. There were also numerous petitions being passed around.

Cele Gardner, the president of the student body at Smith College, said that no organized action was presently being considered by them in regard to the impeachment. She went on to say "We held a rally here last Sunday and there were many of us present at the rally on the Amherst Common Tuesday night, but beyond that we're waiting to see what UMass does and what kind of statement they issue before we do anything on our own. There are however, many students doing things on their own, such as sending letters and telegrams. For the most part though, we're waiting to see what happens."

Ellie McGrath, editor of the student newspaper at Mount Holyoke College, said that a mass meeting attended by several hundred students had been held at noon on Wednesday. "A lot of the students here feel that the time for action hasn't come yet. We're all definitely anti-Nixon - there was no doubt about that during the meeting - but the general feeling was that impeachment at this time would not be very practical at all and might be more detrimental to the country than the alternatives." She said that many letters and telegrams had been sent from the school both to Washington and to local politicians.

Amherst College appeared to be the only school where the release of the tapes by Nixon altered the feelings of the students to any noticible extent. As one student put it "There seems to be too much going against impeachment right now - the grounds for it aren't nearly as clear as they could be, the lines of a succession are all screwed up right now, etc." Another student mentioned that a lot of parents were beginning to share not only the dismay but the outrage of the students as well.

Central Area Crime: "Unsubstantiated"

By MIKE ALLAIN

Director of Security David Johnston refuted charges Tuesday of a soaring crime rate in Central Area allegedly due to the relocation of two roving security guards.

The charges appeared in a letter in last Thursday's Collegian, in which Timothy O'Brien, the Vice President and Secretary of the Central Area Council, stated that two assaults have occurred this semester between Baker House and the Infirmary, and that crime in Central is now "tied with Southwest for the highest" on campus.

Johnston said the charges were "completely unsubstantiated."

"We have no record of any assaults in Central Area so far this semester," he said. Johnston added that there is no way of determining whether the Central crime rate is equal to that of Southwest.

"Crime rates are not broken down by areas right now, and they haven't been in the past year," he said.

O'Brien told the Collegian that the charges were not verified, but said that the CAC is becoming increasingly concerned about the threat of crime in Central.

Central had three security guards last semester--two rovers and one guard stationed inside a dormitory. The removal of the two roving guards has created a "feeling of insecurity" among residents, according to Central officials, although there is no evidence of any increase in crime."

"The whole idea of security is really a feeling," says Larry Marcus, a spokesman from the Central Area Office in Hills. "And the removal of those guards has removed the sense of security."

The Central Area Council is the second residential group to voice disapproval over the shifting of ten roving night security guards to

What do they sell at the candy counter? Well for starters: gum base, sugar, dextrose, corn syrup, softeners, natural and artificial flavors, artificial color...

What's Behind All That Candy

By SUE ADLEY

Walking up the front steps to the Student Union and then entering the lobby, one can see a very busy place.

Jars upon jars of colorful and tempting sweets line the shelves. This is well-known to UMies as the "candy counter" or, more formally, the "Union News and Sweet Shop".

Russell Hanks has been the manager since January. His job includes being responsible for the entire operation of the counter; ensuring the security of the money; purchasing merchandise; supervising inventory and personnel; keeping records and financial reports, making recommendations to the Campus Center and generally making sure everything runs correctly.

"The original counter," Hanks said, "was opened in 1959. It was somewhat similar to the present one, except that it was smaller and didn't offer nearly what we have now. It sold mainly cigarettes, tobacco, newspapers, some candy and cigarette papers and lighters. It was made of plywood panels that were locked at night. It was not very attractive, to say the least."

During the semester break last January, the present counter was installed. "We felt a need for a more attractive counter with more products. The old counter didn't need much renovation. We just build in front of it, made more room and filled the shelves with a wider variety of merchandise. The old shelves in back are still used for storage," Hanks said.

Bernard Wilkes, the retail service manager of the Campus Center, was one of the people who helped to plan the new arrangement. Wilkes said, "Previous to the renovation, the counter was a deficit operation. Something had to be done to revitalize it. We try to give the students the best deal for their money and still make some profit to keep the operation running."

The Union News and Sweet Shop has many suppliers. "Our major supplier of bulk candy is a company called 'Penny Lane' in Valley Stream, New York. The name is appropriate, for in supplying places with bulk candy, they are trying to bring back memories of the old-time candy shops and general stores," Hanks said. Sources of bar candy and gum, according to Hanks, are the E&J Tobacco Co. of Northampton and the Polep Bros. Co. in Springfield.

"We have a supplier for imported cookies and candy--the Van Melle Co. They make natural products without preservatives. These appeal to many of the people and are very good. We try to give our line a good variety to serve the tastes of everyone," Hanks said. "Cookies are fairly new on the counter, too, and we are going to expand this line with more cookies and cupcakes."

The newspaper section is very popular, selling nearly all local papers such as the Hampshire Gazette, the Amherst Record, the Greenfield Recorder, and the Holyoke Transcript, which is new to the line. "We have two main newspaper suppliers, Hastings in Amherst and Holyoke News. Aside from local papers, we have some semi-underground papers such as The Phoenix and Boston After Dark. We've recently added another which is out of Boston, called the Real Paper. Of course, there are some papers that we can't get that some people want, such as the Christian Science Monitor and the Washington Post," Hanks said.

The counter is busiest on weekdays and fairly busy on weekends.

Where does the money go? According to Hanks, it is deposited, as money from any revenue-producing area, in the Cashier's Office, and then back into the Campus Center.

"Prices are a main part of the operation," said Hanks. "It's impossible to maintain a consistent price scale since they are constantly on the rise. There's really nothing we can do about it. The market is affecting everybody. We try to ease up on student total cost although we don't have much control over it. Cigarettes are still 48 cents a pack here, and that is about the lowest price around," he said.

The candy counter sold bus tickets until about a week ago. this tickets until about a week ago. This service is now located in the said. "They just couldn't be sold at the same counter anymore. It was too confusing and needed improvement. It's apparently working quite well so far in the hotel lobby. It took the pressure off my personnel, and it's better for the students because now we can give them quicker and better service. New personnel had to be hired and trained for this, but since last week, the bus sales have greatly increased."

Hanks also said that a proposal has been made for a campus travel agency, providing air, sea and land travel services, but nothing definite has been decided on this yet.

All counter personnel are students. Hanks said, "We have twenty-five part-time student workers on the payroll, and soon we will have up to thirty. There are also two permanent employees, so the ratio of student help to permanent help is quite high. We aren't short of help, but in between a class, I could have up to fifteen people working at the counter, and we'd still have a few people waiting. It's just really busy."

On future plans for the candy counter, Hanks said it would be premature to make any statement right now. As far as his general feelings, "I believe it's going well, even beyond our expectations. Sales have increased tremendously. It seems that what we're doing is greatly helping the students and the Campus Center. The renovation money was very well spent."

The candy cart in the Campus Center concourse is an extension of the counter upstairs. Eve Enright is one of the people who sells candy there. She has had the job since the first week of classes, and works two days a week, seven hours each day. "I enjoy it here," she said. "I used to work at the counter upstairs for awhile, but I enjoy this more because it's not as busy, and there are more people to see."

Ms. Enright said the cart is very busy each day, and that people seemed to be pleased with the varieties of candy. "People are usually very nice to me," she said. "Many of them talk to me and even offer me some of the candy they buy. I've never heard any negative feelings toward the service, and if someone wants a variety of candy that isn't on the cart, they usually go upstairs to get it or buy another kind. Most of the time, though, we have something for everyone because the cart is stocked with candy for all tastes."

The Receiving End Of The Student Activities Tax

By BUFFY SPENCER

There exists a group of students, some visible, some less visible, putting in hour after hour of their time to keep UMass organization going. But which students from which groups are paid by Student funds, how much, and how justifiable is it?

In an MDC interview, Paul Hamel, Student Senate Treasurer, explained that part of the often-cursed Student Activities Tax goes to paying student positions in six RSO groups. These can be found under category 44 in the blue budget book of the Senate.

Black Mass Communications is an organization putting out radio programs such as Ujamma Drum, Images, and Black Sounds on WMUA and WFCR. Student Activities Tax allows for one undergraduate co-ordinator to be paid $25 for 40 weeks.

The tax also pays security people under the Concert Committee and mechanics under the Student Automotive Workshop.

But the bulk is used toward Collegian people, Student Government, and the Student Transit Service.

This year $11,760 is going to Collegian personnel. The breakdown is as follows: Editor-in-Chief gets $40 a week for 32 weeks, Business Manager and Managing Editor get $30 a week for 40 and 32 weeks respectively, News Editor, Sports Editor, Photo Editor, Fine Arts Editor, and Editorial Editor get $25 a week for 32 weeks, Head Darkroom Technician, Assistant Sports Editor, Assistant News Editor, Assistant Managing Editor get $15 for 32 weeks, Issue Editors get $10 an issue for 150 issues, Circulation Manager gets $10 a week for 32 weeks, Ad Layout gets $3 an issue for 150 issues.

It is stipulated that no one person shall receive money for more than one position at one time.

In the Student Senate only the President, Speaker, and Treasurer are paid at $150 a month for nine months and $300 a month for three summer months. Total 444 expenses for fiscal 73-74 are $6,750. There is a bill to be acted on soon in regard to paying the chairman. Student Senators are not paid.

Monies go to the Student Senate Transit Service to pay salaries for drivers, dispatchers and administrators during the summer, and year round field trips.

Most people feel that these salaries are justifiable, according to Mike Gregory who is filling in as Treasurer this week. Many, including those at the receiving end, believe that they are working for less than what their efforts are worth.

Non-Traditional Students

Come And Meet

By DEB GOGUEN

Non-Traditional Students, individuals returning to college after a break in their education and adults who have never been to college before, are forming a mutual support group which will provide them with a chance to share resources.

The group plans to meet every Thursday at noon in the Old Chapel but has not drawn up a formal charter because it wants to remain flexible enough to meet the needs of the people involved. It is the first group of Non-Traditional Students ever initiated on campus and it wants to remain self determining.

Veterans, students who withdrew from college and are returning, housewives who are just returning to school because of the influence of women's groups and because they felt the need to grow, and people who were doing social or other types of work and need credentials to become more effective or to gain a better position, are all Non-Traditional Students. Those in the School of Continuing Education and members of programs such as University Without Walls also are considered Non-Traditional. Many have given up good jobs and important commitments to return.

Most of these people have a decided advantage in that they possess a strong sense of priorities and they have a clear vision of the goals they are trying to achieve. Many have worked to change the system. Their practical experience often supplies them with perspective when dealing with theory in the classroom.

Some Non-Traditional Students enrolled here are changing careers because circumstances in their lives have opened their eyes. Almost all make great sacrifices to return. One man in his 40's had a son who got into legal trouble and is returning to school to become "a different kind of lawyer" who will help other people's sons who are in trouble and need guidance. Another woman with seven children takes three buses to get to campus each morning.

"Coming to school has to be the most important thing I've done in my life," says Gloria Schoen, a Non-Traditional Student who decided to return to college because she felt she could be much more effective in her work with a degree. Jane Holappa, a mother of four teenage children, is a member of the Academic Matters Council of the Student Senate. There is an entire community of Non-Traditional Students on campus who have never had a chance to meet each other and lend each other support.

Some Non-Traditional Students who come here feel isolated, give up, and leave after a time without accomplishing their objectives. Many know few people on campus and some have to deal with disapproval of their families, friends, and others. Gloria Schoen says that she personally felt a need for a better opportunity to meet other Non-Traditional Students and spoke to many more people who also were concerned. These feelings prompted a nucleus of six people to decide to hold Thursday meetings at the Old Chapel.

SBA Sponsors Career Conference

By MARK PARISI

The UMass School of Business Administration Undergraduate Advisory Council, in conjunction with the Business Club, has announced that it will hold a Career Conference Day, Wednesday, Nov. 7, at the Campus Center.

The conference will feature many speakers from the areas of marketing, accounting, and general business and finance, as well as other areas of interest. In order to enable all students to attend, no business courses will be held that day.

Harold E. Roush, director of college relations for RCA, will be the featured speaker at a buffet luncheon at noon. The day-long event will begin at 8:30 a.m. Tickets will be on sale until Nov. 2, on the SBA first floor lobby for $2.50.

Mrs. Valena Morrison, coordinator of University Conference Services, has attributed the idea for the conference to Dr. Wendell Smith, and Ms. Betty Andelman, along with the Undergraduate Advisory Council.

Mrs. Morrison stated, "The conference was outstandingly planned and organized by the committee and holds sound educational value and experience. The University Conference Service welcomes any RSO sponsored groups to hold conferences of this nature."

The Frat That Helps People

By CHRIS WALTER

Would you believe a fraternity that doesn't even have a frat house? The fraternity is Alpha Pi Omega and it is a service fraternity.

According to Frank Evans, a spokesman for the frat, the purpose of APO is "to perform service for the community." Last year's record is impressive, with $1,000 raised in the APO-sponsored Heart Fund Walk, $700 raised in the frat's Las Vegas night, and over 11,000 pints of blood in their blood drive.

While these activities plus the arcon guide service are standards which are run by APO every year, the frat is also willing to take on requests. "People call us and ask us to do something, and then we decide on it according to its worth" said Evans. This year's requests include supplying ushers for the theater departments "Moon for the Misbegotten" and "Jacques Brel." One of the requests last year was from a woman in Northampton. She was about to lose her mortgage because she couldn't afford to paint her house, "So APO took the job, supplied the paint" and the woman still lives there, said Evans.

"APO" said Evans, "is the largest fraternity in the world, with over six-hundred chapters." Membership ranges from 10 to 100 members. APO at UMass presently has "about twenty members" according to Evans. Membership is open to all University males and interested persons should contact John Weiner or attend one of the fraternity's smokers.

"Rhetoric? It Was Interesting, But..."

By DENNY MATTEAU

In a small survey taken last Tuesday, the Collegian found that most students would prefer unrequired rhetoric courses over required ones.

Nineteen of the twenty students queried at random in South-West and the Campus Center said they felt that most students would still take at least one rhetoric course, and would get more out of it, if they weren't hassled into making quick, rash choices.

This sampling of opinion was prompted by the fact that the Faculty Senate has seen a need for examination of the Rhetoric Department, and formed the Campus Committee on Communications Skills (CCCS), which released a rough draft of its findings on October 12. The committee, chaired by John Muller of the English Department, found that "a rhetoric program should provide students with at least a minimally acceptable level of communication skills."

One of these skills is arguing, taught in Prof. Malcolm Sillars' Rhetoric 100 class. According to Muller, "There's an awful lot of power to being able to argue in samll groups these days. Everything is done in committees."

Rhetoric 100 is part of the effort to economize within the department of concentrating on actual skill development and dropping "frill" courses. The CCCS stimates that 60 to 80 per cent of the freshmen need help in these skills, and has suggested a "lab and tutor program" as a possible aid for students who would rather forego a full course, but still need help.

Diane Simpson of Pierpont summed up the feeling expressed by most students when she said, "Rhetoric? It was interesting, but I don't remember much. It was last spring."

SW Seeks Master

By STEVE TETREAULT

The Southwest staff decided recently to form a Data Collecting Committee which would aid in finding a successor to the soon to resign Master-Director John Hunt.

This Data Committee would evaluate the job description and solicit opinions of students, staff, and faculty, as well as members of the administration to determine what qualifications are wanted in the new area chief.

The Committee would then weigh the results of the polling, and appoint a Search Committee to find a person fulfilling these qualifications.

The Southwest staff set the next meeting, at which the Committee will be officially formed, for 4 p.m. today, in MacKimmie Head of Residence apartment.

daytime parking duty, earlier this semester.

A group of Resident Heads from Southwest sought, and will receive, additional security guards beginning Saturday. Three guards will be moved from parking into Southwest, while seven others will remain temporarily on parking assignments.

The ten guards were originally shifted to insure the smooth implementation of the new parking plan, and they will be gradually reassigned as the parking system improves, said Johnston.

The parking plan is a "complete success" thus far, with "light traffic, few traffic jams, and plenty of room in every lot," Johnston added.

Student opinions and views solicited by MDC on the candy counter and cart were generally positive. One person said he usually buys something at the counter "every other day" while another said she makes a purchase there "once a week". Other people summed up their reactions: "It has everything I want," "It's great," "It's different," and an emphatic "IT'S TEMPTING!!!!"

Bop-Shoo-Bop Moves And Grooves

By DAVID LETTERS

The Bop-Shoo-Bop rock and roll revue greazed many a mind with uptempo singing, good rock dancing and a swad of nasty rock lingo last night at the S.U.B.

The dance was billed a musical return to the 50s, and that's what it was. UMass greasers numbered over three hundred in full grease as they rocked across the floor to sounds of Chuck Berry, Dion, Little Anthony, the Big Bopper, the Coasters and many of Bob-Shoo-Bops own tunes.

As rock stageshows go, this group layed it all down, kicked the audience in the ass and got them dancing.

When apparent attendance for the evening was low, the group took to the hallways and bars and layed out their wares. Down to the Blue Wall, onto the stage, a loud burp, a demand for attention and then one hell of an unexpected surprise for the suds soppin patrons of the Wall. 'Runaround Sue' had the beer drinkers in a howl and "Blue Moon" had them dancing. After the impromptu set they brought people to the Student Union ballroom.

For two and one half hours they rocked, bopped, and sung hits of the fifties.

The brave started dancing with shoes but quickly discarded those mod items of the seventies. Unlike Sha-Na-Na, Bob-Shoo-Bop choreographed their set to perform and have everyone dance.

Their visual performance was far above the usual rock show as the group offered a wide variety of fifties musical styles. From Little Richard to the Beach Boys the group jumped across the stage, performing splits, grooves and rolls. They had everyone stomping their feet for 'More' when the group smoothly put down some fine acapela.

Digg on it daddio-those dixie peach mothers from Philadelphia really did come on last night, can you see- all- right- you can- rock and roll held on so strong last night- hell, babe, let's go to Revere Beach for a burger a frappe.

SOLDIER BOY - "Soldier boy, Oh my little soldier boy. I'll be true to you." One of the many imitations and numbers the "Bop-Shoo-Bop" rock and roll revue performed at the SUB last night.

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Reporter

If people ever needed a year to escape from, it has been 1973. Watergate has destroyed confidence in our elected officials, our economic system seems to be hopelessly snarled, and potential military "hot spots" seem to be everywhere.

So it is no wonder that this country is experiencing a rock 'n roll revival, a form of escapism for most if its enthusiasts. "It's nostalgic, not real," says Marjorie "Slick" Dick, a junior math major who enjoys sporting saddle shoes, white bucks and a long dress nearly totally covered by a letter sweater.

Mark Mulrine, a member of Bop-Shoo-Bop, says people are getting tired of "message music." And he could not be more correct. Bob Dyland introduced young people to many of the world's injustices and hypocricies. Other musicians also began making their music relevant to today's society.

But in 1973, many young people have had their fill of "music message." The message is often quite depressing.

But there is very little depression in early rock 'n roll. Johnny Be Good is not a song about Ehrlichman, In the Still of the Night is not about Watergate, and Sea Cruise is not about the Seventh Fleet. Indeed it's more pleasant to listen to the falsetto voices singing Under the Boardwalk than to hear the Kinks sing 20th Century Schitzoid Man.

Sophomore Bob Kane feels that to get the full benefit from a revival concert, he must also be attired properly. So he puts grease in his hair, rolls up his sleeves and wears dungarees just short enough so that his white socks may be seen by others. "It's a real good time," he says.

What is ironical about this situation, is that people in 1993 might have a 1973 music revival. "Remember the days when all we had to worry about was the collapse of the government and Nuclear war?" they might say to themselves.

Perhaps they'll comb their hair down over their ears, wear T-shirts with cartoon characters imprinted on them, and pretend their non-filtered cigarettes are joints. Perhaps they'll also learn to speak in hip 1973 talk: "Can you dig it man?"

But they'll never duplicate 1973, just as revivalists today will not duplicate the 1950s. But it will still be, to some, a great fantasy land to escape to from reality.

Senate Votes To Continue Boycott

By FRAN BROCK

"We're not going to give up the boycott until we get the contracts!" said Charles March, representative from the United Farm Workers, at last night's Student Senate meeting.

Those not favoring the retaining of the bill to boycott non-unionized lettuce felt that the students were never given the opportunity to vote on whether they wanted the boycott.

The predominate argument in favor of the boycott, presented by Theresa Carr, chairperson of the Committee on Poverty and Joanne Levenson, co-coordinator of the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee, was the fact that the workers supported the United Farm Workers Union, and therefore, the students should support what they want.

These people also felt that the Teamsters Union did not offer the farm workers the needed changes in housing, wages and protection that they required.

Presenting the other side of the issue were Commissioner Chandler of the State Agricultural Department, Dr. Chester Cross of the experimental station at Cranberry Pond and Greg Finn of the Mass. Farm Bureau.

These gentlemen argued that the workers were not given a choice, and therefore deserve to have a National Agriculture Labor Act allowing labor unions for farm workers.

They also felt that there was not enough factual evidence proving that pesticides harmed the workers or that wages were as low as those advocating the boycott deemed them to be.

The Senate decided, after much debate, that the boycott would continue.

It was rumored, however, that a motion will be brought forth, asking for a referendum to be put before the students.

Nick Apostola, president of SGA placed a motion before the Senate Advocating Senate support of impeachment procedures against President Nixon. The motion was carried.

Although most motions were postponed or tabled because of the time needed to discuss the boycott, some were dealt with.

Where Did All The Buses Go?

By MARY LAWSON

The Student Senate Transit Service is only available to those organizations which are funded by the University, Jerry Scanlon, Assistant Dean of Students and Coordinator of Student Activities said in a Collegian interview. He said that there are only three buses available for field trips, and considering repairs and maintenance this usually is narrowed down to two.

Although there are 13 transit buses used for shuttleruns, they were received through the Federal Department of Transportation Grant, and cannot be used for field trips. This was part of the stipulation of the D.O.T. grant. The University made the agreement that they would be used strictly for shuttleruns, Scanlon said. The buses are not designed for anything else.

Scanlon said, "With only the two buses available for field trips, requests far outweigh availability." He explained that if an organization is not funded through the University it would be an infringement on the buslines in this area to permit the organization to use the less expensive Student Senate Transit Service. Being funded by the University includes funding through labs fees and funding through the Student Senate through the Student Activities Fee and through departmental funds.

There will be a meeting of all persons interested in learning layout work for prospective work, Collegian, tonight at 5:30. It will be a class set up with a former Editor-And-Chief serving as the instructor.

Edmundo Velazquez, president, said that, "All members are required to attend the workshop."

The workshop will be held in the Campus Center, this Saturday in rooms 803-804-808 from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on Sunday in rooms 917-905-909 from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m.

War In The Mideast

Israel: This Isn't The Last Cease-Fire

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP) - Twenty-five years and six cease-fires ago, Yehuda Paradise was wounded in the left leg, in the first Arab-Israeli war. Later an exploding shell injured his wife, and now his son has been wounded in a new war.

Yehuda Paradise doesn't believe in cease-fires. And he doesn't believe that the latest war is the last one.

"It's like trying to converse with dolphins," he said. "Maybe the Arabs have a language we can talk to them in. But no one has figured it out yet."

Paradise is a 49-year-old scientific consultant and editor - and an invalid. He's usually not so cynical.

But in talking about his experiences with the cease-fires of 1948, 1956, and 1967, his feelings about the chances for peace in the Middle East are a graph of disillusionment, plunging downward.

Paradise came to Palestine from Berlin in 1934.

"When I was 12," he said, "I saw Jewish settlers brought in with small holes in their chests and big holes in their backs. I grew up in insecurity and violence."

He was working in Israeli army intelligence when the news of the first cease-fire came in 1948. He had been shot in the leg.

"So when I heard the news I thought, 'Thank God.' I was idealistic and naive. I thought we'd have trade with the Arabs and maybe even regional cooperation," he said.

The first cease-fire died within 10 days, replaced by an armistice in 1949 - cease-fire No. 2.

Arabs: 'This Cease-Fire Is Nonsense'

By ELIAS ANTAR
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO (AP) - They were five Egyptians sitting around a table, sipping glasses of dark, sweet tea and talking about the cease-fire.

They talked Tuesday evening in a crowded cafe in a working-class district of Cairo - two traffic policemen, a wounded soldier, a young civil servant and the owner of a bookstall.

As everywhere in Cairo since the Mideast war began, the radio was on, reporting news of the first abortive cease-fire on the Suez Canal and the U.N. Security Council meeting called to deal with violations.

"This cease-fire is nonsense," one of the policemen said. "I don't know why we accepted it. We were winning. Why should we stop fighting?"

"Ahmed, maybe the president Sadat has other considerations in mind," said the other. "He must know what he's doing."

The radio announced the Security Council had issued another cease-fire resolution, sponsored by the United States and the Soviet Union.

"Just words," commented the civil servant. "Who needs the United Nations or the big powers? We have our army and all the newspapers say we are winning. If it were up to me, I would not accept a cease-fire."

AID AND COMFORT FOR AN ENEMY-An Israeli soldier with a minor head wound gives a blindfolded Egyptian prisoner of war a drink from his canteen just about the time the cease-fire deadline was scheduled to go into effect. Fighting appeared to continue well past the deadline, with the Israelis claiming Egyptians were violating the cease-fire and Egyptians counter-claiming Israelis were trying to find a pretext for truce violations.

Israel Reports Calm; Ceasefire Marred

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel reported calm on both Middle East war fronts last night. President Nixon was said to be confident the fragile U.N. truce is beginning to take hold.

Cairo radio said President Anwar Sadat of Egypt appealed to Nixon and the Soviet Communist leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, to dispatch American and Russian troops to help secure the already marred cease-fire along the Suez front.

Egypt's Middle East News Agency said Sadat also asked for an urgent U.N. Security Council meeting to discuss "repeated Israeli cease-fire violations" on both sides of the Suez Canal.

It was not clear whether the Egyptian appeals were made during the day, when fighting was reported still under way, or later.

In Washington, a White House spokesman said no request for U.S. troops had been received from Sadat.

"The United States has no intention of sending troops to the Middle East and we hope no other outside parties will send troops to the Middle East," the spokesman said.

Israeli military spokesmen said their tanks clashed in daylight with Egyptian armor and warplanes at the southern end of the Suez front in a try by Cairo to rescue Egyptian soldiers cut off in the Sinai Desert by an Israeli pincer maneuver.

But the Israeli briefer, Col. Machman Karni, claimed the Egyptian attack was repulsed and the Egyptian 3rd Army remained on the eastern bank of the canal, ringed in by Israeli steel.

The Tel Aviv command first issued a communique accusing Egypt of a "massive" ground and air attack near Suez city at the southern end of the canal about seven hours after the second cease-fire took effect at 7 a.m.

In UN Egypt Charges Israel Of New War

By WILLIAM N. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Egypt charged before the United Nations Security Council Wednesday night that Israel is waging a new war along the Suez Canal. It said the United States and the Soviet Union should send in troops to help enforce a ceasefire.

The Soviet Union said Egypt was "entirely justified" in asking for troops from the two superpowers. It accused Israel of banditry and declared that the United States bears the responsibility for making Israel observe the truce.

Soviet Ambassador Jacob A. Malik, in a speech before the council, also called for sanctions against Israel and the rupture of diplomatic relations with the Jewish state. Malik did not introduce a resolution asking those measures.

Foreign Minister Mohamed H. el-Zayyat of Egypt declared that even while he was speaking in the third urgent Security Council session this week he had received word from Cairo that Israel refused to allow U.N. observers into Israeli-controlled areas of the Suez front.

Bork Denies White House Influence

Watergate Investigations Continue Unabated

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Saying he was too busy with the Middle East crisis to write a speech, President Nixon cancelled a planned Wednesday night address to the nation on the Watergate tapes controversy. He promised, instead, a Thursday night news conference.

One of the men in the middle of the tapes controversy, Acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork, vowed Wednesday that he would fight the White House in court if necessary to obtain confidential records for the Watergate grand jury and would resign if he felt his hands were being tied by the White House.

At the same time, the House proceeded with an inquiry on impeachment of Nixon and the Senate scheduled a hearing to question the man whose ouster created the impeachment furor.

During a 45-minute news conference, Bork, the man who last Saturday fired the special Watergate prosecutor, said Nixon gave him instructions by letter and in a personal conversation Saturday night. Bork quoted Nixon as saying, "I understand that you are devoted to the principles of law and I want you to carry out these prosecutions fully."

Bork said he does not feel he is bound by Nixon's order to the former special Watergate prosecutor to stop trying to obtain White House tapes and records.

"I am ready to follow any procedure, by agreement or otherwise, to get the evidence. . ." he said. "If we have to use judicial processes - no procedure is ruled out."

Meanwhile, Speaker Carl Albert said the preliminary House inquiry on impeachment of Nixon will proceed. Albert said the inquiry was unaffected by Nixon's decision Tuesday to comply with a court order to turn over nine White House tape recordings and assorted documents which may yield evidence for a Watergate grand jury.

The tapes initially were subpoenaed for the grand jury by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox whom Nixon fired last Saturday. It was that firing, coupled with the resignation of Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson and dismissal of Asst. Atty. Gen. William D. Ruckelshaus, which triggered the impeachment inquiry.

"I hope it is expeditious," Albert said of the inquiry, "and I hope it lays this thing to rest one way or another."

Albert noted the House Judiciary Committee had been mandated to make inquiries into impeachment resolutions or bring impeachment charges against Nixon. The committee's chairman, Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., said it was possible his panel would subpoena administration records for use in its probe.

After a two-hour closed session, the committee said it did not discuss calling other witnesses, but chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., said he felt the panel would also want to question Richardson and Ruckelshaus who were forced from office after refusing to carry out Nixon's order to fire Cox.

During the closed committee session, action was blocked on a resolution by a group of Democratic liberals on the panel. The resolution called on Nixon to reinstate Cox temporarily until Congress acts on legislation to provide by law an independent Watergate prosecutor not subject to presidential dismissal.

Although Nixon's attorney Charles Alan Wright told Sirica the tapes and documents would be transmitted as soon as possible, it apparently had not reached the judge by Wednesday afternoon. In an interview, Sirica said he was very happy with Nixon's decision to turn over the material.

Even though Sirica will get the tapes, it seemed apparent that it would be months until the public finds out what is on them - if the public ever finds out at all. Sirica will listen to the tapes alone and secretly. If he deems any material on them to be evidence needed by the Watergate grand jury, he will give the panel that material.

More Water Under The Gate

News Analysis

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's sudden decision to yield the nine Watergate tapes eventually may provide the answers to two critical questions raised throughout the legal arguments:

-What is on the tapes?

-What will be the effect of the precedent set by President Nixon's compliance with a subpoena?

The public will get the answer to the first question. People may have to wait awhile because the tapes will become grand jury evidence, protected by strict rules of secrecy.

For example, it will become known if the charges support ousted White House counsel John W. Dean's version of the meetings in the Oval Office or the versions by other participants, if perjury charges are brought.

One thing prosecutors don't expect to find on the tapes is evidence of presidential involvement in the attempt to thwart the investigation of the Watergate break-in.

Members of the prosecution force have never believed there was definitive evidence on the tapes that the President knew of or participated in the cover-up.

The question of the prcedent set may be harder to answer. The answer may not come until some future presidential administration.

Much will depend on the attitude of the prosecutors.

Will Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Peterson be as insistent as was former special prosecutor Archibald Cox that he get all the evidence in White House files?

Cox had pressed not only for the tapes but for documents related to a wide range of matters under investigation by his office, including the ITT antitrust settlement and allegations of improprieties involving campaign contributions.

Cox Inquiry

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee agreed Wednesday to launch a public investigation into the ousting of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Cox, who balked at being told by President Nixon not to take any further court actions to obtain tapes, notes or memoranda of presidential conversations, is to be the leadoff witness next Monday.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said he will ask Cox whether he thinks he was fired because he was "too hot on a trial leading to the White House."

Although no action was taken on calling other witnesses, chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., said that in his judgment the committee also will want to hear from Elliot L. Richardson and William D. Ruckelshaus.

Kennedy and others offered a resolution calling on the President to reinstate Cox pending legislation to establish a special prosecutor. Action on this, however, was blocked by Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R-Neb., the ranking minority member of the committee.

Hruska said a decision on it should be held up until the committee has taken Cox's testimony and hears what Nixon has to say at his news conference Thursday night.

Sirica: The Nation's Tape Reviewer

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — One day soon, Federal Judge John J. Sirica will become the nation's premier reviewer of tape recordings. His task: to seek incriminating material and, perhaps, to test the veracity of the President of the United States.

"It's part of my job to do this," Sirica said Wednesday, shrugging his shoulders. "I'll do my very best."

Sirica, the 69-year-old chief judge of the U.S. District Court, isn't a man to duck an issue. He feels the pressure — it's been there all year — but it doesn't worry him.

While the rest of official Washington wondered last weekend what he would do if President Nixon persisted in refusal to turn over the controversial tapes, Sirica was off to Connecticut on a fatherly task: seeing about college for his daughter.

Tuesday, when Nixon lawyer Charles Alan Wright announced the President's astounding reversal on the tapes, Sirica's face showed his surprise.

"I was very happy the President did what he did," Sirica said in an interview as he tackled the technical problems of his self-imposed chore: How to listen to the tapes, where, with what security and what help.

"I think it was a great thing for the country, a great act," he said of the Nixon decision. "It relieved the nation. It relieved me."

During the trial of the seven Watergate conspirators last January, Sirica exercised his judicial prerogative in pushing for revelations. He deferred final sentences for six of the defendants as a club to make them talk.

Others have credited Sirica's tenacity with opening the mind-numbing flood of developments. Asked about this, he almost dictates the reply:

"The judge never made a statement that he should be given any credit for what happened since the trial of the original seven defendants," he said. "People said it. I didn't."

Each time there is a news development, Sirica's office receives sacks of mail and telegrams-messages by the thousands from the public, other judges, law students. Tuesday alone brought 156 telegrams.

"I try not to let the press see them," he said. "On the whole they are favorable to the way I tried to handle the matter. A lot of people write that 'you restored our faith in justice.' Others ask, 'what are you trying to do?'"

Next March 19, when he reaches 70, Sirica's tenure as chief judge will be over, but he has the option of staying on as an active judge or a senior judge.

Most judges like one big case to cap a career - and Watergate must rank as one of the century's biggest. But Sirica indicates he's not ready to retire.

"I like being a trial judge," he said. "I like people. I've never been a person to sleep eight hours and since this case began I have found myself beginning work at 4 and 5 a.m."

Sirica was appointed to the federal bench by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1957 after a 30-year career as prosecutor and trial attorney. His office is adorned with pictures of his wife and three children.

Troy Trial Near End

By MARY E. THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - A three week hearing into charges of judicial misconduct against Dorchester District Court Judge Jerome P. Troy drew to a close Wednesday night as Troy's lawyer presented his final arguments.

Attorney Lawrence O'Donnell said in his summation that the Supreme Judicial Court, which disbarred Troy July 26 and enjoined him from sitting on the bench, does not have the power to prevent him from returning to the bench.

O'Donnell also emphasized that he sees no problem in having a disbarred lawyer on the bench. "I think it would be a delight to have a nonlawyer on the bench," he said.

In the early part of his arguments, O'Donnell spent little time of the actual charges made against Troy by the Supreme Judicial Court: lying under oath, neglecting his judicial duties, using a court officer during court hours to drive a bulldozer at his private development project, accepting free legal work from two lawyers he appointed to represent indigents, willfully and illegally ordering the filling of tidal flats and soliciting a political contribution from a lawyer practicing in his court.

O'Donnell spent nearly 15 minutes in a tirade against The Boston Globe, which he said "caters to the counter culture with the stale stench of stereotyped bigotry."

He charged Lt. Gov. Donald Dwight, who has chaired the hearings with being biased and urged him to disqualify himself.

Attorney William G. Young, legal counsel to Gov. Francis W. Sargent, presented a summation for the Executive Council and went over most of the original charges.

Young said the Supreme Judicial Court has the constitutional power to enjoin Troy permanently from sitting on the bench, but does not have the power to remove him from the bench.

According to his arguments, that means Troy could continue to be a judge in name only, collecting his salary but not sitting in a court.

The Court said it will make its decision on the governor's petition to remove Troy from the bench in two weeks.

Chinese: Just War On Part Of Arabs

By JOHN RODERICK
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — The Chinese Communists, convinced that the Mideast conflict is a just war on the part of the Arabs, have criticized the Soviet Union and the United States for trying to end it.

Peking's Hsinhua news agency, spelling out the Chinese position Wednesday, said the Soviet Union and the United States have been consulting behind the backs of the Arab people "to plot jointly to put out the blazing fire of this just war."

The Chinese did not vote on the two cease-fire resolutions at the United Nations.

Hsinhua acknowledged that Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin conferred secretly with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. But the news agency did not conclude that the Egyptian leader was also involved in the "collusion" to end the war.

The news agency repeated an old Chinese charge that Moscow and Washington are engaging in big power politics, centering around the grab for Middle East oil.

"A no-war, no-peace" situation suits the United States and Soviet Union better, Hsinhua said, than the resolution of the Arab-Israeli problem through war or through concessions which would recognize Arab claims.

Chinese Communist Chairman Mao Tse-tung spelled out China's views on just and unjust wars in a 1938 essay.

Maternity Units Could Be Cut

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Public health officials are considering stringent new regulations which could cut the number of maternity units in Massachusetts hospitals by 43 per cent. Dr. Ann Pettigrew, a consultant to the state's public health department, said the state needs maternity units of "sufficient size and quality" to safeguard the lives of the infants born there.

Larger units, because they are better equipped and staffed, have shown "a significant impact on infant mortality rates," she said.

There are not 77 maternity units in the state, she added, and cutting the number to 44 would still leave most with only a 75 per cent occupancy rate.

The average maternity ward is half empty much of the time, Dr. Pettigrew added.

The anticipated affect of the regulations, combined new licensing standard, would promote "care of the highest quality to mothers and babies," Dr. Pettigrew said, and encourage the elimination of smaller, less efficient maternity units.

Many of the units will be eliminated "by the slow process of attrition," she added, as rising costs drive some hospitals out of the maternity business.

But the Public Health Council, which will administer the regulations, still has as its chief weapon its certificate of need powers.

"If a hospital wants more surgical beds, the council can point out that the occupancy rate of its maternity unit is only 50 per cent and in that way encourage the phasing out of maternity units," Dr. Pettigrew added.

It was that strategy used on the Somerville Hospital some two years ago, which sent the community into an uproar that lasted several months. The maternity ward finally was closed.

"It is an issue where mothers and the public get upset, partly because we've oversold the idea that birth is a normal natural process. We've underestimated the dangers of childbirth. Mothers don't realize they are jeopardizing the lives of their infants."

The new guidelines presented to the Public Health Council will probably not become final for several months, she added.

Meanwhile they are being used as a guide, thus ending a three month moratorium on all new obstetrical units.

Paper Prices

Up...And Up...And Up

MONTREAL (AP) - Canadian International Paper Co., one of Canada's largest newsprint producers, said Wednesday it is increasing its price to U.S. customers by $25 to $200 per ton, effective Nov. 1.

Prices to Canadian customers will remain at $175 for the moment and a spokesman said he could not comment on the difference in prices.

The company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of International Paper of New York, has a potential production capacity of 1.2 million tons of newsprint a year. It exports about 80 per cent of its production to the United States.

The company spokesman said the reasons for the increase include labor costs as well as increases in the cost of wood, transport, energy and all other raw materials.

A three-month strike by members of the United Paperworkers International Union ended Monday at four of the company's five Canadian mills.

Earlier this year the company hiked, its prices to $175 from $160 a ton.

A spokesman for Domtar Ltd., another major Canadian producer, said Domtar has already notified its customers that its price will rise by $15 a ton to $190 effective Jan. 1, but said Canadian International's decision to raise prices by $25 means Domtar will be reviewing its situation.

In Toronto, a spokesman for Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd. said the company plans to carry through previously announced price increase to $182 a ton in Canada Jan. 1 and $192 a ton in Canada July 1.

An Abitibi spokesman said there is a historic differential between Canadian and U.S. prices of about $8 so the Abitibi price for U.S. customers will go to about $200 on July 1.

Fog Reaps Havoc In New Jersey

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

KEARNY, N.J. (AP)-Nine persons were killed and more than 40 injured Wednesday in a series of chain-reaction accidents caused by dense fog and smoke on the heavily-traveled New Jersey Turnpike, police said.

Three major pile-ups and dozens of smaller crashes were reported in the pre-dawn hours along a section of the busy roadway between Newark and New York. Police said heavy fog and smoke from a swamp fire had reduced visibility to near zero.

State police said the death toll could go higher once the wreckage was completely cleared from the largest of the major accidents.

Through much of the day Wednesday police had reported 11 deaths from the series of accidents. They later revised the figure to nine, saying one death had been counted twice and that confusion had occurred over a missing man.

"There is still confusion regarding the number of fatalities," Sgt. Joseph Kobus of the state police said more than 10 hours after the last accidents. And police were still searching for the missing man, a truck driver who reportedly ran into swamps along the highway after he became coated with hot asphalt spilled from another truck.

State police said at least five persons died in the largest crash, which involved some 22 vehicles and occurred just north of the Kearny Interchange in Rutherford.

Three other persons were killed in two other major pile-ups in Secaucus, about two miles northeast of Kearny. Another victim died in a smaller crash near Carlstadt, police said.

Col. David B. Kelly, state police director, said the section of the road where the worst pileup occurred was closed because of fog before the accident, but that the cars involved had already entered the section.

All the accidents were in the early morning hours, up to 5 a.m. Various sections of the pike north of Woodbridge were closed during that time and speed limits south of the town were reduced.

The New Jersey roadway, opened in 1952, is one of the nation's busiest toll roads and for the last three years was among the three safest American toll roads in terms of fatal accidents per mile.

Inmate Murdered At Walpole

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) - An inmate was found stabbed to death Wednesday in his cell at Walpole state prison, the State Correction Department said.

The inmate was identified as Edward L. Skinner, 36, formerly of Boston's south end, serving life on a murder conviction in the Dec. 19, 1972, sunshot slaying of Phyllis Barnes.

A spokesman for the department said Skinner was found under his bunk in Cell Block 6 after he had been missed at the noon count.

Taxes Not Affected By Budget Surplus

..BOSTON (AP) - The state has projected a surplus of $48.3 million for fiscal year 1974 but the taxpayer is not likely to see any lowering of taxes.

The state earlier had predicted a surplus of $2.8 million. State Administration Secretary William I. Cowin said the increase "is almost entirely the result of the economy being healthier than we had thought it would be."

Cowin made his remarks in a letter to Rep. Joseph D. Early, D-Worcester, assistant vice chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, which is considering a supplementary budget request of $203 million.

Cowin pressed for approval of the supplementary budget, saying "There are substantial increases in fiscal 1975 which will come close to using up the surplus."

UFO's Sighted Across Nation... Pranksters, Visions, Or Unexplained?

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The whatzits seemed to be spreading Wednesday.

From New York to the Midwest, there were fresh reports that unidentified flying objects -UFOs- had been sighted in the sky.

The rash of recent UFO reports started with the claim of two Mississippi men who said they'd been taken aboard a spacecraft from an alien society.

Tales of strange sightings popped up across the nation. Some turned out to be pranksters; others were natural phenomena like stars or planets; a few remained unexplained.

At least one enterprising young man is trying to cash in on the latest fad. Bob O'Dell, a 21-year-old student at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., said Wednesday he's invented a UFO detector.

"You could put it under your bed, or wherever you feel safest," said O'Dell. "When the detector buzzes, go look for the UFO."

O'Dell, an environmental engineering student from Bethesda, Md., said his gadget is designed to pick up electromagnetic waves he thinks a UFO gives off.

It's made from a battery, a metal washer, a relay switch and buzzer. O'Dell admits he's "just taking advantage of the panic right now. I figured I could pick up some cash."

O'Dell might find a market close to home.

Four Troy residents said they saw a strange, greenish, buzzing object late Tuesday night.

"It was greenish and moved fast and when it stopped it became white," said Francis Sousin. "We watched it in front of our home and the UFO made a buzzing noise and sent cold chills throughout our bodies."

Dallas, Tex., police actually chased a UFO - only to find out they'd been trying to catch a planet.

The police sent one of their helicopters to try to catch up with the source of a bright light reported blinking over Dallas before dawn Wednesday.

The wind is blowing. The snow is snowing. But you can weather the storm in a cozy parka from Stewart's College Towne. Many of our gals have taken a cue from area skiers who have found that there parkas are warm, light weight, and water repellent. For those of you with a practical side, you'll find that another beauty of these beasts is that you can hand or machine wash all but the real fur trim styles. Colors sparkle: ice blue, sunshine yellow, frosty green, sunset red, crystal pink, and starry night navy.

Styling has been up-dated, too. This year's excitement lies in fit and detail. The jackets are longer, slightly shaped, and loaded with stitch trim, pockets, and belts. Most have hidden hoods, and longer models come with double zippers, opening from both bottom and top for greater flexibility. Don't Give VapoRub To Your Pet Mouse

BOSTON (AP)-A spokesman for the manufacturers of Vicks VapoRub has denied claims of a Harvard researcher that the product may suppress man's natural immune defenses, thus making him more susceptible to bacterial pneumonia.

"We believe that Vicks VapoRub is safe and effective when used as directed in providing symptomatic relief to sufferers of the common cold," said Carl Bufflington, public relations director for Richardson-Merrell, Inc.

He responded Tuesday to claims by Dr. Gary L. Huber, head of a team of Harvard researchers, who said data taken from mice tests are strong enough to raise a serious question about the medicine's effect on man's immune mechanism.

Huber admitted that extra-polating results on mice to man is not entirely reliable. He said, however, that the particular type of mice used in the VapoRub tests has proved to be a good predictor of an gent's effects on man during 15 years of research with various substances.

Huber said his research team found "a very significant depression in the ability of the lung to kill bacteria" and that the suppression of natural defenses varied in direct proportion to the amount of VapoRub that the mice inhaled.

"This dose-dependent effect is very worrisome," said Huber, because it suggests that even small amounts of VapoRub block natural defenses.

Buffington countered by saying that in 68 years of experience with VapoRub "there has never been an indication that the phenomenon observed in mice by Dr. Huber in fact occurs in man."

The company sold $30 million worth of VapoRub throughout the world last year, according to Buffington. He said the company would have no further comment until Dr. Huber presented his findings Wednesday to the American College of Chest Physicians meeting in Toronto.

Dr. Huber said he didn't know what ingredient or combination of ingredients may account for the suppressive effect, but that he will study it further.

Nixon Vetoes War Powers Resolution

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon vetoed the war powers resolution Wednesday, saying it was unconstitutional and "would seriously undermine this nation's ability to act decisively and convincingly in times of international crisis."

The measure would have barred the president from committing U.S. forces to combat for more than 60 days without specific approval from Congress.

Exercising his ninth veto of the year, Nixon said he would "welcome the establishment of a nonpartisan commission on the constitutional roles of the Congress and the president in the conduct of foreign affairs."

And he labled as constructive a proviso of the vetoed legislation that calls for consultation with Congress before and during the involvement of U.S. forces in hostilities abroad.

Nixon's objections, however, were overriding. He argued that the measure "would purport to take away, by a mere legislative act, authorities which the president has properly exercised under the Constitution for almost 200 years.

"The only way in which the constitutional powers of a branch of government can be altered is by amending the Constitution-and any attempt to make such alterations by legislation alone is clearly without force."

The President said a veto message would be warranted solely on constitutional grounds but added that "he was deeply disturbed by the practical consequences of this resolution."

He stated it would undermine the ability to act decisively in a time of crisis.

Nixon said "our recent actions to bring about a peaceful settlement of the hostilities in the Middle East would have been seriously impaired if this resolution had been in force."

O'Neill Starts Impeachment Drive

BOSTON (AP) - A drive to get Congress to start impeachment proceedings against President Nixon has zeroed in on the district of House Majority Leader Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.

A coalition of Massachusetts political organizations and elected officials announced the start of the petition drive Wednesday to gather signatures in the 8th Congressional District represented by O'Neill.

Calling O'Neill the most powerful Democrat in the state and in Congress, Jerome Grossman, Democratic National committeeman from Massachusetts, said, "We hope to cause him to move with all deliberate speed toward impeachment.

"We want him to know that his constituents will support him as he leads the impeachment effort."

State Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill III, D-Cambridge, issued a statement on behalf of his father saying that the investigation by the U.S. House Judiciary Committee would look into the official conduct of President Nixon to determine whether he is guilty on an impeachable offense.

The older O'Neill said that Nixon's decision to turn over the presidential tapes to the court had "put a damper on impeachment proceedings, but in no way has it completely halted Congressional action."

Among those sponsoring the impeachment drive are Citizens for Participation in Political Action, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and Americans for Democratic Action.

John Roberts, executive director of the Civil Liberties Union, said, "Tapes or no tapes, the record of the Nixon administration's disregard for constitutional rights is cause in itself for Congress to exercise its responsibility by instituting impeachment proceedings."

Roberts and Grossman cited as impeachable offenses the Presidents usurping of Congressional war-making powers, the activities of the so-called Plumbers' squad and attempted interference in the trial of Daniel Ellsberg.

The Massachusetts Senate in a resolution passed without debate Tuesday urged the President to reinstate Archibald Cox as special Watergate prosecutor.

The resolution states that the removal of Cox "suggests the most serious impropriety on the part of those who caused his removal" and that "the cause of justice and integrity of our criminal judicial system have been irreparably damaged by this action."

Gas Co. Pickets Continue

..SPRINGFIELD (AP) - Picket lines were up for a second day Wednesday at three Springfield Gas Light Co. facilities despite the efforts of union leaders to end an unauthorized walkout.

About 200 workers disregarded a telegram from United Steelworkers of America President I.W. Abel and a back to work request from local president Daniel King.

The strike, which began Tuesday morning, was called to demand that the company rescind letters sent to five employees, who had all been injured in industrial accidents.

The letters reportedly threatened workers with loss of jobs if other such accidents occured or if too many sick days were taken.

One of the recipients, John M. Wynn, 38, of Holyoke, pleaded innocent to assault charges Wednesday after he was arrested Tuesday night at a picket site.

Wynn was charged with armed assault with intent to murder, assault by means of a dangerous weapon and breach of peace after he pointed a shotgun at a policeman, police said.

Contraception Clinic Open

As a part of a comprehensive student health program, information, counseling and prescriptions for contraceptives are available to students through the University Health Services. Staff members provide non-judgemental consultation to help you make your own decision in a safe, informed and responsible manner.

Women utilizing the contraception services for the first time must attend an educational session. Men are most welcome at this informal program and no appointment is needed. These hour-long sessions are held in Room 302 of the Health Services on Monday at 3:00 p.m., Tuesday at 7:00 p.m., and Thursday at 3:00 p.m. Starting October 31, educational sessions will also be held on Wednesday evenings at 7:00 p.m.

Contraception Clinic appointments are scheduled on Monday through Thursday evenings. If a woman wishes to receive a new prescription for birth control pills or to be fitted with a diaphragm, she will be given an appointment on Monday evenings. If she desires an IUD, she will be given an appointment for an initial consultation on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday evening with a nurse practitioner. An appointment for the IUD insertion will be made with a physician later. Appointments for re-fill prescriptions, routine pap tests, and check-ups are available with a nurse practitioner on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings.

Call 545-0057 between 5:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, for clinic appointments. If you have any questions, please call the Health Education Office at 545-2492.

Counselors are available for consultation during the evening clinics. The counselors are willing to listen and talk with you about your feelings related to the practice of contraception, the selection of a contraception method, pressure from peers, parents or others, or issues concerning your own sexuality or sexual activity. Couples may also seek consultation with the counselors. You may see them during clinic sessions without an appointment. Stop and tell the receptionist you would like to see the Contraceptive Clinic Counselor.

Ralph Nader Supports Impeachment

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader takes part in a demonstration outside the Washington office of fired Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox. Nader told newsmen he supported impeachment action against President Nixon.

Meany Calls Nixon Unstable

WASHINGTON (AP) - AFL-CIO President George Meany called President Nixon emotionally unstable Wednesday, but the White House quickly replied that Nixon's health is excellent.

"The events of the last several days prove the dangerous emotional instability of the President," said a statement released by Meany's office.

The White House called Meany's charge "incredible, inexcusable, irresponsible." Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren, asked to describe Nixon's health, replied: "Excellent."

Meany repeated his suggestion that Nixon should resign or be impeached and called for a new Watergate special prosecutor to replace Archibald Cox who was fired by Nixon Saturday. "We firmly believe there must be a completely independent investigation of the scandals of this administration," Meany said.

"Nothing that happened yesterday changes our opinion that the President has so destroyed the people's confidence in government that he should resign or be impeached," Meany added.

Meany's reference to the actions of Tuesday apparently meant Nixon's decision to turn over to U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica tapes of White House conversations wanted for the grand jury investigating the Watergate and related cases.

Get Your INDEX Here

Index '73, the UMass annual student publication, arrived on campus Wednesday and, according to Editor-in-Chief Colleen Yuu, it will be distributed to students beginning this morning at the trailer across from the Student Union Building.

The yearbook came nearly two months late because the extremely small size of the staff caused copy to be late to the book's printer.

Now that Indes '74 has received funding from the Student Activities tax Fund, its editors hope that more studnets intend to get involved with the book's production this year. "This will help insure that next fall, students will receive a quality publication," said Ms. Yuu.

The referendum held on the yearbook issue several weeks age indicated that students still want one. However, the staff, which now numbers only about five members, feels that without increased participation by UMass students, the book will suffer greatly in coverage and effectiveness.

Yahoo! Yahoo!

Also appearing on campus this week is the last Yahoo published by University students. The humor magazine did not receive funds to publish this year and was subsequently sold to a private interested party. The magazine was printed last Spring using Student Activities Tax money but held until this fall by the staff so they could have the feeling of extending the magazine's student life one extra semester.

A spokesman for the staff says that although the back cover of the magazine says 50 cents, it is still free of charge to undergraduate students.

Middle East Forum Tonight

On Thursday, Oct. 25, at 7:30 p.m.. a radical forum will be held. The topic is "Roots of the Middle East Conflict", and the speakers include Radwah Ashour, who is an Arab student at UMass, and Alan Einhorn, a member of the National Committee of the Young Socialists Alliance and a former Zionist. Due to the current situation in the Middle East, and the lack of truth in the newspapers, it is essential that the voices of the Palestinians be heard. This forum is for all people who are interested in the complete picture. Everyone is welcomed and invited to attend. The forum will be held in the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union.

If We Can Keep It

It would seem that President Nixon, with his release of the White House tapes, has temporarily at least dampened the fires of impeachment. Many questions still remain unanswered however, one of the main ones being-why didn't he release them in the beginning. It appears that the man simply wanted to avoid being impeached. The logical conclusion, then, is that the tapes contain nothing harmful to the President. Otherwise our fearless leader is sounding his own death knell, and that is extremely uncharacteristic, to say the least.

Was the tape controversy entirely on principle then, or are we to suppose that some behind the scenes shuffling took place to render the tapes harmless? And what of the Cox firing, principle again, or a shadowy maneuver to distract the hounds from a strong scent? Unanswered questions, and unless the President can shed some believable light in his speech on Wednesday night, then they will in all probability remain unanswered. And it should be obvious by now, that what to expect from Mr. Nixon is not answers, but vague defenses of his actions.

I am sure there is a feeling at Camp David today, that a major crisis has been averted, and that the President has successfully quelled a desire to remove him from office. And while, to some extent, this may be true, the suspicions surrounding the Presidency have been far from removed. This is not merely a development of the past few days, a distrust has been constantly growing over the last five years. But we are, by tradition, a cautious people, the gravity of events tend to sober any immediate or harsh reactions. And so it is clear, that for the outrage of public opinion to actually precipitate an official response by the Congress, then events must certainly be considered of the utmost gravity. The patience of a cautious nation wore thin this weekend, the fear being that our system of government was being challenged from high within. It is a fear that is not often felt by the majority of Americans, and that fear is not easily dissipated by a back-to-the-wall compliance with the law. Mr. Nixon is wrong if he believes that the country has been put at ease, or that a television appearance can end the confusion and distrust that is rampant in this land. Too much murky water has gone under the bridge, and it is doubtful that confidence can ever again be restored in the presidency, as long as Richard Nixon holds that office.

The events of the past few days dramatically show just how vulnerable a nation we have become. The United States is not immune from the type of constitutional crises that have decided the futures of other countries around the globe. But we are fortunate in the respect that there lies a buffer zone between the people and the President. Congress and the Courts have seemingly accepted their responsibility in rightfully checking a run-away President. Ironically, the President who has preached the doctrine of separation of powers is himself experiencing the effects of that doctrine, when properly used to curb the tendencies of power. The Congress and the Courts must continue to perform their intended function, for if they fail to, the responsibility will rest on an angry and insensed people. The prospect of this, while no longer unthinkable, is still frightening.

What Richard Nixon has proved of late, is that the American people cherish democracy more than he does. He has very nearly forced drastic action to be taken for the preservation of our system of government. He has clearly become ineffective, not at all capable of leading this nation in the tradition of the Constitution. Even a man of his caliber must have some realization of the anguish, doubt, and confusion that he has caused the country. If Richard Nixon has any love left in his heart for the United States, then he will set personal ambition aside, and resign his office. I respectfully urge him to do so, while I call to mind the words of one of our prophetic Founding Fathers: "You have a democracy...if you can keep it."

Interviewing Me

COLLEGIAN: How do you feel about the current drive to impeach President Nixon?

TACKEFF: I don't make a habit of being for Impeachment, especially in crucial moments in history, such as the very one we're talking in right now. But circumstances could force me to change my stand. Had Nixon continued to defy the Courts, he would most likely have been impeached, and I would have sent a letter of congratulations to that loud-mouthed Priest who represents me in Washington.

COLLEGIAN: Are you surprised by the public outrage of this past week?

TACKEFF: Not really. At first I thought that the reports of public sentiment were distorted, since I have always believed that the press has tried to confuse things by interpreting the outpourings for protest parades as a significant gauge of nationwide opinion. Those rallies are meaningless, except for the ego's of the bored radicals.

But this time, it's all for real. And why not? The American people have overwhelmingly demonstrated their devotion to lawfulness in the past several elections. Why shouldn't Americans resent a Presidential attempt to flaunt the law? Should Nixon flagrantly violate the principles of law and order, he should be despised on the same level as those pseudo-revolutionaries who preach the violent overthrow of the American system.

COLLEGIAN: Do you think that the other allegations against Nixon, such as a possible obstruction of justice in the prosecution of the Watergate crimes, will be substantiated, thus leading to his impeachment?

TACKEFF: No. At this point, the evidence against Nixon is highly inconclusive. Many of the President's perennial critics are deliberately jumping to conclusions. Having failed dismally to oust Nixon by means of the electoral processes, the die-hards of the Left are hoping to stage a coup d'etat by means of impeachment. I find it hard to believe that the same people who applauded lawlessness when perpetrated by Ellsberg, the Berrigans, or Dr. Spock are really upset that the President tries to place himself above the law. Upset? I'll bet that they're tickled pink (no pun) about it all. Such a situation provides them with a soapbox, which helps to take the misery out of their lives.

Fortunately, neither Congress nor the American people in the mood to plunge the nation into further constitutional chaos. Things are chaotic to begin with. Look at the economy. Inflation is eating up any gains made by the average wage earner. Look at the Middle East. I don't think that the American system could tolerate a three-year "caretaker" regime. Particulary since there is no Vice President at this time. Speaker Albert has a notorious record of fencestraddling and indecisiveness, and the country despearately needs a President who will take a strong, even if temporarily unpopular, stand on the major issues confronting us. Unfortunately, President Nixon hasn't provided that kind of leadership. No, Nixon is not the most corrupt President in the history of this nation. He is, perhaps, the most incompetent. And judging from the current crop of Presidential aspirants, that isn't really saying too much against the President. The sad thing about it all is that I voted for him, and would probably do it again if given an alternative such as Senator McGovern.

COLLEGIAN: What do you think of Gerald Ford?

TACKEFF: Again, considering the current crop of politicians, Congressman Ford doesn't look that bad. He has taken some good stands in the past, but could he be counted on to stand up straight in the event of an emergency? I don't know.

COLLEGIAN: Who would you like to see elected President in 1976?

TACKEFF: Sam Ervin, if he were twenty years younger. Or Barry Goldwater. It's pretty sad that the most honest and responsible politicians are, because of their age, not viable candidates. I guess they don't make politicians like they used to.

Safe Again

Dick Nixon has survived another crisis and will remain in office until 1977. By releasing the Watergate Tapes, Nixon effectively destroyed any serious attempt at impeachment. Talk of removing the Chief Executive from office will continue but little will come from it.

Mr. Nixon's reasons for refusing to release the tapes were woven around executive privilege and the separation of powers. The President's definition of executive privilege differed substantially from Senator Ervin and Judge Sirica's but it was not without merit. The argument of the separation of powers offered by the White House is contradictory to a basic premise of this administration, that is, the consolidation of power through any means possible. A dangerous level of authority has become concentrated in the hands of one man. This has been happening since the beginning of this century. The Overman Act of 1917 gave Woodrow Wilson the power to deal with World War I; this law has never been repealed. Nixon has shown his lack of concern for the Legislative and Judicial branches of government. Under the guise of national security, which has become a convenient excuse for not telling the people what they ought to know, Ellsberg's psychiatrist and the Chilean embassy were burglarized. The Ellsberg case is indicative of the lack of concern this administration has for the legal process. While the facade of a fair trial was being conducted in California, attempts were made to gather evidence illegally and the presiding judge was compromised by the President and his closest advisors. The frequent impoundment of funds authorized by the Congress is just one example of Nixon's contempt for the legislature.

The question that enters one's mind immediately is, why did the President relinquish the tapes? Was it the fear of impeachment? I think not. As things stood Tuesday morning Congress would never have impeached the President, much less remove him from office. Representative McClosky of California was substantially correct when he ascertained that most Congressmen didn't have the guts to impeach. Congressional leadership is not very strong and both Mansfield and Albert were reluctant to begin any proceedings against the President. Judge Sirica's threat to hold Nixon in contempt of court might have forced the tape's release. This would have given the Congress enough justification and perhaps the courage to act. The public reaction to the firing of Cox, Richardson, and Ruckelshaus was much greater than had been expected. One poll revealed that only sixteen percent of the American people favored this action and over seventy-five percent opposed it; while almost half the nation favored impeachment. Telegrams to Washington were delayed three hours because of heavy traffic and they weren't supporting Nixon. The public must be applauded for such an immediate and forceful reaction to Satuday's event. There always is the possibility that Cox was fired because of something besides the tapes, like evidence that implicated the president, and that this whole scenario was acted out for the public.

Richard Nixon should be impeached or resign because of his attempts to subvert the judicial process in this country, his contempt of Congress and the public, and the corruption of his administration. Some say that we can't blame the dishonesty of Dean, Agnew, Haldeman, Mitchell, Liddy, Stans, and Ehrlichman on the President. But didn't he bring these men into the government. He may not be legally responsible for their actions but he does have some responsibility to the people to explain how he could choose so many potential criminals for his administration and to guarantee that it will not happen in the future. But Nixon will remain in office until 1977 unless he resigns because the Congress will never impeach him.

Letters To The Editor

Ten Thousand Satisfied Riders

To The Editor:

Last Friday's Collegian carried a letter to the editor in which N. Haridasan voiced several "questions" about the Campus Shuttle System. For those who, like myself, had trouble deciphering the conglomeration of complaints, (How did Agnew get involved?) I would like to clarify a few points. First of all, answers to these questions were given to Mr. Haridasan on the telephone last week. Evidently they were not answered to his satisfaction, because in his closing statement he threatened to "smash some windows on the buses." This was obviously one of the careful and well-planned responses that he talked about in his letter.

No prior public notice was given re: the express service to North Amherst and Sunderland because such notifications cost money and time, and we were being pressed to initiate the change by riders from Sunderland who were justly complaining about bus loads of Sunderland riders having to travel through Puffton for one or two riders, when the area is being adequately served by the North Amherst-Stadium Route.

Another time we saw no need to make prior public notice was when we decided to maintain a ten minute interval between buses all day on the North Amherst-Stadium route, rather than go to a twenty minute interval during off peak periods. We got no complaint on this, however.

Factors which most affect a bus driver on his route are: the weather, which has been no problem so far this year; other vehicle traffic with which buses still have to compete; road construction, which has been a problem on campus and on Belchertown Road, and finally, the number of users getting on and off the buses. Presently, on the peak day, Wednesday, the Student Senate Transit Service is carrying approximately 10,000 passengers. This is about the same number of daily riders as on the Springfield Street Railway System, the second largest in the state behind the MBTA. Springfield Street Railway, however, has over 150 buses compared to our 16.

The problem, then, with occasional late buses is that the equipment is being spread very thin in order to maximize utilization. I do realize that bus drivers, like anybody else, are capable of making errors. If users have any specific complaints, questions, or suggestions, they can call the Bus Office at 5-0056. Details such as time, route, and vehicle number will help in investigating complaints. Although Mr. Haridasan seems to be having his problems, there are at least 10,000 other riders who seem to be satisfied with this service. To these others, I thank you for your patience and patronage.

The Second Gun

To the Editor:

Amidst the uproar and public outcry surrounding President Nixon's actions of recent weeks, an issue of equal importance has arisen. The question or issue, which has been brought forth to the public view by the movie "The Second Gun" is this: Was Sirhan the real killer of Senator Robert F. Kennedy?

Theodore Charak, writer-producer of "The Second Gun", claims that Kennedy was murdered by a second gun, by a person standing behind him who took advantage of the confusion created when Sirhan fired. Charak not only attacks the investigation and findings of Kennedy's murder, but also darkly suggests some kind of political conspiracy.

After seeing the movie, I am convinced that a second person did murder Robert Kennedy. First of all, Sirhan was three to six feet away and facing Kennedy when he fired, according to eyewitnesses. But the fatal bullet struck Kennedy BEHIND the right ear and was traveling in an upward direction. Also, the other two bullets that struck Kennedy (the neck and the right armpit) were from behind and in an upward direction.

Secondly, according to coroner Dr. Thomas Noguchi, the fatal bullet struck Kennedy behind the right ear and was fired by a weapon held not more than two inches from Kennedy's head. If this is true, how could Sirhan have fired the fatal bullet when he was standing in FRONT of and at least THREE feet away from Kennedy?

Thirdly, according to William Harper, a noted criminologist who studied the ballistic reports of the murder weapon, the bullet that struck John Weixler a bystander, in the forehead and the bullet that struck Robert Kennedy in the neck were fired from DIFFERENT guns.

"The Second Gun" causes considerable doubt as to whether Sirhan was the actual killer. I believe the information found in the movie warrants a reopening into the investigation of the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy.

Oversubscribed

To The Editor:

The lead article on oversubscribed courses by Frits Geurtsen in the Collegian for October 19th strikes at a critical problem. Being told that you cannot take a course because it is full clearly undercuts a major purpose for attending college. The article points out that many overcrowded courses arise from the lack of facilities or faculty, and I would suggest that this is intolerable. The problems stem, in large part, because of border-line funding of the University by the legislature of the Commonwealth (among the lowest of all states). This situation will persist until a majority of state senators and representatives recognize that their votes for larger budgets will win them majority support among the people who elected them. In short, being vocal in political processes will help reduce the number of "oversubscribed" notations on your future registration cards.

Recognizing The Enemy

By PEDRO HERNANDEZ

Several forms of the division of the World have been spoken of at the non-aligned conference. For us the World is divided into Capitalist countries and colonial countries: reactionary countries and progressive countries: Into governments that support Imperialism. Neo-Colonialism and racism and governments that are against Imperialism, Colonialism, Neo-Colonialism and Racism.

The theory of the two Imperialisms-one led by the USA and the other allegedly by Soviet Union.--Which has promulgated by the theoreticians of capitalism, has found an echo among spokesmen and leaders of some of the Non-Aligned countries. Sometimes by conscious design and sometimes out of ignorance of history and of the realities of the world today. This is, of course, contributed to by those who, from alleged revolutionary positions, lamentably betray the cause of Internationalism.

The revolutionary government of CUBA opposes and will resolutely oppose this position under all circumstances. And therefore we feel obliged to take up this essential and delicate question. Some people try to ignore the heroic and unique service rendered to humanity by the Soviet People. They act as if the Glorious October Revolution had nothing to do with the system of colonialism that dominated the World until World War II and the conditions that made possible the Liberation of many peoples formerly subjugated by the colonial countries. The disappearance of capitalism in many parts of the world and the emergence of forces which keep the insatiable greed and aggressive designs of Imperialism in line.

How can one rate the Soviet Union as Imperialist? Where are its monopoly enterprises? What industries, mines, Oil fields does it possess in the underdeveloped World? Which worker is exploited in any country of Asia, Africa, or Latin America by Soviet Capital?

The Economic cooperation which the Soviet Union extends to Cuba and to other countries is not, extracted from the sweat and sacrifice of the exploited workers of another country, but rather from the sweat and effort of the Soviet Workers.

One must not forget for one moment that the weapons used by Cuba to defeat the mercenaries at the Bay of Pigs and to defend itself against the USA, by the Arab Peoples to resist Imperialist aggression, by African Liberation Forces against Portuguese colonialism and the weapons wielded, by the people of Vietnam in their heroic, unique and victorious struggle, came from the Socialist Countries, essentially from the Soviet Union.

Who did the "Non-Aligned" countries protest against for the intervention and Blockade of Cuba, the intervention in Santo Domingo, and for maintaining military bases in Guantanamo, Panama, and Puerto Rico against the will of these Countries Peoples? Who was behind the murder of Lumumba? Who supported the assassins of Amilcar Cabrar? Who was behind the murder of Salvador Allende? Who supported the assassins of Chilean Peoples? Who contributes to the maintenance of a white racist state in Zimbabwe and helps convert South Africa into a labor reservoir of Black men and women under conditions of semi-slavery?

In all these cases the culprit is UNITED STATES IMPERIALISM, which also endorses Portuguese Colonialism imposed on the Peoples of Guinea-Bissau, the Cape Verde Islands, Angola and Mozambique. All efforts to pit the NON-Aligned countries against the Socialist camp are profoundly counter-revolutionary and benefit only the interest of the IMPERIALIST. Inventing a false enemy serves only the one purpose-to mask the true enemy.

The success and future of the Non-Aligned movement depends on not being swayed, confused or deceived by Imperialist Ideology. Only the strongest alliance of all progressive forces of the World will be able to conquer the still powerful forces of Imperialism, Colonialism, Neo-Colonialism and Racism and to struggle successfully for achievement of justice and Peace of all Peoples of the World...To alienate the friendship of the Socialist Camp is to Weaken ourselves and put ourselves at the mercy of the forces of Imperialism.

We Socialists are more free because We are more fulfilled: We are more fulfilled because We are more free. Our sacrifice is a conscious one: It is in payment for the Freedom We are building. We will make Twenty-First-Century Man: We Ourselves.
ANY STEP BACK,-LIBERATION OR DEATH.

Our Little Watergate

To The Editor:

I am an employee of the University Computing Center and have been watching the University's "Little Watergate" with bated breath. Mr. Sullivan has played on the mood of the community with admirable finesse· for what better time to disclose (or create?) a scandal than these days of Watergate, Agnew's resignation, and the rage over Nixon's possible impeachment? The situation here at UMass bears a great resemblance to Watergate in that it could be construed as the Office of Education, Mr. Fortune, and the U.C.C. trying to hide the "crimes" Sullivan alleged. There is an unfortunate possibility that this resemblance will bring judgment down on these parties without reason or restraint being exercised.

I believe Mr. Sullivan's motives are open to grave doubts, and, because of this, his allegations also. Sullivan told a reporter of television station WWLP that the University had fired him illegally, and, on that same broadcast made his charges on the Title I issue. On the same station and program the University spokesman said that Sullivan had deserted his job and that he has proof of the charge.

Is Mr. Sullivan trying to badger the University into giving his job back? Why did he wait almost a year to make these very serious charges against Fortune, the Office of Education, and the University Computing Center? Why did the charges coincide with his attempts to get his job back? Knowing Tom Sullivan and the other people involved in this, I predict Mr. Sullivan will get nowhere.

Blood Donors Needed

To The Editor:

Many things that are used and needed in today's world are easily acquired through the processes of manufacturing. However, a few things critically needed can not be made available in this way. One of these things is blood. Blood is a living tissue and CANNOT be manufactured. This is why we are the only source of supply.

Once again this semester Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sigma Sigma are sponsoring the visit of the Red Cross Blood Mobile to this campus. The blood mobile will be here for four days, October 29 through November 1, with a sign-up table for appointments set up through-out this week in the Campus Center concourse. Because of the many vital uses for blood and the essential duties performed by blood, a large supply must be on hand for immediate use at all times. I hope that you will become a blood donor.

C.I.E. And A.I.D.

By VICTOR M. GOMEZ

The Center for International Education (CIE) of the School of Education-UMass has received $291,274 in a period of two years from the U.S. Government's Agency for International Development (AID). Furthermore, the CIE has been promised a similar amount for two more years and, in addition, AID has awarded it an "Institutional Development Grant" to the amount of $1,000,000 .

As a Latin American student at the CIE I want to raise the following issues of concern for anybody interested in the problems of underdevelopment, imperialism, and foreign policy.

What is AID? Simultaneously with the initiation of the Alliance for Progress as a response to the threat of the potential spread of the Cuban Revolution throughout Latin America, the Kennedy Administration reorganized all U.S. lending and technical assistance agencies centralizing their functions into the Agency for International Development (1961).

The objectives and functioning of AID could be summarized as follows:

1. To serve as an instrument of implementation of U.S. foreign policy in the developing areas of the world. See: "The World Bank, IDA, and IFC: Policies and Operations." Washington, 1969.

2. To serve as an instrument of diffusion and propaganda of the capitalist system, usually under the banner of "democracy". See: "The Age of Imperialism", H. Magdoff, 1969.

3. To stimulate and create favorable climates for U.S. private capital investments in developing countries. See: "Aid as Imperialism", T. Hayter (1971), and "Yanqui Dollar: The contribution of U.S. private investment in Lating America" NACLA, N.Y. (1971). See also "The ITT Papers".

4. To exert influence or leverage on any country's government toward the implementation of the fiscal, investment, social, military, etc. policies conducive to a favorable climate for U.S. private capital investment. As stated in AID's paper No. 9; "...leverage goes beyond influence and persuasion to condition aid, explicitly or implicitly, on specified host country action. Leverage may be positive or negative, aid may be withheld unless certain conditions are satisfied, or additional aid may be made more available if the economic performance of the host country achieves specific standards. Positive leverage is sometimes called 'incentive programming' ".

5. To guarantee and stimulate U.S. private capital investment through loans, mortgages, and protection agencies.

6. To modernize the elites of the developing countries. Modernization in this context quite often means "denationalization", and the adoption of U.S. technology, educational system, way of life, and values as the ideal "role model" to be imitated and copied if economic development is to take place.

The strategies and methods used by AID to accomplish its objectives include: sending U.S. scholars to do "research" abroad or to serve as consultants, financing institutional relationships between governments and U.S. universities (Berkeley's School of Business advises the Brazilian Government on economic development, Harvard's School of Business advises the Colombian National Planning Board, over 80 universities received AID research or services contracts from 1968 to 1970), training and giving material to the military and police forces of key countries (Brazil, Guatemala, Chile, Uruguay...), financing research on counterinsurgency and guerrilla warfare (American University, RAND Corporation, MIT...etc.), awarding scholarships to study in the U.S. to key citizens of a country, channeling research funds into any given area of interest, exerting political and economic leverage, giving loans or credits with "strings attached" (provisions for reinvestment of that money in U.S. goods, use of U.S. transportation...etc.), coordinating strategies with the other major international agencies such as the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the Inter-American Development Bank. (This massive effort was particularly successful in the financial blockade of Chile from 1971 to September 11, 1973.

Why is AID interested in the CIE? In the light of the forementioned facts, any contract or grant from AID to any individual or university should be regarded as a potential situation for political manipulation and cultural and technical colonialism. In this particular case AID contracted with the CIE-School of Education for the development of a Non Formal (out of school) Education Project in rural areas of Ecuador. Over half a million dollars is being paid by AID by the end of the fourth year of this project. I would like to briefly analyze some areas of concern regarding this project.

Ecuador is one of the poorest countries in Latin America, its percapita income is less than U.S. $200 per year. Ecuador has a large pure Indian population (40 per cent) most of which is completely alienated from the political, economic, or cultural life of the country. The rest of the population is composed by a very small minority (less than 5 per cent) of whites; who control the means of production and the Government: and a mixed (mestizo) population unable to identify itself neither with the white nor with the indian culture but effectively educated toward the acceptance of the socio-economic system. Ecuador is also a very oppressed country, it is presently governed by a right wing military regime that overthrew President Velasco a senile populist demagogue who publicly boasted that all he needed to become President was the opportunity to address the masses in the main plaza of Quito, effectively enough he ruled the country for six terms (not all of them consecutively, though).

Howver, Ecuador is incredibly rich in natural resources. Due to the recent discovery of huge oil depots in the northeastern Amazon basin region this country has become of vital importance to the U.S., its strategic importance is increasing every day due to the oil shortage and the future difficulties of obtaining the oil from the Mid-East. Consistent with its policy toward Latin America since 1890, the U.S. Government will do everything in its power to maintain the status quo in Ecuador and to

You've Got To Get Up

By BOB ROSSMAN

Going to bed at three o'clock every morning can be cool, but not when you have to get up for that 9:05. Whatever your choice of poison is that night, it just adds to the everyday hassle of getting up in the morning. Knowing what you have to face is bad enough, but the really tough part is the actual waking up itself.

Don McGilvray expressed beautifully how just one of many dreams can be shattered by the greatest mechanical torturing devices of all times - the alarm clock. the old fashioned alarm clock wasn't too bad because when it went off all you had to do was stick your pillow over your head and wait for it to wind itself out. But the electric alarm clocks; you have to shut them off. What a pain! Freshman year my roommate and I used to have a great arrangement. His classes were at eight, ten, and twelve,. Mine were at nine, eleven, and one. The alarm would go off at seven thirty. He'd shut it off and go back to bed. I shut mine off at eight thirty. His turn at nine thirty, mine at ten thirty, etc. Finally, one morning he got so mad he picked it up and threw it against the wall. Very destructive. really unnecessary, and fantastically unbelievable. I really liked that kid.

The final step in the cycle is the clock radio. Imagine being blissfully serenaded by your favorite music to gently prod you awake. Nice thought, huh? Too bad it don't work that way. My radio is strictly AM, so either you listen to the marketplace on WTTT in Amherst, or you wake up to the great sound of Hampshire County static. However, being a fifties freak, I lucked out. WACE in Chicopee knally comes in on my radio, so now I can wake up to my kind of musuc every day.

There is one addition to the list, and that is the convenience of the ten minute snooze alarm. Most people who have them love them, but there are also problems associated with them. An example: Big 10:10 class tomorrow, gotta get up early and be ready. Set the alarm for nine. Nine o'clock rolls around and off goes the alarm. Well, another ten minutes sleep couldn't hurt. Ten minutes later, and you reach the same decision. It becomes a reflex until you realize finally that it's ten o'clock. You bust your ass to get there (the class, naturally, is always on the other side of campus), and get there at 10:25, just in time to see what you got up early to see.

Along comes the weekend. Saturday a lot of people like to do things, so they still get up early. But Sunday, beautiful Sunday, day of long and restful sleep. Another nice thought, right? Wrong. I don't know of anybody (I may have missed a few people in my survey) who has never had a roommate whose parents call at 10:00 a.m. what seems like every Sunday morning. His sleep (and yours, too) is shot, so he gets up and goes to the bathroom. The flushing of toilets wakes up the nearest inhabitants, and everyone knows that people that live next to, or across from the bathroom, are always rowdy. Everybody up! So ten o'clock seems to be the magic time for Sunday monnings.

And so, to all the professors who get upset by students sleeping in their classes, don't be. Instead, try to understand. If you think life here on campus is so tough, just think how tough it is if you have to get up every day to face it.

Why Is A.I.D. Interested In The C.I.E.

insure that country's future toward the capitalist mode of production, and similarly will AID and the other policy-implementing agencies: World Bank, IMF, Armed Forces...etc.

The formal educational system in Eduador represents the main mechanism for the perpetuation of oppression; less than 2 per cent of those who enter primary education finish university education and these represent less than 1 per cent of the labor force. Clearly the the system selects its ruling elite trough the concentration of educational opportunities on those who can either afford or survive through several years of schooling.

Consequently, AID has funded two major educational programs with U.S. Universities; the first program with the U. of New Mexico is oriented toward the development of elementary and secondary education textbooks, the second with the CIE-School of Education-UMass intends to develop out of school educational materials to be used on a national basis by the Adult Education Department of the Ministry of Education. Both contracts are intimately related to AID's objectives; the textbooks developed by the U. of New Mexico will be obviously influenced, in the content, by U.S. values and political hilosophy. The CIE's contract will strenghten and reinforce the Ministry of Education's ability to reach and "educate" every rural area in Ecuador.

The implication of both contracts is that AID is not interested at all in changing the formal educational system but in "americanizing" and strenghtening it. AID's contract with the CIE requires from the latter the development of instructional materials (in literacy, health, coop education...etc.) and the identification of national and regional delivery systems for those materials so that the maximum coverage of rural populations be achieved. The CIE is required to work closely with the Ministry of Education and SENARED (technical aids center) in order to create a national network that will reach every rural community, the center of this network being the Ministry of Education itself. Obviously if this scheme is successful the Ministry will be much more powerful and its political influence will be present everywhere. The Ministry of Education has the constitutional obligation to educate the Ecuadorean population within the context of Catholicism, democracy, private property, profit motive and capitalistic mode of production.

In analyzing CIE's contract it is important to quote AID's criteria for the evaluation of the project:

1. Comparative effectiveness between distribution networks in reaching rural people.

2. Changes in institutions resulting from the use of materials.

3. Changes in communities resulting from the use of materials.

4. Impact of different types of training or field support mechanisms developed for each participating institution.

This evaluation criteria clearly show AID's objectives; to obtain knowledge of comparative effectiveness beween distribution networks, types of changes occurred through the use of certain materials and methods, and knowledge on how to make this system work. For AID it is not important to evaluate the educational philosophy of the CIE nor the content of its educational materials but the characteristics and dynamics of the macro-social process of reaching and influencing the maximum number of peasant communities in Ecuador.

It is impossible for me to know what AID's ulterior motives and plans are. All I can do is to refer to a number of previous AID contracts with U.S. institutions of which; under the intention of doing "safe" research, or implementing humanitarian objectives, or "objectively" advising a given government; AID has been amassing extensive and intensive information about values, political attitudes, institutions, political processes, social intervention processes...etc. Examples: Plan Camelot, Brookings Institution, Berkeley, Columbia U., M.S.U., Harvard U., Cornell U., U. of Michigan,...etc.

Another objective commonly sought by AID is increasing the dependence of Latin American countries in educators or other type of "experts" for the solution of their problems, most of which do not have anything in common with the types of problems these "experts" have experience within the U.S. This process has created tremendous problems of denationalization and cultural and technical colonialism in Latin America. Consciously or not, each one of these thousands of U.S. citizens doing work in Latin America is selling his political values, his way of life, his attitudes...etc. each one is contributing to increasing the dependence on and imitation of the U.S. Let me ask this question: if U.S. educators have not been able to solve the educational problems in their own country, what is the rational justification for the presence of hundreds of them in Latin America? Why do they think, self-righteously, that they have something to contribute to a country's educational development when in most cases they do not even know the history, the institutions, nor the language? Part of the answer is that they go to Latin America because there are political institutions like AID that pays them very good money to go, and not because we Latin Americans have willingly put forward a welcome invitation. Although, I must admit, the Americanized elites (lackeys) are very happy to have U.S. people advising them.

Finally, the forementioned thoughts take increasing relevance when one analyzes AID's new "Institutional Development Grant" to the CIE for the amount of one million dollars over a five year period. I won't discuss this contract in detail in this article, for the moment it is enough to say that the objective of this grant is "to strengthen and develop the CIE-School of Education's competence in non-formal (out of school) education for the developing world". Again, AID chooses a U.S. institution located in Amherst, Mass.; and not a national agency in Burma, Peru, Ethiopia or any other country in the developing world; to play an important role in the development of the educational systems of the developing world. This is not ironic, though, it is a well thought out strategy toward the accomplishment of the U.S. Government's imperialist policies.

Conference Held On William Morris

According to Michael Wolff of UMass, two of the great challenges of modern civilization have been to maintain a sense of beauty and to develop a sense of human equality in a time of industrialization. One of the most extraordinary people ever to confront these challenges was the Victorian William Morris, poet, thinker, craftsman, designer, and pioneer socialist. Towards a greater understanding of Victorian Britain and our own times, the Five College Victorian Studies Group is holding a two day conference on "William Morris: Versatile Victorian," on Nov. 2 and 3 at Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Dr. Wolff, a Victorial scholar in the UMass English department, is conference coordinator.

The program will open Friday afternoon, Nov. 2, at Converse Hall, Amherst College, with three specialized programs on Morris' sources, friends and relations, and his utopian novel, "News from Nowhere." Friday evening at 7:30, a special program will be given at Meade Art Museum, Amherst College. Joseph Dunlap, secretary of the William Morris Society, will show samples and slides of Morris' work in both the decorative arts--fabrics, wallpaper, and furniture--and the graphic arts, particularly the work of Morrix' justly celebrated Kelmscott Press.

The main session of the conference will take place Saturday in the Campus Center of UMass. Registration, with a fee of $8 for both days, $5 for Saturday alone, and $5 for the Saturday dinner, is from 10 to 11 in the morning.

The conference will open at 11 with an introduction to the life and thought of William Morris. Speaking on "Morris the Poet" will be Carole Silver of Yeshiva University. Judith Applegate of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts will comment on "Morris the Craftsman." Jan Gordon of the State University of New York at Buffalo will discuss "Morris the Thinker," and Philip Backstrom of Northeastern University will consider "Morris the Activist."

Following lunch, the conference will subdivide into concurrent discussion sections on each of these four main topics. Moderated by Herbert Sussman of Northeastern, it will re-unite at 4:15 p.m. to "Put Morris Together." After cocktails and dinner, the conference will return to that task in a discussion of "Morris and his Times," beginning at 8:15, which will be chaired by Michael Wolff.

Those interested in the formation of a proposed Northeastern Victorian Studies Association will meet at 10:30 Sunday morning in the Campus Center.

Many people are interested in one aspect or another of Morris. Some know his importance as an early Socialist and as a fighter for ecological balance and for the preservation of the inherited past; others know him as a poet and an essayist; others know him as a rebel against the ugliness of conventional Victorian design and as the initiator of the arts and crafts movement.

Further information is available from Dr. Wolff at the UMass English department, 545-0396.

After The Chelsea Fire:

'Pack Rats' Relegated To Ruins

CHELSEA, Mass. (AP)-The Board of Aldermen of fire-ravaged Chelsea, hearing the city's junk and rag dealers described as "pack rats", has voted to oppose the relocation of such businesses from the burned areas of the city into other sections.

Alderman Joel M. Pressman, who called the dealers "pack rats," told a board meeting attended by about 500 persons Tuesday night, "Before you know it, they will begin to destroy other Chelsea neighborhoods and your neighbors will begin to sell their homes."

Fire officials said many junk and rag dealers had businesses in the 30-block area hit by the estimated $100 million conflagration Oct. 14.

Two were alleged at the meeting to have relocated illegally into new areas of the city.

City Building Commissioner Frank Mondano said the two businesses "do not have occupancy permits which only I can give out. They snuck into the new locations at night."

Meanwhile, cleanup operations in the fire area continued cautiously as officials attempted to locate and cap 24 underground fuel tanks beneath the charred debris.

Grads, Faculty, Staff Hold Mixer

Everyone's face is new to someone. The population of professional or career minded single people in the Connecticut Valley presently numbers in the thousands. Those who are graduate students, faculty or staff members, or for other reasons are located in the Five College area, find in a short while that the local mixer and bar scene provides little opportunity to meet other singles of similar interests in the same age bracket. For several years a group has organized small parties for the single faculty and staff in the Five Colleges. It has become apparent that this minority group should also include graduate students and others who are interested.

Since there are few means available to help facilitate awareness of each other, an organization called the Five College New Faces Association with the objective of providing a catalist for communication has been formed. Operating on the classical assumption that single people are interested in meeting each other (!), a party has been planned for Friday, October 26 from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. on the 10th floor of the Campus Center at UMass. A cash bar will be available and Franconia Notch will provide easy music conducive to conversation and dancing. A donation of $1.00 will be asked in order to meet the expenses of the party, since no benevolent benefactor has appeared.

Any profit after expenses will be used to finance other parties or activities. So, if you're in the mood to see and meet some new faces next Friday evening, bring some familiar ones along and support the first endeavor of the Five College New Faces Association.

"Bull Slaying At Dura Europos"

David Francis, assisttant professor of classics at Yale University, will speak on "Bull Slaying at Dura Europos" at 8 p.m. Wednesday Oct. 31 in the Converse Assembly Room at Amherst College. The illustrated lecture is open to the public without charge.

The lecture will provide an account of the Dura Mithraeum sanctuary in Syria within the broader context of the history and art of the city. The discovery of the Dura Mithraeum site in 1934 was heralded as an event of major importance by historians of Roman Mithraism. Its rich frescoes and abundant graffiti were well-preserved and unusually informative in detail, providing a particularly instructive example of the dissemination and practice of the Mithraic cult in the Imperial East.

Professor Francis is also the curator of Yale's Dura-Europos Collection, and secretary of the International Society for Mithraic studies. This year he is vice-president of the New Haven Society of the Archaeological Institute of America. He is the author of several articles on Greek and Latin philology, and has translated an important monograph on the Dura Mithraeum.

China Colt Displays Art

The works of a local artist, China Colt, will be featured in a showing at the Unitarian Society, North Pleasant Street, Amherst.

A resident of Amherst, Ms. Colt was born in California in 1949. She started making pictures at the age of 4, and decided at five that she would be an artist when she grew up. She studied at the Art Students League in New York City and then attended Bennington College, where she studied with many leading artists of the New York avantgarde. The orthodoxy was large color field paintings. Eventually she came out of it a representational painter. From landscapes painted in a lyrical, airy manner, she evolved to a tighter, more form-conscious style. She also works in watercolor and colored pencil.

Gallery hours for Ms. Colt's showing will be from 9-1, Monday thru Friday, Oct. 15 thru Nov. 15.

Peace Corps Need Agie Students

Peace Corps gets more requests for people with degrees and experience in agriculture than any other single skill, according to Russ Staples, who is responsible for recruiting agriculture on this campus.

Staples, who supervised a poultry breeding program in India for three years, says that demand for agriculturists has traditionally run ahead of the number of people that Peace Corps can supply.

"We know that we're in a very competitive job market. People are aware of Peace Corps programs," he said, citing a survey taken last year which showed that 50 per cent of seniors graduating in agriculture had inquired at one point or another about opportunities in the Peace Corps.

Staples says that he, in talking to someone personally, attempts to highlight the following differences between a job with Peace Corps and other jobs in agri-business: "The most obvious one is the difference between Kansas City and Gyarampalli; we can predict with accuracy, that your life will change as a result of the Peace Corps experience."

"The challenge professionally is also different. It's significant to me that Borlough works outside the U.S. The chances of participating in a 'breakthrough' in technology or method are slim if you stay here," he said.

Staples claims that the Peace Corps experience is a proven inroad to many jobs with government agencies and private business both here and abroad. It's also a ticket into many graduate school programs, particularly in the field of International Ag.

Russ will be on campus November 5, 6, 7, &8 to talk to seniors and graduate students about specific programs and opportunities. Interested students are urged to sign up for an interview in the placement office or stop by the Peace Corps table in the Student Center.

Smith Holds Flute Recital

On Sunday evening, October 28, the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a flute recital by Adrianne Greenbaum in Sage Hall on the Smith campus.

Ms. Greenbaum, who holds an instructorship at both Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges, received her B. Mas. degree from Oberlin College, and her M. Mus. from the Yale School of Music. She has been solo flutist with the "Our Bach Concerts" in New York City, and a member of the New York City Ballet Orchestra in Saratoga for two seasons.

Ms Greenbaum has performed many recitals in the East and Mid-West. Two future performances include her January debut recital in Carnegie Hall, and a baroque flute recital in March at the Yale Collection of Musical Instruments.

For Sunday's recital, Ms. Greenbaum will be assisted by Smith College faculty members Lory Wallfisch, harpsichord, and Eugenie Malek, piano. The program will include Telemann's Concerto in D Major; Fourteen Pieces for Flute and Piano by Charles Koechlin; Requiem, by Kasuo Fukashima; and Three Pieces by Karl Kohn. Following an intermission, the program will conclude with Beethoven's Serenade, Opus 41, in seven movements.

The recital will begin at 8:00 o'clock. The public is invited to attend, and admission is free.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn can be serene. Natives of this zodiacal sign learn from experience. These are the late achievers. The Capricorn person overcomes obstacles, survives setbacks, bounces back and concluded by stepping into the winner's circle. Capricorn enjoys spirited discussions with Pisces, philosophical discourses with Virgo and makes money with Aquarius. Capricorn is physically attracted to Taurus, often marries Cancer and does favors for Gemini. Capricorn is dubious about Sagittarius and should be cautious in dealings with Aries and Libra.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Check with partner, mate regarding finances. Emphasis is on discovery. Find out by making inquiries. Be discreet but show that you do mean business. Cancer, Capricorn persons figure prominently. Get to the heart of matters.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Maintain low profile. Not wise to force issues. Patience becomes valuable ally. Win your way through social contacts. Avoid pressing for too much, too soon. Sagittarian could play key role. Surprise visit is indicated.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New moon position coincides with emphasis in health and dependents. Key is to know when to draw line. Moderation is definite asset. Be aware of details. Get basic task accomplished. There will be temporary delay.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with romantic inclinations and creative endeavors. Young person returns a favor. You have chance for beneficial changes. What seemed out-of-reach becomes available.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New outlook regarding home, security, family is featured. You retreat a few steps but you also make significant advances. Family member is willing to see things your way. Be a gracious "winner!"

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some appointments may be missed because of timing error. You would be wise to double check. Pisces individual could play significant role. See situation as it is, not merely as you would like it to be. You could be trying to do too much at once.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on money, responsibility and achievement. Review Leo message. Deal with older, experienced individual. Avoid temptation to take what looks like a shortcut. Select quality. Be thorough. Collect and pay debts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lunar cycle is tops--take a chance on yourself. Trust judgment, hunch. Make new start. Strive to imprint your own style. Be independent in thought, action. Highlight originality. Be ready for compliments from opposite sex.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What you thought was settled may be revived in behind-scenes meeting. Clandestine affairs are brought to light. If you want to put head in sand, you temporarily delay showdown. Key is to understand in mature manner. Don't cast first stone. But do face issues.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent is on romantic interests, creative pursuits, satisfaction to be gained through professional activity. Cancer individual might figure prominently. Avoid any tendency to look back, to brood, to wonder about "if only" or "what might have been." Those are sledgehammer words!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Spotlight is on where you want to go, how far you are prepared to travel, how much effort you intend to put forth. Don't promise more than can be delivered. One you care for is watching, observing and will pass judgment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may be studying a new subject. You could even be speaking a different language. You will be changing your routine. Your views will be sought. Fine for writing, for making long-distance contacts, connections. Broaden horizons.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, somewhat of a perfectionist. You have tendency to brood. You draw to you many born under Virgo, Pisces. You are due to earn more but you also will have added financial responsibilities. If single, marriage is on horizon. Dynamic young person will soon bring pleasure.

Attorney For Students:

Drugs And Getting Busted

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Massachusetts has adopted a five fold drug statue (Chapter 94C of the General Laws) which classifies drugs by their relative potence and relates that to penalties ranging from many years in prison and high fines to six months suspended sentence followed by expungement of the record. The latter mild sentence is the usual, although not absolutely mandatory, result in typical marijuana, first offenses.

By contrast, New York state has just reversed a long trend and reintroduced very severe prison terms and fines for even modest drug offenses. Persons transitting or visiting New York state should be aware that this law and the associated police crackdown suggests "cleanliness" as a standard of the wise and prudent.

In the Commonwealth the heavier penalties are associated with dealing and "manufacturing" of drugs. Presence is a crime only in heroin cases.

The present favorites which are most likely to get your put away are the opiates (heroin, opium), cocaine, methamphetamines, barbiturates and quaaludes. Grass is a minor matter except in circus quantities.

The unavoidable fact about drugs in this society remains the law against them. Persons using chemicals without prescription face the fact that drugs are not generally lawful and, if apprehended, possessors will be confronted with high legal fees, high fines and potential jail. Those who get off on dealing face these penalties as well as the threat of holdups and lawlessness from the underground. It happens here, too.

For reference purposes the drugs are classified generally as follows:

Class A Opium and its derivatives including heroin, morphine.

Class B Lesser opiates, cocaine, amphetamines and barbiturates.

Class C Acid, lesser strength opiates, strong hallucinogens.

Class D Barbitals, tranquilizes and marihuana.

Class E Other prescription drugs.

The penalties range downward from ten years and $20,000 for the first offense involving classes A or B and a minimum of five years plus a fine of up to $30,000 for later offenses.

Most afficiondos of the so-called "Controlled Substances" pay next to no attention to the penalties associated with the substances because they assume that they will not be apprehended. In fact the most significant penalties, particularly in first offenses, are the attendant difficulties of having a "narcotics record." This is tough to overcome and may have serious future effects.

If you should discover yourself the subject of an arrest, the following may prove helpful.

What do you do if a law enforcement officer advises you that you are "under arrest" for any reason?

1. Nothing - do not make fast or unclear moves;

2. The officer has the right to make an immediate and warrantless search of your person and the area immediately around you, presumably for weapons;

3. You will probably be advised of your right to remain silent, have a lawyer and the options open to you;

4. I suggest that you listen to the warning and remain silent until you have the opportunity to talk with a lawyer; (Remember, if you are not warned it may be bad police work, but it does not constitute a defense to any crime that can be proved against you by extrinsic evidence);

5. You will be advised of the opportunity to be bailed and to make a phone call.

For most students in most cases particularly if arrested at night, it is wiser and cheaper not to pay bail but to wait for court in the morning after which you will usually be released without any cost. If you make a phone call, make it wisely; call someone who can and will help you. If you call an attorney, friends and relatives that you want to have called will be called by the lawyer and no one else will be notified.

Mostly, if you are busted, which is generally regarded as uncool, start getting cool. Whatever the problem, it is beyond your control at that point. Its time to talk to a lawyer and probably no one else. Its time to get help. Practically anything else you do, will make things worse, not better.

"Charlie O" Demands Payment For Williams

By JERRY LISKA
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - Controversial owner Charles O. Finley of the world champion Oakland A's ignited a new controversy Wednesday by refusing to release Manager Dick Williams to the New York Yankees without compensation.

Without compensation, Finley said, "there will be court action."

Finley told the Associated Press he "stunned" the Yankees at an American League meeting here Tuesday by denying them permission to obtain Williams as managerial successor to Ralph Houk.

Williams announced his resignation as Oakland manager Sunday just after his A's won the World Series from the New York Mets and reportedly was sewed up to replace Houk, recently signed as Detroit Tiger manager.

Finley said Yankee board chairman George Steinbrenner and president Gabe Paul asked permission to talk to Williams on the managerial post.

"I said 'absolutely not,' said Finley. "They seemed stunned and wanted to know why. I told them as recently as two months ago, I extended Dick Williams' contract an additional year through 1975 and rehired his staff through next season."

Finley said Steinbrenner "assured me they were not going to talk to Williams-he was out of their picture altogether because I refused them permission."

The next reaction during the AL meeting at which Yankee general manager Lee MacPhail was named new league president was "quite a powwow," according to Finley, between Yankee and Detroit officials over the signing of Houk.

"I wasn't in on the talk which also involved Joe Cronin current AL prexy, but Steinbrenner told me the Tigers never did ask permission to talk to Houk, who had two years left on his Yankee contract," said Finley.

"Steinbrenner told me he was going to the Detroit people and ask for compensation himself. Don't be surprised if these things wind up in court. I certainly hope not.

"What I'm really saying is that I'm not going to stand in the way of Williams going to New York, provided New York compensate me. I don't want to lose Dick Williams, but if I do lose him, I will be compensated or there will be court action."

Finley said he advised Williams by telephone Wednesday morning of his refusal to permit the Yankees to negotiate with his title-winning manager.

The man without a baseball team is currently Dick Williams. The former A's skipper is rumored to be the next Yankee manager. However, Williams' ex-boss, Charles Finley won't let Williams off the hook so easy.

Reds Dominate Major League All-Star Team

By BERT ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Outfielder Pete Rose, catcher Johnny Bench and first baseman Tony Perez formed a Cincinnati triumvirate that enabled the Reds to dominate the 1973 Major Leage All-Star team announced Wednesday by The Associated Press.

The San Francisco Giants were the only other team to get more than one player on the squad, landing left-handed pitcher Ron Bryant and shortstop Chris Speier, as the National League dominated the team, winning 7 of the 10 places.

Outfielder Willie Stargell of the Pittsburgh Pirates and third baseman Darrell Evans of the Atlanta Braves were the other NL stars selected, leaving the league champion New York Mets without an honoreee.

Outfielder Reggie Jackson of the world champion Oakland A's, second baseman Rod Carew of the Minnesota Twins and right-handed pitcher Nolan Ryan of the California Angels were the American League representatives.

Significant by their absence were Atlanta great Hank Aaron, his teammate Dave Johnson, and Tom Seaver, the Mets' pitching ace.

Aaron, the Braves' 39-year-old superstar, clouted 40 homers in lifting his career total to 713, only one shy of the Babe Ruth's all-time record. But he couldn't finish higher than fifth in the voting among outfielders, behind Rose, Stargell, Jackson and Bobby Bonds of the San Francisco Giants.

Rose, the sparkplug of Cincinnati's NL West Division champions, was the No. 1 votegetter, being named on 251 ballots cast by sports writers and broadcasters.

O.J. Still Leads

NEW YORK (AP) — O.J. Simpson is human and vulnerable after all-but it's still going to be a long time before anybody catches up with him.

The Buffalo Bills' brilliant running back, who had spent the first five weeks of the National Football League season tearing up the opposition with 100-plus yard games, ran into a roadlock last Sunday in Miami.

He gained only 55 yards before retiring with a sprained ankle, an injury which the Bills say is healing quickly and won't keep him out of Monday night's game against Kansas City.

Despite his slim yardage, Simpson still owns a commanding lead in NFL rushing, according to statistics released Wednesday by the League.

Simpson has now amassed 868 yards. His closest pursuer is Calvin Hill of Dallas, the National Conference leader with 562.

Charley Taylor of Washington is the NFC's No. 1 receiver with 35 catches for 491 yards and six touchdowns. Ed Podolak of Kansas City leads the AFC with 29 for 237 but he hasn't scored a touchdown. John Hadl of Los Angeles and Ken Stabler of Oakland are the respective NFC and AFC passing leaders.

Espo O.K.

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins reported Wednesday that X-rays disclosed that high-scoring center Phil Esposito suffered only a severely bruised chest in a National Hockey League game with the St. Louis Blues Tuesday night.

Esposito, who leads the NHL with 16 points on eight goals and eight assists, in just six games, may be able to play against the Buffalo Sabres Thursday night at Boston Garden.

Sox Swap

KANSAS CITY (AP) - In a straight exchange of righthanders, the Kansas City Royals announced Wednesday that Dick Drago is going to the Boston Red Sox in exchange for Marty Pattin.

Pats Patter

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The New England Patriots announced Wednesday that their National Football League game with the Miami Dolphins Sunday at Schaefer Stadium is a sellout of 61,279.

Under the law recently enacted by Congress, the game will be televised locally, meaning within a 75-mile radius of Boston.

The game is the first sellout at home for the Patriots this season. The local telecast will be the first in the history o the club, a charter member of the old American Football League.

The Patriots also claimed running back Claxton Welch on National Football League waivers Wednesday from the Kansas City Chiefs.

NC State Vs. UCLA

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - North Carolina State basketball Coach Norman Sloan, whose Wolfpack went unbeaten in 27 games last season, has what he believes is his greatest team led by All-American David Thompson.

State, ineligible for the NCAA playoffs last season because of a one-year probation for basketball violations, is awaiting the start of the 1973-74 season and a Dec. 15 game With defending national champion UCLA in St. Louis, Mo.

Sloan, who feels the practice season starts two weeks early, said his team is in top condition and working out four days a week.

The State-UCLA game has been sold out for months.

Celts Upset By Rockets

BOSTON (AP) - Rudy Tomjanovich and Mike Newlin led aggressive, hot-shooting Houston in a big second period and the Rockets went on to a 132-117 National Basketball Association victory over the Boston Celtics Wednesday night.

The Rockets hit on 32 of 43 floor shots for a 74 per cent average in taking a 76-66 lead at halftime. Tomjanovich had 20 points and Newlin 18 in the half.

With four minutes left in the second period, the Rockets led 64-46 as Tomjanovich threw in 10 consecutive points for Houston.

The Celtics closed to within six points 95-89 late in the third period, but the Rickets' Calvin Murphy matched Jo Jo White's 11 points in the quarter and Houston took a 101-92 advantage into the finale.

Tomjanovich finished with 34 points, Newlin 32 and Murphy 28. White had 33 for the Celtics, who lost their second in a row after opening with three victories. Dave Cowens contributed 20 for Boston.

Letters To The Sports Editor

Beta Chi Thanks I-M

To The Sports Editor:

Recently the intramural department concluded two events that our organization wishes to comment on. Number one was the first annual (we hope) fall track meet. We felt the turnout was very good considering the weather and lack of advance publicity. We would like to thank Ken O'Brien's trackmen for running a fine meet. Though only two members qualified for the finals everyone got a kick out of trying.

The second event was the cross country run (around the stadium). Here the old bones squeaked for 1.7 miles and all our runners finished (which was quite a feat for a bunch of old men).

In concluding BX wishes to express our appreciation to the intramural department and coach Ken O'Brien for the opportunity to get out and get a little exercise plus have a good time.

Respectfully,
The Old Men of BX (Beta Chi)

P.S. Maybe we'll do better next year, but don't count on it!

Peil's No God

To The Sports Editor:

It is clear to me now that Peil Pennington is rated next to God on this campus. After having an absolutely horrible day vs. URI--seven interceptions--he earns plaudits from Marty Kelley and David Eibel. Kelley lauded Pennington's 'character' and Eibel said he "led a seemingly beaten team from the depths." Well, Pennington put them in the hole by setting up the Rams with his interception tosses.

As sports writers you have an obligation to pat someone on the back when they do a good job, but when somebody screws up tell him to smarten up.

Glen Manseau

P.S. This letter is not meant as an insult to Peil Pennington. I'm sure he's a fine athlete who gives 100 per cent. But on this particular Saturday he did not play a very good game.

Freshman Spirit

Rookies Challenge The Vets

By SCOTT HAYES

"What good are those lowly freshmen anyway?" "They're immature and they don't know anything." "All freshmen are stupid."

You probably have heard these statements before, and many more about the newcomers to UMass. You most likely agree and have your own put-downs for freshmen.

One man who will disagree is cross country mentor Ken O'Brien. His freshmen runners have already taken over three important spots on the varsity squad, and freshmen or not, O'Brien welcomes their aggressiveness.

O'Brien noted that the first year runners are mentally ready, having several big meets behind them. He also remarked that the freshmen have to adapt to the longer distances in college running.

Phil Broughton summed it up best when he described this year's freshmen as "something else." Broughton added that the freshmen keep the veteran runners going because it forces them to work harder, knowing that a freshmam will take their spot on the team if they don't run well.

John McGrail leads the UMass freshmen, having placed third against UNH on Saturday. McGrail, from Stoughton High School, became interested in cross country through his brother, who had been a runner. John didn't begin running cross country until last year. McGrail said college cross country is harder, but more satisfying. He also remarked that he had a hard time adjusting to the five mile course at UMass, after running 2.8 mile courses in high school.

Jim Hunt, a runner from Hartford, New York, explained the big difference as "a step up in business." A 4:23 miler in high school, Hunt said that the distances covered in practices are twice as much as high school, and that training is better in college.

Paul Doiron, a graduate of Gardner High School, enjoys distance running. "It's a little different, but I like it," the fleet-footed freshman said of college running. Doiron, who started running in grammar school, gets satisfaction from all races. He hopes to stay on the varsity squad and bring his times down in order to help the team in the big meets.

Francis O'Keefe compared high school running to a game, and said that college running is serious. O'Keefe, who is from Weymouth South, started running in junior high for enjoyment.

Rob Leary is a 4:15 miler from Windsor Locks, Connecticut. Although Leary prefers track, he gets self-satisfaction from cross country running and finds it a challenge.

Mickey Hawkes, a Farmington, Connecticut native, stated that more running is involved in college and more mileage is covered in the course of a week.

Some other freshmen who hope to become top runners for UMass are Andy Levey, Tom Lawlor, Stuart Dickson, and Chet Mysliwicz. Levey was a 4:39 miler at Doherty High in Worcester and Lawlor captained the Malden High squad. Dickson ran track and cross country at Concord High School, while Mysliwicz, the Massachusetts Class B mile runnerup and Class C two mile champion, ran for Worcester.

Pennington, Berra Bound For Bowl

By BILL BALLOU

Peil Pennington, Tim Berra, and Dick MacPherson will be spending the week before Christmas in Miami.

Pennington and Berra have been invited to play in the North-South Shrine Game on Christmas Day while MacPherson has been chosen as the offensive coach for the North team.

MacPherson, speaking at yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon, also said that there's a possibility that punter Andy Dutkanicz will be chosen to do the North kicking.

Dutkanicz was one of the featured speakers at the luncheon, and MacPherson, by way of introduction, related that Dutkanicz almost didn't get where he is today.

"Andy used to have trouble kicking in competition," he said, "and we really stuck with him a week more than we had planned. But he looked so good in practice every day we had to go with him."

Of course that one extra week proved to be enough for Dutkanicz to establish himself and now he could be headed toward the North-South game.

The other UMass player-speaker, linebacker Mike McNiff, also might not have been where he is today if he hadn't changed his mind about a month ago.

He had been engaged in a fierce battle with Paul St. Onge throughout spring and early fall practice for the middle line-backing job. When opening day rolled around, the coaches opted for St. Onge. McNiff, disheartened, quit. He was back a week later.

"Let me tell you," he said about the experience, "all it took was watching that one game. I was miserable." So back he came to become the UMass starting middle linebacker.

Also speaking was freshman coach and the man who scouted UConn, Bill Maxwell. Maxwell plugged his own men, who open their season at home this Friday against Rhode Island, and gave a preview of Connecticut.

The Huskies, undefeated in the conference and league leaders, are UMass' big rival. And Saturday is Homecoming down there so you can bet the whole campus will be up in arms.

Connecticut, with new coach Larry Naviaux (at BU last year) makes good use of the field goal and features a pair of freshmen at quarterback. Right now Lou Mancari is the top man. They also boast the dangerous Eric Torkelson at running back. He's picked up over 600 yards rushing already this season.

Naviaux is fond of the Delaware offense, and that's what UConn runs. It features three backs in the backfield and plenty of play-action passes.

MacPherson had some kind words for the officials who worked Saturday's game.

"They're like my wife," he said. "I love 'em, but sometimes they do some crazy things."

Peil Pennington and Tim Berra, superstars. Will they be playing pro ball next year? Well, the scouts will get a look at the dynamic duo on Christmas Day in the North-South Shrine Game from Miami.

Booters Prep For Big Games

By STEVE DeCOSTA

"Two of our toughest games of the year."

That's the way UMass soccer coach Al Rufe feels about his team's next two games against two of the top six teams in New England.

The booters travel to Storrs on Saturday to take on UConn, presently rated number three in the area.

In matters closer to home, the Minutemen battle sixth-ranked Tufts on the Boyden fields today at 2:30.

Any UMass attempt to look past Tufts to the seemingly more important Yankee Conference match-up, could result in disaster. The Jumbos are tough as they sport a perfect 7-0 slate, with most recent wins over BU and BC.

A doubtful starter for the Minutemen is leading scorer Tom Coburn, who is nursing a muscle pull. Coburn will dress but it is not known how much action, if any, he will see.

The balance of play so evident in last weekend's blanking of Rhode Island will be a necessity if the booters hope to hold their own against the Jumbos. Al Rufe put it best when he said, "I feel we jelled against URI. I couldn't ask for better defense, field-position play, or balanced scoring."

Paul Pelloquin will start in the goal against Tufts. Rufe explained that Pelloquin "has looked good in practice and recent exhibitions and can only benefit by the experience of playing against Tufts."

One of the heroes of last Saturday's game, Tony King, is slated to see more action during the rest of the campaign. Rufe feels that King is ready to assume "a more important role in our remaining games."

KICKING IT AROUND-In the ratings war, several kindhearted members of the ratings board saw fit to bestow three votes on the 3-1-1 Minutemen. This placed the UMass booters in the fifteenth spot, behind such noted soccer powers as Dartmouth (1-4-1), Harvard (2-3-1), Yale (2-2-2), and Wesleyan (4-2-1). Injustice runs rampant.

In the latest ratings, Connecticut was placed third in New England, but that was before the Huskies knocked off No. 1 Brown.

In Yankee Conference action last weekend, UConn and Maine tied 1-1, and New Hampshire utilized an explosive offense to upend Vermont 6-2. The weekend's activities tightened the YanCon race considerably, leaving Maine and UConn tied for the top spot with seven points and UMass and UNH close behind with four points and at least one game in hand.

"Everybody Up!"

Harry Fannerbanner staggered to his feet, his red honker horn in one hand, his can of Bud in the other.

"Everybody up for the kick off!" he yelled.

Gradually each person in sections 6 and 7 rose to their feet. Some were laughing· others were quite irritated. But by the time the ball left the kicker's toe, everyone was standing.

Harry Fannerbanner blew a long honk on his horn and he didn't stop until play had stopped.

He sat back down, rubbed his buzzing lips and runny red nose and slurped his beer.

"Ah!" he sighed, dropping his horn to the concrete aisle.

Henry Q. Fannerbanner is a true-blue UMie, a real fan. I went up to him during the game to find out what makes him tick.

"Excuse me," I said as Peil Pennington settled behind the center for the snap. "I'm from the Collegian and I'd like to do a story on you."

Suddenly, Harry Fannerbanner jumped up.

"LET'S GO UMASS," he chanted. Honk! Honk! Honkhonkhonk!

The pass was incomplete and out of bounds. Fannerbanner sat back down.

"Sorry," he said in a rather hoarse voice. "Yeah, O.K....Shoot." His eyes stayed glued to the field in front of him.

"I've been watching you and I've noticed you really get into this game of football," I said. "You seem to take it upon yourself to get the fans involved, making them stand up for kick offs, leading them in cheers..." I said.

"Oh yeah," said Harry, "I take up where the cheerleaders leave off. Uh...COME ON BERNIE," he sighed as Bernie Street had just been stopped at the line of scrimmage again.

"Yuh, I feel the cheerleaders are doing an O.K. job, but they can't succeed unless there's us Harry Fannerbanners in the stands to help 'em out." "People ain't got no class anymore," said Harry. "If you let them, they'll just sit on their ass the whole game until it gets exciting. And then, they'll claim they cheered UMass on to win it. Where were they, I ask you, when UMass really needed it? Sittin' on their asses, that's where!"

Peil Pennington dropped back to pass. He was sacked by a couple of URI defenders for a loss of 11 yards.

"You bum! Pennington you suck! (Honk!)" Fannerbanner was mad.

"He's a bum, that Pennington," squawked Fannerbanner as he watched the punting team come on the field. "In fact, the whole team sucks. They choke. They don't know what a running game is; the offense can't do it and the defense can't stop it. Look at the way these guys "35" and "33" are running all over them. They suck!"

"Why do you bother to watch?" I asked.

"I love football," said Fannerbanner. "I love UMass..."

On the next play, Molly McGee fumbled the ball; Dennis Kiernan recovered from UMass.

"That a baby, UMass!" shouted Harry. "Way you go! That Kiernan's tough." Honk!

Pennington led the offense back onto the field.

"Everybody up! Everybody stand up!" yelled Fannerbanner.

The first play was a running attempt by Bob Wolfe for no gain. "Come on you bums!"

But the next three were passes to Tim Berra for 11 yards, 8 yards, and then a thread-the-needle 9 yard pass for the TD.

"That Pennington's super!" screamed Fannerbanner. "What a comeback! This team's really got alot of character to come back like that. Whew!" Honk! Honk! Honk!

Harry Fannerbanner was ecstatic as he watched the UMass kick off.

"Everybody up! Everybody up for the kick off!" he screeched. Honk!!!!

As we watched URI move the ball back down the field, Harry described the crazy game he'd been watching that day. He talked of how Peil Pennington and the whole team had made such a brilliant come back. "Finally, they're playing like a team!"

But then it happened. Molly McGee broke through the middle for 31 yards and a touch down to give URI a 41-35 lead.

"Ya bums! You blew it UMass!!" screamed Harry. "I don't believe it", he sighed after the extra point attempt was good. For a minute, Harry Fannerbanner sat silent. Then he popped back to his feet with his red honker horn.

"Everybody up for the kick off!" he screamed. "We're not out of this yet! Everybody get up!" Honk! Honk! Honk!

Roots Of War Examined At Mideast Rally

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

More than 150 persons attended a forum on the roots of the Middle East conflict from the Arab perspective in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union last night.

Bernie Lougee of the Young Socialist Alliance moderated the program which he described as "a teach-in on the historical and cultural backround of the present conflict." Speakers included Alan Einhorn, former Zionist youth and member of the YSA, Radwa Ashour and Said Khouri of the Arab Student Organization, Mike Thelwell and Robert Strickland of the Afro-American Studies Department and Moukthar Atallah, Arab Student at UMass.

The loudest applause of the evening went to John L. Fisher, a member of the New American Movement, who delivered a statement entitled, "The Roots of all evil."

The meeting ended with a call for organized action. The Ad Hoc Committee for the Defense of Palestine and Arab Occupied Nations announced a noontime rally on October 31 at Whitmore.

Calling the U.S. role in the Mid-east an effort to "engage the world in war hysteria," Einhorn characterized U.S. interests there as "preoccupation with the protection of American oil interests."

While Americans have been led to believe that the present war is being fought to preserve the very existence of the Zionist State, and Einhorn said, "The cause of the war is the existence of the state of Israel." People tend to forget, he said, the present war is being fought entirely on occupied Arab territories.

"The latest UN Security Council cease fire proposal means that Israel will be able to control even more territory than it did in 1967," he said. The overthrow of the Zionist state and the return of Palestine to the Palestinians is the only way to insure peace in the Middle East."

Tracing the history of the conflict since the creation of the Israeli state, Radwa Ashour described several atrocities against Arab Palestinians forced to leave Palestine.

"Israilis not only want more land, they want more land with JUST Israelis." Ms. Ashour said, "The Arabs have been pictured as butchers, when they have been continually threatened by the Israelis."

Richard Strickland, a UMass professor, called the UN decision to exclude the major powers from the peace keeping force as a demonstration of "the pendulum of history moving away from the super powers" and an example of the "capacity of the little peoples of the world to make history."

Mideast Roundup

U.N. To Dispatch Peace Force

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. military forces were ordered to alert status Thursday as the administration sought to keep the Soviet Union from intervening in the Middle East.

The Russians later agreed to stay out of the area, in favor of a peace-keeping force without big-power involvement.

The U.N. Security Council quickly approved a resolution to dispatch a peace-keeping force that will not include American, Russian or other major power forces.

President Nixon ordered the alert as a precautionary measure after American officials noticed an "ambiguity is some of the actions and statements" by the Russians, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said.

In a lengthy news conference, Thursday, the secretary declined to give details, but referred to movement within the Soviet Union of Russian troops and statements by Moscow representatives at the United Nations.

Without saying so directly, Kissinger had indicated Soviet agreement to keep out of a peace-keeping force would lead to the relaxing of the U.S. military alert.

"The alert will not last one moment longer than absolutely necessary and will be lifted as soon as there is no threat of unilateral action" by the Soviets, Kissinger told reporters.

He stressed that the alert "was precautionary in nature" and that the chances for peace remain promising.

As Kissinger spoke, the battlefield situation remained ambiguous. Egypt claimed Israeli forces continued to attack Suez City on the southern end of the Suez Canal's west bank.

Israel refused again to allow U.N. observers access to the area, Egypt said.

The northern front on both sides of the canal remained quiet and there was little if any fighting in Syria, according to both Israeli and Arab accounts.

The Security Council resolution, the third such action since the fighting broke out Oct. 6, provided that none of the five nations permanently represented on the council would be used in any peace-keeping force.

With the United States and Russia agreeing and China abstaining, the success of the resolution was guaranteed.

The issue of big-power forces, particularly those from the United

Wood States Committment To Wellman Report

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

"Certain controversial issues and actions have arisen within the framework of the new governance document," stated President Robert C. Wood yesterday at his appearance before the Faculty Senate.

"These problems take on four dimensions," explained Wood. "Calendar problems, closure problems, communications networks, and validation of authenticity are the headings I have chosen for these issues."

Under calendar problems, Wood cited the various deadlines which are imposed on the University by governmental calendars. The Board of Trustees' meeting schedule, budget submission dates, and legislative calendars all put restrictions on University activities and procedures.

At times, Wood stated that issues came up which were pressured to a resolution because of such deadlines. But he said that decision-making would proceed as outlined in the governance document.

As for the problem of closure, the president felt that it was unclear at exactly what point an issue reached a final decision, such as the much discussed merit policies.

Recent discussion by the Fac-Sen attempted to reopen the question of merit pay after a decision had already been reached by the Board, setting most merit pay at $400.

To facilitate communication especially between the president and the campus administrations, Wood announced that a newsletter would be forthcoming from his office at regular intervals.

Communications was the central issue Wood felt in the controversy over Dean Dwight Allen's appointment as a special advisor to the president. Wood called the appointment a "matter of personal concern" and said there was no one more qualified in the field of change and innovation than Dean Allen.

In his last category of university problems, the president found doubt existed as to what are authentic statements of policy. He stated that Board of Trustee votes as well as their official policy statements and working papers were the most reliable sources of university policy.

Wood ended his speech by reaffirming his faith in the new governance plan, "I am committed to the Wellman report. It is a definite step forward and I would advise against altering it."

In other business, the annual reports of the Academic Matters and Rules Committees were presented.

Two motions, one assuring the humane treatment of research animals and the other requesting that funds be made available to support "January 1974 Break" activities were both passed.

Third World Students Return From National Anti-Imperialism Conference

By JOSEPH ANDREWS

The Amherst Delegation of the National Anti-Imperialism Conference in Solidarity with African Liberation returned from Chicago on Monday, October 22 after attendance at the successful National Conference called to protest United States imperialism in Africa and generate new channels for action in support of anti-imperialist liberation efforts.

Held at the Paul Lawrence Dunbar Vocational High School in Chicago on October 20 and 21, the National Anti-Imperialism Conference registered close to one thousand persons from various delegations representing over thirty states in the country. The Conference attendance well-exceeded the number registered. The Conference offered twelve workshops on a variety of topics ranging from U.S. ECONOMIC, MILITARY AND POLITICAL INVOLVEMENT IN AFRICA; OIL, PALESTINE AND THE MIDDLE EAST to THE ROLE OF U.S. LABOR IN THE ANTI-IMPERIALISM FRONT.

At a rally Saturday night, the Conference participants were addressed by leaders of several African Liberation movements including ZAPU (Zimbabwe) and ANC (South Africa) as well as by representatives from the United Farm Workers and other labor groups.

Following an address by Angela Davis, the internationally renown activist, Carolyn and Deborah Bolling, both sophomores at UMass, formally presented the banner made by the students of the Che-Lumumba School for Truth in Amherst to the National Anti-Imperialism Conference. A speech by Deborah Bolling, given in behalf of the School and the Amherst Delegation brought the packed audience in the Dunbar High School to its feet with thunderous applause.

At the Conference, the Amherst Delegation presented the Acting President of the African National Congress (ANC) in South Africa with the proceeds of the October 10th Rally in support of the National Anti-Imperialism Conference held at the University.

Though the Conference was particularly aimed at African-Americans, the protest against United States imperialism was supported in statements presented by the representatives of different Latin and Native American progressive groups and organizations from around the nation.

The Amherst Delegation was represented by sixty-six African-American, Ethiopian, South African, Algerian, Guinean and Puerto Rican graduate and undergraduate students from the five colleges as well as Springfield College.

The Amherst Anti-Imperialism Delegation in Solidarity with African Liberation was cited by the National organizers of the Conference for its efficient organization and valuable contribution in assiting the Chicago staff in the operation of the Conference.

SW Assembly Endorses Impeachment

By FRAN BROCK

Southwest Assembly passed a resolution stating their support of impeachment procedures against President Nixon last night. The resolution will be sent to Senators Kennedy and Brooke and to all Massachusetts representatives. Notification of this proposal and action will be sent to the White House.

Also discussed at the meeting last night was the "paint policy" of SW.

It seems that because the service office did not like their policy of distributing paint last year, no one has been able to receive any paint this year.

SW has quite a bit of paint available to the Houses for painting lounges and corridors. As of last year, the paint was given free for the above mentioned purposes.

Paint could also be purchased by students at a minimal amount.

According to Greg Sanders, chairperson of Environmental Standards, the service department felt that the policy was not good because there was no one around to give out the paint or keep good records of who got what paint and for what purpose.

Sanders said, "People want paint," and he has begun to investigate why none has been made available this year. He said that if the service office does not come up with a policy, his committee will.

Sanders also said that the $12,000 given to his committee for purposes of improving the dorms is available to the dorms. In order to receive the money for any improvements desired, proposals must be turned into him by November 16.

Carried over from last week's meeting was the question of the Rathskeller. According to Hampton Advisory Board member, Maureen Mitchell, the Campus Center Board of Governors has completed their report and will be sending to the H.A.B. very soon. Ms. Mitchell did not want to be too optimistic but she said that it is rumored that the report is favorable.

Third World People Must Work For The Liberation Of Palestine

The following resolution was adapted at the "Third World Students in Solidarity with Arab Brothers and Sisters" rally last night.

I have been called to take action on behalf of the Third World Students and their respective organizations that were represented at the October 19, Chicago conference in solidarity with African Liberation. The students that attended that conference as well as many that were unable to attend are well aware of the full significance of the current war for the liberation of Arab territory in Africa.

The fact that the only countries that initially approved the development of the illegal state of Israel were the European, American and Australian states, and that every Asian state, and every African State (with the exception, of course, of the Union of South Africa) voted against the development of Israel, serves to explain the position that Third World people throughout the World have taken in regards to Israel.

Black People, in particular, must support the Palestinian struggle, not only because of our cultural link to Egypt (the fountain of civilization), not only because of racism - an idea that is rampid on the globe, but because Western imperialism in Palestine and the Arab world threatens to alter the very face of Africa and reverse history. Egypt is in Africa - Africa should be for the benefit of Africans.

We support the current war in the Middle East as a liberation struggle, because it is a liberation struggle. We understand its significance, in total, because at some point in history all Third World people have been the victims of colonial expansion and ideology, which includes at its very core, capitalism and racism. We are fully aware of the democratic hoax that exists in the United States and we are equally aware of the extension of this hoax to the illegal state of Israel-supporter of the South African Regime, the Chilean coup, Portuguese imperialism, the murder of Patrice Lumumba and above all the complete oppression of the Palestinian people.

We also understand that the Zionist - Israeli propaganda machine has consistently tried to portray the problem of Palestine as an Arab-Israeli conflict in order to deceive public opinion and to give the impression that the Palestine Arab people ceased to exist as a people since 1948. We are also aware that Israel has been trying to portray the Palestine problem as a conflict between Arabs and Jews, when in fact the struggle has always been directed against Zionism and not against Jews. We understand that since the advent of Zionism, the de-Arabization of Palestine was an integral part of the Zionist philosophy, and that the expulsion of the Arab people of Palestine was premeditated, calculated and carried out in fulfillment of this philosophy.

And furthermore, we recognize that an organic link exists between Zionism and its base, Israel, on the one hand, and imperialism and neo-colonialism on the other hand and that Israel was created by the colonial-imperialist powers as an alien human, geographic, and military base to serve the interest that created it.

We, members of the progressive Third World Community, want it to go on record that we plan to involve ourselves, no matter what the obstacles and the sacrifices, in the struggle to liberate oppressed people in the world in general and the Palestinian people in particular. The struggle of the Arab people of Palestine is in harmony with the sacred values of all humane men and women, in harmony with the principles of international law and order, in harmony with the principles of self defense, and above all in complete harmony with revolutionary movements all over the world.

As one people - a Third World People, we will, we must insure that the struggle does continue.

As one people, a Third World people - we will, we must insure that victroy is ours!!!
¡A Luta Continua!

Nixon Impeachment Committee Decides Course Of Action

The Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon released the following statement to the community last night:

"The Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon met last night to discuss the need for future actions. This committee is the focal point of mass organizing in Western Massachusetts and is made up of members of the Five Colleges and local residents. We see a necessity to continue and support the efforts of other similar committees throughout the United States.

"The immediate focus of our group is the compilation of a leaflet to be circulated around the Five Colleges. The purpose of the leaflet is two-fold: It will educate people on the reasons for impeachment of the president; and it will contain a questionnaire that will aid as an indication of the general sentiments of the community toward impeachment and further action.

"A meeting will be held today in the Colonial Lounge at 4:00 to discuss the content of the leaflet. We have several people from the committee who will be there, but it is open to anyone who is interested in the impeachment of the president.

"The rally that we held on the Amherst Commons on Tuesday night was only the beginning of a difficult struggle that will eventually culminate in the impeachment of King Richard. Other actions, such as writing to our members of Congress and the exploration of coordinating some kind of national movement are crucial if we are to be effective.

"The Commuter Assembly has established a table that sells postcards to send to our representatives - opposite the candy counter in the Student Union lobby. If you are not able to work directly with the Committee to Impeach Nixon, we ask that you at least send a telegram or postcard to your Congress-person. If you are not able to attend the meeting today but are interested in working on the committee, call 545-0341 and leave your name and phone number. This is our struggle and we must work together to win!"

CC Board Votes To Pay Committee Chairpersons; Beverage Prices Stay Up

By SHARON HUGHES

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night defeated a motion to lower the price of coffee, tea and soft drinks by 2 cents per cup in the Hatch Coffee Shop and Blue Wall.

They unanimously voted to pay their committee chairpersons $20 a week including retroactive pay since the third week of September.

The Board also approved a three page set of guidelines for renting tables to sell handcrafted and retail goods in the Campus Center and Student Union.

Board member Bob McDonnell said that the price of coffee, tea and soda should be lowered because it forces "a large number of people who can't afford to eat at the CC but just buy drinks to support those who can afford it".

He said coffee sales contribute $25,000 in profit to the CC food operations and by doing so keep the cost of less profitable food items down.

"Who is buying coffee that is not buying meals? Two kinds of people...those who can't afford the prices and over 10,000 people with meal tickets", he said.

He argued that the cost of coffee and the minimal labor cost involved making it didn't justify the price (17 cents and 22 cents).

McDonnell said the 2 cents increase over last year's price may ultimately result in fewer sales. CC Food Services projects 653,000 cups of coffee will be sold this year. One million styrofoam cups were used for coffee last year.

"One possibility is that we're losing 400,000 cups in sales," he said.

However, Chairperson of the Food Services Committee, John Hays projected a loss ($24,250) if the price of drinks were lowered.

"That's a cost of $1-$1.35 per student, and we'd have to make it up somehow," he said.

CC Director John Corker said the price on campus is competitive with off campus restaurants which charge extra for drinks "to go".

Board member Don Sullivan said "Outside people buy meals in the coffee shop as well as students -- and they buy a good chunk of the coffee, tea and soda."

The $20 salary of chairpersons is subject to weekly review by the officers of the Board. The pay is in accordance with the scale set last week for Student Senate Chairpersons.

The Campus Center Table Policy represents little change from the general policy now in effect. Students can continue to sell both handcrafted and commercial goods but preference will be given to RSO Graduate Senate organizations, CC organizations, CC fee paying students and Continuing Education students, respectively.

Area Boycotts Support UFW

By BONNIE ASSELIN

Boycotts provide the "power" in pressuring growers to sign United Farm Workers Union contracts said Robyn German, area director of UFW.

Charles March, staff member of UFW, calls the Farm Workers Union a "non-violent" and "non-profit organization."

"Sure, we could go to California and settle it, burn, fight, but we want it through non-violence...through peaceful boycotting and picketing," he said.

Both German and March are working in the area, setting up boycott committees and store picketing.

Ms. German's main concentration, presently, is Atkin's Fruit Bowl in Hampshire. UFW supporters are picketing them to sell only black eagle (symbol of UFW) lettuce and grapes. She describes this store as "crucial" because "other private store owners will follow" Atkin's decision.

There will be a "mass picket" of Atkin's Sunday from 1 to 3. She urges all who are interested to help.

UFW workers have been picketing Atkin's for three weeks on Saturdays and Sundays from 11 to 4.

In support, Amherst Food Co-op has discontinued ordering cider from Atkin's.

Ms. German said that there "has been some harassment. Police restricted passing out leaflets in the driveway. It would stop people from coming in." She cited an incident where a picketer was nearly struck by an incoming car.

In answer to why Atkin's will not comply, she said it would be an action "against growers in California. He is a grower and sympathizes with them." Also, "he doesn't want people telling him what to do."

UFW workers have met success in the area. Area chain stores Food Mart, Big Y, and Finast have agreed to sell only black eagle grapes and lettuce. Their energy will now be focused on Stop and Shop, A&P, and Shop-Rite said Ms. German.

In addition to UMass, Hampshire, Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke colleges will begin or have begun boycotts of scab lettuce and grapes.

Charles March described the main conflict to be between the Farm Workers Union and the Labor Contractors.

The Teamsters' method of hiring is with labor contractors who choose the workers." They are "usually, young, strong men."

A provision under UFW-Grower contracts is a hiring hall through which employers request workers. "The hiring hall makes all kinds of people available, there is no discrimination," he said.

He stressed that strikes in California for UFW contracts is a "workers decision," Cesar Chavez, head of UFW "is a farm worker and for the people."

On April 16th UFW contracts expired and 90 per cent of the workers went on strike when growers announced that the workers were under Teamsters contract. A workers vote was not taken before the signing. they are prepared to strike and boycott until contracts with UFW are signed and until working conditions and pay are improved.

At UMass, the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee is working in UFW interests. Some members to contact are Wendy Simon, Joanne Levenson, Cynthia Jacques, Kathy Duffy, Theresa Carr, and Ken Allen.

SINAI DESERT, West Bank of Suez, DUMMIES: plywood and cardboard dummies of anti aircraft missiles were found by advancing Israeli armored troops at an otherwise evacuated SAM site some 10 miles west of Suez inside Egypt. Vehicles in background belong to Israeli forces.

Egypt Admits Army Cut Off

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A high Egyptian official said Israeli tanks tried to storm Suez City Thursday despite the Middle East truce, and admitted in effect that some Egyptian soldiers have been cut off in the Sinai by Israeli invasion forces.

Ashraf Ghorbal, a top adviser to President Anwar Sadat, charged that Israeli troops blocked U.N. truce observers from getting to the southern front near Suez City, turning them back about 61 miles from Cairo.

That was the first Egyptian admission of Israeli control of the vital Cairo-to-Suez supply route. It indirectly confirmed Israeli claims that the Egyptian 3rd Army-reported to include 20,000 soldiers with 200 tanks-was stranded on the eastern bank of the canal.

"They are in no immediate danger of starving or dying from thirst," a Tel Aviv military spokesman said of the Egyptian troops. "But as a military force they are finished."

The Israeli military command claimed both fronts were relatively quiet, 20 days after the Middle East exploded in the fourth Arab-Israeli war, and two days after the second U.N. cease-fire went into effect.

The Israeli command said three teams of U.N. officers from Damascus reached Israeli forward positions in Syria and began monitoring the truce from Mt. Hermon and other vantage points.

But Ghorbal told newsmen in Cairo that fighting was still going on around Suez City at the southern end of the Suez Canal "because of Israeli cease-fire violations."

Ghorbal said U.N. truce observers have taken up their monitoring positions along the northern and central sectors of the 103-mile-long canal, indicating the fighting there had petered out as reported in Tel Aviv.

Ghorbal's acknowledgement that the force was cut off apparently was aimed at underscoring Cairo's charges of repeated Israeli cease-fire violations and attempts to bolster the Israeli invasion force contrary to the in-place truce.

"There is no reason for us to violate the cease-fire," countered the Israeli military spokesman. "We have them surrounded. We have what we want."

The first U.N. cease-fire sponsored by the United States and the Soviet Union began Monday, Oct. 22, but fell apart when fighting erupted anew along the canal. The Security Council reiterated its truce call in a second cease-fire that began Tuesday morning.

Sadat accused the Israelis of taking advantage of the truces to expand their foothold in Egypt proper west of the Suez Canal. Tel Aviv claims to hold about 750 square miles of the Egyptian heartland in a penetration stretching from below Ismailia southward around Suez City.

The Egyptian leader appealed Wednesday night for a joint peace-keeping force from the United States and the Soviet Union, but Washington rejected his appeal.

Uncertainty over Soviet intentions led President Nixon to order a worldwide alert of American military forces Thursday amid fears the Soviets might send a peace-keeping force into Egypt unilaterally.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said in Washington that the United States opposes introduction of American or Russian soldiers into the Middle East "in whatever guise."

Mideast Roundup

U.S. Troops Put On Alert

States and the Soviet Union, became a major problem when Egypt asked for a joint American-Russian troop contingent to police the cease-fire.

In a speech Wednesday night, Soviet U.N. representative Jacob Malik said the request was justified. The White House immediately ruled out such an action.

Kissinger explained the American position in his news conference, saying American and Soviet military presence was a danger both to the Middle East and to the world.

"It is inconceivable," he said, "that the forces of the great powers should be introduced in the numbers that would be necessary to overpower both of the participants."

He expressed even stronger opposition to the unilateral introduction of troops "by any great power, especially by any nuclear power."

To do so, the secretary indicated, would test the limits of U.S. willingness to continue in the process of improving U.S.-Soviet relations.

"I resent any attempt to exploit the policy of detente...to exacerbate conflicts," Kissinger said.

At the same time, he laid out a parallel U.S. attitude of conciliation. "We do not now consider ourselves in a confrontation with the Soviet Union," Kissinger stated and the United States "is not yet prepared" to say its limits have been breeched.

Kissinger spoke solemnly of the responsibilities of the nuclear powers to keep their differences within boundaries that do not threaten mankind.

He said the United States and the Soviet Union have "a very special responsibility" to remain within these bounds, although they are ideological adversaries.

This is how developments took place as crisis flared, then apparently subsided:

-The administration got word sometime Wednesday night that the Soviets might move unilaterally to enforce with troops the Middle East cease-fire. Kissinger would not discuss the way this became known. Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said it was in a blunt note from Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin to President Nixon, a note first given to Kissinger.

-Deliberations during the night led to a White House decision to alert American forces. The Pentagon said the orders were relayed to military units beginning shortly after midnight. At 3 a.m., Kissinger said, the National Security Council met and agreed unanimously on the alert action.

-As military men obeyed the alert order, the action became known publicly. There was no official announcement of the order until late Thursday morning.

-President Nixon and Kissinger met for more than an hour with Democratic and Republican leaders of Congress. That breakfast-hour meeting had been arranged before the new crisis. The congressional leaders emerged describing the alert as a precautionary move. The Pentagon and the White House later emphasized the same point.

-At noon, Kissinger held his news conference. For an hour, he described U.S. policy, and rejected any arrangement that would introduce peace-keeping forces made up of major power troops into the Middle East.

-Little more than an hour later, Jacob Malik, Soviet ambassador to the United Nations, said the Russians would agree to the creation of a U.N. peace-keeping force including no big-power troops.

-At midafternoon the Security Council voted to dispatch such a peace-keeping force.

Kissinger gave his news conference nine hours before President Nixon had been scheduled hold one. Nixon, however, postponed his until Friday, citing the Middle East developments.

Kissinger said that until Wednesday there was no major indication of Soviet willingness to do anything but cooperate in ending the fighting and start over-all negotiations, Kissinger said.

With the Soviet support of the new U.N. resolution, "the United States would feel we are back on the road that had been charted earlier this week," he went on.

What he was talking about was a Security Council resolution sponsored by the United States and the Soviet Union after Kissinger spent last weekend in Moscow talking with Soviet Communist party leader Leonid Brezhnev.

The resolution called for a cease-fire in place as of Oct. 22 and the ultimate beginning of Arab-Israeli negotiations on a final settlement under "appropriate auspices."

All parties remain in accord on this, Kissinger said, and the United States and Russia have agreed they will act as "the appropriate auspices."

He reported the negotiating process could begin "in a matter of a very few weeks."

Kissinger Denies Middle East Crisis Watergate Coverup

(AP Wirephoto)

WASHINGTON--AFTER CLOSED SESSION--Sen. James O. Eastland D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, talks to newsmen in Washington following a closed session of his committee. The Senate panel has scheduled public hearings next week to look into the firing of Special Watergate Prosecutor Archibald Cox.

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Denying that the White House is "playing with the lives of the American people," Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger icily rejected any suggestion that Thursday's Mideast developments were staged to obscure the still-boiling Watergate affair.

President Nixon postponed until Friday a news conference for questions about Watergate, even as new scandal disclosures surfaced and Republicans in Congress stepped up pressure for a new special prosecutor.

The White House said Nixon was too busy with the Middle East to hold the news conference planned for Thursday night.

Kissinger, speaking at a State Department news conference planned for Thursday night.

Kissinger, speaking at a State Department news conference, was asked whether domestic problems had prompted Nixon to call Thursday's early morning military alert.

"We are attempting to conduct the foreign policy of the United States with regard for . . .future generations," he said, adding:

"It is a symptom of what is happening in this country that it even could be suggested that the United States would alert its forces for domestic reasons."

At another point, he said, "There has to be a minimum of confidence that the senior officials of the American government are not playing with the lives of the American people."

There was a swirl of new developments Thursday in the Watergate affair:

-Several leading Senate Democrats pressed for creation of a special prosecutor who couldn't be fired by the President, and House Republicans urged Nixon to appoint his own replacement for ousted Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

-Nixon's own constitutional lawyer, Charles Alan Wright, said he personally favors appointment of another independent prosecutor, but not one as independent as Cox had been.

-Administration officials disclosed that the White House is blocking key testimony about Nixon's role in a controversial 1971 increase in federal price supports for milk. Former Agriculture Secretary Clifford M. Hardin and Undersecretary of Agriculture J. Phil Campbell have been instructed not to answer Senate investigators' questions about a key meeting with the President. White House lawyers are claiming executive privilege.

Public-interest groups have alleged in a lawsuit that the administration granted the increase as a political payoff to the dairy lobby for more than $400,000 they gave to Nixon's re-election campaign.

-It was learned that the President's one-time personal lawyer, Herbert W. Kalmbach, has told investigators he probably relayed word to the White House about a secret $100,000 gift from billionaire Howard R. Hughes to Nixon's friend, C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo. Kalmbach, according to an informed source, says he believes he did this in mid-1972, at least six months before Nixon acknowledges hearing about the controversial money.

Beachcombing May Be Past Art Warns Florida Representative

By WILLIAM L. CHAZE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beachcombing will soon become a lost pleasure for most Americans unless quick action is taken to protect public access to the nation's shorelines, Congress was told Thursday.

"High-rises, motels, vacation homes, hot dog stands and other development wall off the beaches and, in effect, deny the public access to beach property owned by them," said Rep. Bill Gunter, D-Fla.

Gunter was the leadoff witness before a House Merchant Marine and Fisheries subcommittee opening two days of hearings on legislation to insure public access to the beaches.

Gunter and Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., are cosponsers of a bill to allow the federal government to pay states up to 75 per cent of the cost of buying land necessary to grant public access to publicly owned shoreline. It also would provide federal assistance for development of transportation that would help the public reach the beaches.

"Protection and enhancement of the beaches is a continuing responsibility of the federal government where the public interest is involved," Gibbons said. "But this responsibility has lapsed with regard to preserving the public right to recreational use of the beaches due to the encroachment of private ownership...."

The Nixon administration opposes the bill on grounds that it is too restrictive.

Robert W. Knecht, director of the Office of Coastal Environment, said a provision that prohibits any construction that interferes with public access to beaches "would appear to unduly restrict legitimate private property uses and activities of landowners...."

Sirica Pursues Truth

BOSTON (AP) — Watergate Judge John J. Sirica said Thursday night that his greatest concern is "the orderly and dilligent pursuit of the truth."

The U.S. District court judge spoke at the convention of the American Judges Association which gave Sirica its award of merit for "judicial courage."

Sirica, in a brief speech, did not mention the Watergate case.

"What can I say? What could anyone say that would be appropriate in these circumstances except to observe that the primary concern of our times and our time-honored adversary system in the orderly and dilligent pursuit of the truth."

On Tuesday, President Nixon agreed to turn over tapes of White House conversations to Sirica.

Sirica is the first trial judge to receive the award of merit, the highest honor the association gives.

U.A.W. And Ford Near Contract Agreement

By JONATHAN WOLMAN
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - Bargainers for Ford and the United Auto Workers worked into the night Thursday with only the issue of voluntary overtime reportedly blocking a contract for 185,000 workers.

A source at Local 600, which has 34,000 members in the Detroit area, said Ford put a new offer on the table Thursday.

It was unacceptable only in the area of voluntary overtime, the source said.

The source did not say how the other key issue of retirement after 25 years with full pension benefits for 9,000 foundry workers had been resolved.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock sent a telegram to all Ford locals telling workers to stay on the job if there is a national agreement Friday morning, regardless of whether local disputes have been settled.

The strategy is similar to that used at Chrysler where all workers returned to their jobs after a nine-day strike and local disputes were settled later.

Sources said the company has offered an economic package meeting the 3 per cent annual pay raise and retirement after 30 years worked out Sept. 17 in an industry pattern contract with Chrysler.

That accord calls for retirement with a pension of $550 per month, to be boosted to $700 a month by 1978, for all workers with 30 years in the plants.

Ford production workers now average about $5 an hour.

Ford has indicated it may resist a settlement along the lines of Chrysler's voluntary overtime plan.

Military Summoned By Mid East Alert

By CRAIG AMMERMAN
Associated Press Writer

American military men were summoned to their security-tightened bases across the country and around the world on Thursday to assume positions dictated by the alert put into effect by President Nixon because of the Middle East crisis.

Calls went out in the early morning hours to Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine personnel either to report to their bases or to stand by their telephones. National Guard units in a number of states also were alerted.

Because of the security placed on the operation, it was difficult to determine exactly what was going on at the many military bases affected by the alert.

But reports from military spokesmen and soldiers who were willing to talk indicated it was a stand-by situation. A spokesman at Ft. Leonard Wood in Missouri said: "This means the chain of command is alert and exercising extra vigilance...in effect we are on a stand-by to stand by."

An Associated Press survey of switchboards at newspapers and at television and radio stations across the country indicated the general citizenry was not overly concerned. While some reported receiving a few calls inquiring about the alert, none reported an abnormal number.

Most military bases were closed to unauthorized personnel, making the degree of the alert difficult to determine.

The Atlantic Fleet was reported on a Condition 3 alert, which an officer described as "a high readiness defense posture." One officer said the scale of alerts runs from 5, a normal peacetime condition, to 1, a wartime alert.

Oil Executive Kidnapped

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) - An American oil company executive has become the latest victim of a wave of kidnapings in Argentina.

The executive is David B. Wilkie, 48, general manager of Amoco Argentina Oil Co. The Argentine company would not say Wilkie was kidnaped, but a spokesman in Chicago for the parent firm, Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, confirmed the abduction Thursday.

The spokesman in Chicago said Wilkie was believed to have been seized while he was on his way to work Tuesday.

"I have been advised that Mr. Wilkie has been kidnaped and there has been telephone contact with the kidnapers," said the spokesman, Alan White, manager of international public affairs for Standard.

Amoco Argentina Oil Co. is wholly owned by Amoco International, which is in turn owned by Standard of Indiana.

Wilkie assumed his Argentina duties March 1, 1972, after a tour with Amoco in Iran. He had worked previously in Argentina.

Informed sources in Buenos Aires said Wilkie was abducted by armed men as the executive was leaving his house in the Buenos Aires suburb of Martinez, north of the capital city.

The men used several cars to block the executive's chauffeur-driven limousine, the sources said.

The Argentine newspaper La Razon said the abductors demanded $1 million ransom. The newspaper did not give its source of information or say how the demand was made. There was no immediate official confirmation of a ransom demand.

A Swissair executive, Kurt Schmid, 43, was kidnaped Monday in Argentina. As of Thursday night, his fate was not known. Buenos Aires newspapers said in unconfirmed reports he was being held by the Marxist-led People's Revolutionary Army, an urban guerrilla organization blamed by the government for other abductions.

The last American kidnaped in Argentina before Wilkie was John Thompson, president of the Argentine subsidiary of Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. An Argentina record of $3 million was paid for his release. He was not harmed.

Recently, Coca Cola, Pepsi Cola, Braniff and Pan American World Airways have received extortion threats in Argentina, according to police sources. Most of the threats are thought to have been made by common criminals, the sources said.

New Yorker Phonily Finances World Trip

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) - Police are holding a New York City teen-ager they say used a friend's credit card and an estimated $200,000 in phony checks to finance a round-the-world trip that may have cost $500,000.

Officers said the companies which may have been duped in the two-month global spree read like a corporate who's who.

"Our phones have been ringing off the hook with calls from all over from banks, money order firms and others," said Sgt. Ed Koskey of the Orlando police criminal division.

"I think we found tickets for everything but Dogpatch Airlines. It's incredible," he added.

The youth, identified as Michael Thomas Henson, 18, was held in the city jail on charges of defrauding an Orlando innkeeper and possessing two worthless checks. Bond was set at $252, but police said holding warrants were being processed from other states.

Henson was picked up Sunday after a Howard Johnson's Motel complained the teen-ager didn't have enough money to pay for a one-day stay, officials said.

"We found about 20 plane tickets for two in the room," Koskey said. "The tickets showed trips to London, Paris, New York, Madrid, Africa, Lisbon, Hawaii, Hong Kong, Greece and Puerto Rico."

Investigators said Henson had a Master Charge card issued to a "Mr. Xavier" in Orlando. They said they spoke with Xavier and he said he lent the card to Henson and the youth's girlfriend on Aug. 6 to help them finance a trip from New York to Florida.

The girlfriend was not identified by police and apparently was not present at the time of the arrest.

Officials said forged checks and a check writing machine apparently had been used in the worldwide jaunt. They said the youth apparently cashed the phony checks and deposited them to open bank accounts from which he wrote personal checks to buy merchandise around the world.

World Churches Take No Mid-East Stand

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Although Christian leaders have voiced dismay at the new strife in the Middle East, and some have blamed aggression by Egypt and Syria, many have shunned laying the fault to either side.

They generally have confined their reaction to middle-road calls for peace and steps by the United Nations and big powers to achieve it. But their statements all say any settlement must uphold Israel's right to exist.

John Cardinal Krol, of Philadelphia, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said "we recognize the genuine grievances" on both sides.

"We respect the legitimate desire of Israel for secure boundaries, just as we respect the legitimate desire of the Arab nations to recover the land lost in the war six years ago," he added.

However, he said "recourse to violence" only worsens the problem and won't resolve it.

Some church leaders specifically blamed Arab states for starting the new conflict. The Rev. Dr. Robert C. Campbell, chief executive of the American Baptist Churches, said:

"The attack on Israel by Egypt and Syria as reported by our government and the United Nations observation group was a violation of international law and a threat to the right of Israel to exist as a state."

The Rev. Charles Angell, director of the Christian Unity Center of the Catholic Graymoor Fathers, said:

"When the Jews in Israel are faced with aggression and Jews everywhere are confronting terrorism, I think it is important for Christian friends not to scuttle into the woodwork.

"My concern is for all the people of the Middle East, but the cause of Arab Christians and Moslems is not served by beating war drums nor in fostering the illusion that somehow Israel will disappear from the earth."

Cost Of Living Council Favors Wage-Price Controls

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government lifted price controls Thursday from the fertilizer industry, a move officials said was necessary to expand food production next year.

The fertilizer industry is the first major field from which controls have been lifted since the Phase 4 anti-inflation program began in August.

But John T. Dunlop, director of the Cost of Living Council, said that although controls may be removed from some industries, he favors continuing the wage-price control program into 1974.

Dunlop said the decontrol of the fertilizer industry including most of its wages, would result in substantial increases in the price of fertilizer, but increased food production could bring about lower food prices.

The government also exempted nutrient materials used in the production of fertilizer and explosives and lifted controls on the sale of ammonia, nitrogen, urea, phosphate and potash used in making plactics, synthetic fibers, animal feeds and other products.

The fertilizer industry, supported by the Agriculture Department, had urged decontrol, saying a fertilizer shortage next year could reduce food production.

"A return to relative food price stability hinges on the farmer's ability to expand significantly output in 1974. An integral element in crop expansion is ample supplies of fertilizer," Dunlop said.

World fertilizer prices are as much as $40 a ton higher than domestic prices and have caused a big increase in U.S. fertilizer exports.

Dunlop said nearly 40 companies have committed themselves to divert considerable amounts of fertilizer from export to domestic use.

Dunlop said firms also have pledged to try to increase production.

Florida Woman Mistaken In Drugged Juice Case

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) - "I was really frightened," former model Louise Pieri said after she was mistakenly arrested by police seeking a woman who handed out drugged orange juice at shopping centers in four Florida cities.

The Portsmouth, R.I., woman said she was shopping Wednesday when two policemen "walked up and told me to follow them."

Mrs. Pieri said a crowd began to gather and people started taking photographs of her.

She said she was taken to a department store where a clerk had earlier reported seeing a woman in a large floppy hat resembling the woman who passed out the orange juice last week.

Fifteen persons in four Florida cities were hospitalized after drinking the juice which police said was spiked with belladona and two derivatives, atropine and scopoline.

The woman was described as good looking and wearing a white floppy hat and sunglasses.

Mrs. Pieri, 40, was wearing a black floppy hat when she was arrested.

She said she was released after the department store clerk told police she was not "the orange juice woman."

"Everyone started laughing and apologizing," Mrs. Pieri said. "I nearly fainted. The police wanted me to leave through a back door to avoid the crowd that had gathered. But I insisted on going through the front door because I had done nothing wrong.

"I told the crowd I was sorry to disappoint them and everyone laughed," she added. "I was really frightened and was cold all over."

UMass To Host Party Oct. 27 For Belchertown Residents

On Saturday, October 27, the Belchertown Volunteers will hold a Halloween party for a number of residents of the Belchertown State School. The party will be held ON CAMPUS in the Campus Center room 174-176 at 1:00 p.m. Anyone is invited to attend.

The party will provide an excellent opportunity for members of the UMass community to informally meet and spend an enjoyable afternoon with mentally retarded individuals who are usually restricted to an institutional setting. Belchertown Volunteers, past and present, are especially urged to attend. Some refreshments will be provided, however cookies and baked goods would be greatly appreciated. All those planning to attend are requested to bring a halloween mask fashioned from a paper bag; these will be given to residents.

The Belchertown Volunteers have been actively working with residents of the state school this semester. Earlier this month, they hosted a group of Belchertown residents on campus for a day. A number of members participated in a painting project at the school recently. The group will also be sponsoring a number of speakers on campus who will discuss the mentally retarded and mental health care in Massachusetts. On October 13, Dr. Robert Karl, assistant superintendent of the Belchertown State School, addressed the group. A member of the Mass. Assn. For Retarded Citizens will address the group on a date to be announced in November.

The Belchertown Volunteers will be transporting a group of Belchertown residents to the UMass-Vermont football game to be held on November 3 at Alumni Stadium. Escorts to sit and spend the afternoon with these people are still needed. Anyone interested in going to the UMass-Vermont game with a Belchertown resident and making a new friend in the process is requested to call Jay at 253-5897.

DYS Running In The Red

BOSTON (AP) - Some $680,000 in unpaid bills run up by the state Department of Youth Services may remain unpaid this year, according to testimony at a House Ways and Means Committee hearing Thursday.

The money, owed to group and foster homes caring for youngsters assigned to DYS, is not included in the $1.5 million deficiency budget now being considered by the legislative committee.

DYS Commissioner Joseph M. Leavey blamed the agency's deficits on an increase in the number of youngsters being assigned by the courts to DYS. He said the agency was handling some 700 more youths than it had anticipated. Total active cases numbered 2,521 on Oct. 6, he added.

In the areas of keeping track of youngsters under care and of money being spent Leavey said, "I think we are starting to get things under control."

Not so, said Rep. Joseph Early, D-Worcester, who contended that the agency had consistently overun its budget.

"We give you a budget and you're supposed to live within it," he said. "You've got a very sensitive issue here-children. Everybody loves children."

Early charged that DYS was expanding programs but still not providing needed services for juvenile offenders.

He criticized the agency for overspending in its board and allowance allotments given to some youngsters in DYS programs. Early said the appropriation in that area went from $20,000 in 1972 to $200,000 in 1973. When the legislature approved only $25,000 in that account for fiscal 1974, Early said it was spent during the first month.

Leavey said the allowances provided an incentive for some youths. He admitted that an additional $100,000 had been transferred from the agency's purchase of service account, which was already $1.5 million short.

Leavey also admitted under questioning by the committee to transferring some 200 youngsters in group homes from the DYS budget to the welfare department budget last May and June because DYS funds had run out. He added that expenses for caring for the youngsters were back on DYS's bill in July at the start of the new fiscal year.

Early responded "The only way to stop this sort of thing is not to fund it."

Yale Strings At U.M. Oct. 28

The Yale String Quartet, comprised of four internationally celebrated soloists, will appear in one of their unique performances on Monday evening, October 29, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall, at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. This renowned Quartet rarely plays in public due to the pressing commitments of its individual members' solo careers, and this will mark its first appearance at the Amherst campus.

The Monday evening event will mark the opening of the Fine Arts Council's chamber Music Series. The Quartet, whose members include Broadus Erle and Syoko Aki, violins, Walter Trampler, viola, and Aldo Parisot, violincello, will offer Debussy's Quartet in G Minor, Op. 10, Haydn's Quartet in Eb Major, Op. 33, No. 2 ("The Joke"), and Schubert's Quartet in D Minor, D. 810 ("Death and the Maiden").

The Quartet will hold an open rehearsal on Monday morning at 11 a.m. in Bowker Auditorium which will be open to the public. Following the concert on Monday evening, The Fine Arts Council, sponsors of the concert, will host a reception for the Quartet in the Campus Center so that students and concert goers may have an opportunity to meet with these distinguished artists.

Tickets for the concert by the Yale String Quartet are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, Telephone 545-0202, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass-Amherst students with IDs and $3.00 for others.

Students-Faculty Form Peace Forum

Arabs, Israelis, and others concerned with the current Middle East situation have formed the Arab-Israeli Peace Forum at UMass.

Participants of the forum, which includes students and faculty members, say they are convinced "it is better now to talk instead of fight."

Stated aims of the group are:

"1. To promote the exchange of views between Arab and Israeli students and professors, and other Arab and Israeli citizens now visiting the United States.

"2. To foster rational discussion of the issues involved in the Middle East conflict; issues aimed at developing joint proposals based on areas of common agreement.

"3. To promote the understanding, on each side, of the other side's fears, expectations, and basic rights.

"4. To contribute to the dissipation of the atmosphere of mutual fear, distrust, and threats."

Panel Discredits New Walpole Guards

BOSTON (AP) - An investigative panel at Walpole State Prison has recommended that newly-appointed guards should not be used to transfer inmates outside the prison.

The panel also suggested that Walpole inmates be taken to a hospital at Norfolk State Prison rather than to hospitals outside prison walls.

Landscape Conference Coming

A Landscape Assessment Conference to discuss approaches to the problem of evaluating visual resources will be held at the UMass Campus Center Nov. 15 and 16.

Among the sponsors are the UMass Institute for Man and his Environment and the Northeast Forest Experiment Station at UMass. Papers will be presented in three areas: statements of qualitative landscape values, assessment of human responses to the landscape and assessment of landscape resources.

The opening address on landscape values will be by J. B. Jackson, former editor of Landscape Magazine, at 1:45 p.m. Thursday. Full information is available from the Institute for Man and His Environment, Blaisdell House.

Volkswagen Sues Natl. Lampoon

NEW YORK (AP) - National Lampoon faces a $30 million damage suit for a mock car advertisement that says Edward M. Kennedy could have averted the accident at Chappaquiddick if he had been driving a Volkswagen.

A car driven by the Massachusetts senator plunged from a narrow bridge over Chappaquiddick Creek near Martha's Vineyard four years ago, killing Mary Jo Kopechne.

Volkswagen and its parent German company called the full-page advertisement "coarse, insensitive and cruel" and said some readers of the humor magazine had vowed never to buy another Volkswagen.

Boycott UNICEF

One of the biggest things going on, or so it seems, that acts in favor of the United Nations, in the eyes of most Americans anyway, is an organization known as the United Nations International Children's Fund. It collects funds from donations, their biggest drive coming every Halloween in the United States. This money is then given over to buy food and other needed supplies for children in poverty in other countries, or does it?

The first chairman of UNICEF was Ludwig Rajchmann from Poland. In 1957, he fled the United States rather than testify about his connections with Soviet Spy Alger Hiss.

By 1952, the Senate Internal Security Committee showed that there was an infiltration of disloyal Americans, mostly Communists, into UNICEF. Infiltration has continued to the point where the Communists have dominated UNICEF's Executive Board for the past three years. The evidence of this is that UNICEF is working to remove the responsibility of raising children from the parents and give that authority to the state-a plank stated in The Communist Manifesto. Also, the designers of UNICEF Christmas cards are communists such as the late Pablo Picasso, Ben Shahn, Lojos Vincze, etc.

And now, UNICEF is making a deal with North Vietnam and the Vietcong, the killers of tens of thousands of Americans. The torturers and perverts who made so many of our boys suffer and will not account for the MIA's are soon to receive as much as 30 million dollars in the next year or so, according to the Los Angeles Times of May 14, 1973.

During the time since the Vietnam war ended, our State Department has pushed for Foreign Aid to North Vietnam. The American people have refused to allow this to happen. All UNICEF is doing now is to make this a back door method of having American dollars fall into the hands of the North Vietnamese and Vietcong. Three million UNICEF dollars are pledged to Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam while 30 million goes to both the Vietcong and the Hanoi government.

The thing is that this money DOES NOT go to children. It goes to the governments. And the Communist governments, who have become the major recipients of UNICEF funds, use this money, food, clothing, etc. to further enslave their own children.

At one time, not too long ago, UNICEF was popular. Now, it isn't so popular. Collections have been reduced in many areas. People are becoming more aware of the underhandedness with which the UNICEF Board of Directors is using to offer aid to the Communist savages.

This is one of the ways the United Nations, with a Soviet structured charter, is promoting Communism throughout the world. And it is another reason why the United States should GET OUT OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

Remember this coming Wednesday that the only way you can stop UNICEF from aiding the North Vietnamese and Vietcong is to boycott it. It may be heartbreaking to turn down a little kid who comes up to you with his little orange box. The communists who run the UN and UNICEF are using this so people will contribute. And the child, of course, has no idea of what he is doing. But still and all, WE MUST NOT LET THE KILLERS OF OUR BOYS GET THEIR HANDS ON AMERICAN MONEY IN ANY WAY, SHAPE OR FORM. Boycott UNICEF!

Text Of Speech:

The Roots Of All Evil

By JOHN L. FISHER

The following will mainly deal with the present-mutual-slaughter in the Mid-East, assuming and hoping that a sober, logical analysis based on undisputable facts might be quite helpful and valuable. An honest effort to learn, to understand, to evaluate in complete fairness, free of any chauvinism, free of the present immense psychosis, created by Zionism in strict alliance with the most reactionary forces on this planet (No wonder Mr. Thieu of South Vietnam flatly stated: "I am for Israel") will advance the necessary independant thinking. Judgement, taking sides based on emotions or heritage remains suitable for Hitlerite racists with such dominant thesis as their declarations of: I am German-and therefore I am backing my Government. But this writer clearly refuses (while I happen to be Jewish) to back up the Meir-Dayan Government on such inadmissable grounds as emotions and/or heritage. I remain Jewish and declare my all-out opposition to the short-sighted and illogical policy of Meir-Dayan who openly declared that "in military victory lies the sure safeguard for life and peace". How dearly are Jewish and non-Jewish innocent victims paying for such an approach to the Palestinian problem??

Why is it that the present Israeli Government so far only recognizes the road to peace via "positions of strength", via the desire of total military victory?

Wouldn't logic, knowledge and fairness at least permit full recognition of the fact that the soil of Palestine does not exclusively belong to Jewish immigrants alone? Why no equal rights-at least-for the native Palestinian Arabs? With what right or logic has even a Golda Meir, an immigrant from the State of Wisconsin, more privileges, more rule, more right and more might than all the hundreds of Thousands of Palestinians who have been living for generations on the soil of Palestine?

But a key-question will certainly be: Why does Israel with its present Government act so persistently with military efforts so very dominant and almost exclusively? Do they really believe that they can practically rule the Mid-East in all eternity?? Who then is behind the Meir Government, who then and for what purpose backs Israel's fantastic (yet surely not invincible) military might??

To those with some advanced political thinking-and with me in the anti-imperialist camp, I surely have no secret to reveal. The roots of all evil (permit me to borrow for once Nixonian rhetoric) "to make this perfectly clear" must be found in the very economic system which has now reached the stage of all out "imperialism" while deeply rooted in and totally connected to capitalist-profit-free enterprise structure. Nothing, I repeat, nothing must be in the way to keep this system, connected to super-exploitation, to all our racism going.

You, the reader want proof. Facts. Believe me, the list will be unending-and if you have not atleast "somehow", at least "a little" learned by now, than let me sing with you: Where have all the flowers gone and: "WHEN WILL YOU EVER LEARN"!

The ruling class of this country has not acted and will not act in the Mid-East any different than in South-East Asia where they did not care in 10 long years about murder and total destruction, or any different than outright murder and the backing of the worst oppressors, whether Greece, Rhodesia, South Africa-or, now CHILE. This is undisguised imperialism-and we better take notice. The ruling class of this country surely does not act any better domestically than abroad and facts are proof, from the murder of George Jackson and Martin Luther King, from the crimes at Attica to the crimes of Watergate, from the Bay of Pigs to the deeds at My-Lai-and finally from our acting in Chile and in the Mid-East. It is a "must" to see the very connections and the overall global spectrum where all events in the Mid-East are naturally to be included.

To become specific: The Arab nations had their awakening. They did not become marxist-socialist overnight. But for a long time, during the last 2 decades, they certainly learned that they were for centuries the victims of terrific oppression and exploitation by economic giants of the western world. In one way or another they showed resistance and struggle. The Suez Canal became nationalized and was rightly declared as Egyptian as the Hudson River is considered American. Lybya declared their oil "theirs". Syria considered herself "anti-imperialist". Naturally the last big bulwark of decaying capitalism, the ruling class of the U.S.A. took notice. The strong alliance with Israel and our planes and guns-to hold the Arab world in check has surely economic motivations. So far-with the immense military strength of Israel-the Arab world remained "in check"--so far United States economic foothold remains, although badly shaken by latest events.

Zionist propaganda to-day, as before-would make us believe that the point at discussion is exclusively "the survival of the Jews in Israel". That all military actions of the Israelis now-as before have been exclusively in defending their land. Such is the basis of all arguments, defending from A to Z all and everything, deeds and misdeeds alike. Apologists for Zionism will not speak about the fact that Israel after general recognition in the U.N. as an independent State seized no less than 3-4 times the territory of its own in an aggressive war. They will not speak about the fact that some 1.500.000 Palestinian Arabs are registered with the United Nations as Refugees.

A fascist-minded general Dayan even to-day does not think of returning one inch of militarily conquered territory to any of the Arab peasants who lost their homes and their land. On the contrary the present Meir-Dayan rulers are arranging for more and more Jewish settlers and Jewish settlements deep in completely Arab territory. The goal clearly is for a greater and stronger Israel with obvious annexation of Arab land.

While the Jewish people of Israel without doubt, should have all the right to live peacefully in the Mid-East, in their own state and in secure borders, Arab Palestinians must be granted their rights in their own land.

That the Israeli policy of aggression and annexation has no future and might very well end in catastrophe only is the one truth that Zionist propaganda to this very day does not recognize.

There is nothing anti-Jewish in the quite valuable comment of the French minister Michel Jobert, when he stated-while Egyptian and Syrian Arab troops entered territory taken over by the Israelis in 1967: "Is it necessarily unforeseen aggression to try to go home??"

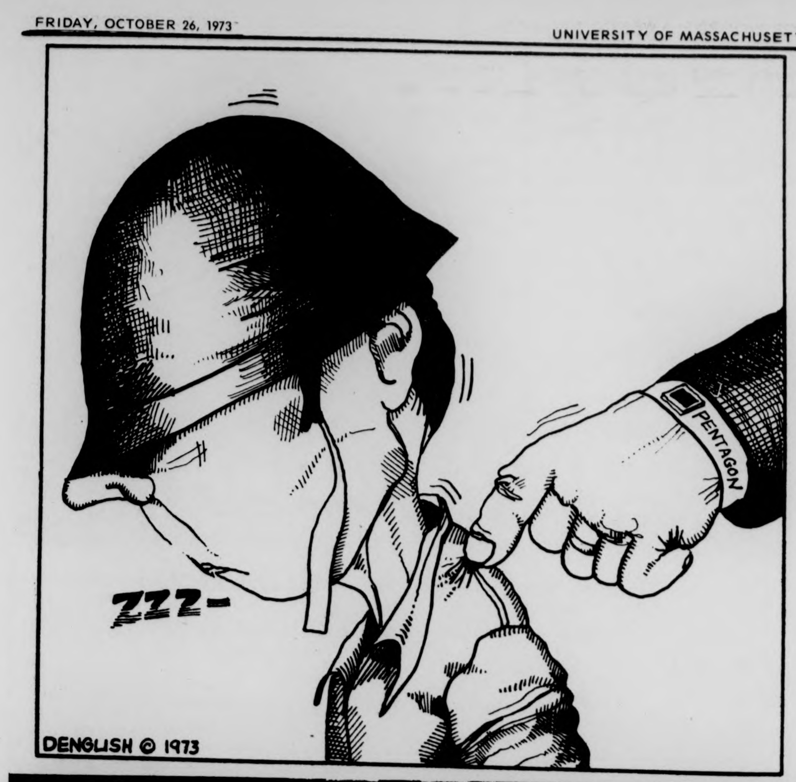
"HOUSEWORK"



The Organization Man

By EDWARD SOTOLONGO

An organization is only as strong and effective as the commitment of its members. This statement has held true for organizations whose objectives allow them relative freedom within the system in which they operate. But what about those organizations who seek to move for change and whose goals often run counter to the established societal norms? Included in this broad area are feminist groups, consumer advocates, civil rights groups and most Third World organization. These groups soon find that in order to survive, they must be strong enough to resist outside pressures caused by the "establishment". This pressure is usually applied in direct proportion to the threat this establishment feels the organization poses to its retention of power. Students involved in these movements know well what fate befell organizations like the Black Panthers, the Young Lords, the SDS and C.O.R.E. to cite a few. Some are forced to go underground, others are co-opted---and many simply die. Those who survive do so because they have learned a valuable lesson--they cannot exist on good intentions alone. They begin to recognize the necessity for strength, unity and discipline within their own ranks. They must clarify their purpose, define a plan of action, and learn how to resolve internal conflicts. Just as important is the clear understanding by each member of what his role is.

AHORA, the Spanish-speaking organization on campus, realizing this need for self-evaluation, has reserved this weekend for that purpose. They are going to have an organizational workshop to "get on the case." The meetings will be held at the Campus Center from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. To all brother and sister organizations, we suggest you follow suit and "get your heads together." You should know by now that Big Brother is watching---and listening.

Letters To The Editor

A Look At Zionism

To The Editor:

As a student of the Middle East, I was distressed to read that church groups in the Five College Area had unanimously decided to support Israel. The guiding political philosophy of Israel is Zionism which actively supports the ingathering of all the Jews in the world to Israel. This philosophy if literally adhered to would increase the population of Israel by millions of people, which would require expropriation of more Arab land and would lead to crowding, if not severe overcrowding, of populations.

According to the Law of Return (official Israeli law), any Jew landing on Israeli soil immediately acquires Israeli citizenship, whereas the people indigenous to the area whether Muslim or Christian can never be first class citizens. This leaves open to speculation the degree to which Israel is a racist state, where those whose parents were of Jewish ancestry and whose religion is Judaism are the only segment of the population with full civil rights. To equate Zionism with Judaism is to denigrate one of the great monotheistic religions of the world. Yet by their uncritical support of Zionist Israel, church groups are in effect supporting Zionism, a political, pseudo-religious philosophy, rather than Judaism.

The Egyptians and Syrians did not attack Israeli land; they invaded land taken from them in a war six years ago. We have so easily forgotten the strategic importance of the Suez canal and the financial losses to the Egyptians caused by the closing of the canal.

Another moral issue which unthinking support of Israel totally ignores is the issue of the Palestinian's legitimate right to return to their homes, from which they were evicted by terorism and war. The Palestinian refugee problem was created partly by American politics and financial backing which helped to displace these people. Without a solution to this problem there will be no peace possible in the Middle East.

Ask Any 4-Year-Old

To The Editor:

In the past few days I have noticed an awful lot of pictures of congressmen in the newspapers. Congressmen...you can finally speak. Congressmen...I see you don't mind kicking someone in the ribs if it pleases the American public...I see the American public...disgustingly gullible as ever.

HANG THE PRESIDENT! Everyone loves it! Now I can see them look at all the leaches. Were they always in government? I'm not talking about the president; I'm talking about the people who are screaming IMPEACH!...IMPEACH!...over every available news media. Public servants? NO! Public leaches? You bet your vote-suckin' representative they are.

Ask any intelligent four-year-old what he thinks of the President of the United States of America...He'll say it, "IMPEACH THE PRESIDENT!" What is really saddening about the whole situation is that most people know little more than that four-year-old; the only difference being a somewhat larger set of vocal cords.

"IMPEACH THE PRESIDENT!" We all hear it..we all love its' melodious ring...ask the four-year-old...then ask yourself..who's sick?

Stand Trial

To The Editor:

It is unfortunate that your coverage of Tuesday's "Impeach Nixon" rally did not include the remarks made by Bernie Lougee of the Young Socialist Alliance. The YSA actively supports the growing movement in this country to impeach President Nixon and were leading builders of the Amherst rally. We are totally against the secrecy that has been practiced by Nixon's administration and condemn the latest moves in defiance of the people's right to know.

We believe that Nixon should stand trial, not only for his Watergate related crimes, but especially for the crimes he had committed against humanity - from his vicious massacres in Vietnam and Cambodia, to his support of the military junta in chile, to his systematic denial of the right of the poor and oppressed nationalities in this country to make a decent living.

However, these injustices are not the result of one person's or even one administration's policies. As we have seen time and time again, represented by the Republican and Democratic parties, it is the whole capitalist system that has maintained its rule through secrecy, deception, and outright lies. Internationally, with Kennedy's Bay of Pigs, Johnson's invasion of the Dominican Republic, Nixon's secret bombings of Cambodia and Laos, and nationally with the increased repression of black people, antiwar activists and trade union struggles, we have been shown the unending conspiracy on the part of the handful of people who control this country against the true needs and desires of the overwhelming number of people. Secrecy and repression are the pillars upon which the government of the rich few rests. Using harrassment, infiltration, and provocation as they see fit, they have tried to weaken and destroy all movements to change society.

To counter such moves, the YSA has brought charges against Nixon, the rest of the Watergaters and individuals in the Justice Department. We intend to stop the government from attempting to prevent us from carrying out our democratic rights to speak out and organize, and we hope that our legal suit encourages other groups and individuals to take similar actions.

Only the American people can force Nixon out of office. Mass pressure through demonstrations and protests can force action to be taken. Congress would like to find anyway possible to avoid impeaching Nixon because politicians don't want the American people to realize that changes in the government can be won through our collective action.

The YSA thinks that along with Nixon this whole system should stand trial, a system where two percent of the population owns and controls the country's wealth, a system where a handful of people govern in their own interests and then tries to hide and lie about it to the people. this system must be overturned. There is an alternative to the corruption of capitalist rule and that is the building of a real democracy based on human need and not on private consumption - a socialist society.

S.B. 1400, H.R. 6046

To The Editor:

Nixon's Watergate problems: the tapes, Cox, Richardson; and Agnew's illegal activity have been receiving all the news of late. Meanwhile Nixon's most repressive legislative proposal in 25 years, the "Criminal Code Reform Act of 1973" is moving through the U.S. Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures. This bill (S.B. 1400, H.R. 6046) was drafted by John MItchell. Upon introduction, Senator Hruska of Nebraska said, "The bill which I introduce today is recognized as a monumental effort by the Administration, including the Dept. of Justice...Particular accolades should go to former Attorney General John N. Mitchell." Mitchell is now under indictment. This bill formalizes the centralization of decision-making done by the Nixon administration. This is Nixon's new "Law and Order" bill. Law and Order you ask? Those who were calling for Law and Order in 1968 and 1972 don't pay your taxes, and have de-legitimized the presidential elections of 1972.

The "Criminal Code Reform Act of 1973" includes the Smith Act. This revives the McCarthy era witch hunt law which the Supreme Court held unconstitutional. It provides 15 years and a $100,000 fine for mere advocacy or membership in an organization that allegedly calls for revolutionary change "as speedily as circumstances permit...at some future time". (See Sec. 1103) Jefferson's Declaration of Independence which affirmed the duty of a people to alter or abolish a government that failed to fulfill its obligation would hereby be forgotten. The junta in Chile is now enforcing military rule that closely resembles Nixon's revival of Smith Act.

Another section (1801) redrafts the 1968 anti-riot act. It provides three years and a $25,000 fine for the "movement of a person across a state" line (as at Wounded Knee), or for even the use of the mail or telephone "in the course of the planning, promotion" of a "riot". A "riot" is defined as "an assemblage of five" which "creates a grave danger" to "property".

Under this law virtually every kind of civil rights, peace and other protest action would be threatened with severe penalties under a series of vaguely drafted infringements on the right of assembly. (See Secs. 1111, 1115-7, 1302, 1328, 1335, etc.)

The new Criminal Code would provide a one year and $10,000 fine for possession of a minor amount of marijuana for personal use. This would be regressive in that it would again send narcotics agents after the user of petty drugs rather than after the pushers of hard drugs. (Sec. 1822).

Section 521 (referring to police force) would allow officers to use deadly force to prevent escape of a person arrested for any crime, however petty, and without regard to the danger to the life of others. The innocent people that would be killed due to this legislation would be reminiscent of Jackson State, Orangeburg, South Carolina and Kent State.

Chapter 206 of this act reaffirms the 1968 law permitting Nixon to wiretap domestic activities which he thinks are a "danger to the structure" of the government. It also expands the Attorney General's authority to wiretap alleged offenses related to First Amendment protected actions. It goes so far as to allow 48 hour "emergency" taps without court approval. This is a blatant example of the centralization of power in the hands of the police state and Nixon.

Another section alleviates the problem that the government had with telephone company workers and landlords that refused to bug other citizens. The new criminal code would punish any person who failed to cooperate "forthwith" and "unobtrusively" with government wiretappers.

This bill (S.B. 1400, H.R. 6046) is an 800 page offering dealing also with civil rights, hand guns, insanity, obscenity, entrapment, contempt, secrecy, and the restoration of the death penalty. I've just stated a few of the most objectionable parts of the bill. Anyone concerned with a fair legal system, and dedicated to fighting fascism should write to their senators and representatives for copies of the bills and demand opinions on the subject matter. If we don't voice our opposition to this act the United States may become totally fascist, democratically. Write to Congress, demand impeachment and conviction, and a vote against this repressive bill.

A Fresh Look At Energy

To The Editor:

We're in an energy crisis. We're running out of oil. Our uranium supplies won't last to the end of the century. Our coal will last a long while--but the sulphur and ash poisons the air. Simply trying to patch up our present methods of generating energy is short-sighted, because there are fundamental problems with those systems.

What we need is a fresh look at energy and ways of generating it. This Saturday from 9:30-4:00 the Alternate Energy Conference at Memorial Hall sponsored by C.E.Q. will have 4 speakers who will describe fundamentally different ways of supplying our energy needs.

A new day will dawn when we tap the sun directly and harness the winds so that we don't exhaust or poison our only Earth.

Thanks For Not Answering My Questions

To the Editor:

Thank you, Mr. Godding, for your reply in the Collegian (Oct. 25), and the kind consideration and grace that you have extended therein:

1. In your answers to the questions I did not ask,

2. In your answer to the question I did ask...(Interesting that someone did not put in at least a letter to the Editor two or three weeks ago informing the Collegian-reading-bus-using-public of the initiation of the express buses not stopping at P V and C V on the outward runs to Sunderland between 2 and 5 p.m. One wonders how much money and time that would have cost...)

3. That you, Sir, did definitely get wrong information from the person who took my phone call. (Deliberate manipulation, or unintentional bias? I KNOW what I SAID, but does your informant know what I said, or does he think he knows what he heard me say? And please ask him for what answers he gave to what questions from whom? Definitely not to the questions I asked!)

4. Thank you that extra buses were run during off-peak hours somedays. (What capacity did they run at ? Should your readers suppose that these runs did not cost money and time?)

5. Do please ask the Collegian for the original letter and see the complete form of the last sentence to item 3. (Not that it makes any difference now.)

6. Your implication in the sentence "...10,000 other riders who seem satisfied with this service..." would lead your readers to believe that if silence, inaction or apathy means satisfaction, then obviously everyone of the 20,000 plus on this campus must be satisfied with the turn of events in the political arena in the capital, except, of course, for the 5 or 10 few who write in to the Collegian.

7. Thank you, Sir, obviously, altogether have missed the points I was making in my letter. (It IS EVIDENT - you did have "trouble deciphering the conglomeration of complaints", because you, Sir, will see just what you want to see, the way you want to see it. And please do not ask me to say more on that subject, Sir.)

8. Could we close the issue here? Or do you want to make it a long drawn out paper-consumption contest? It is NOT my intention to make an issue of what I have, and had, written. But you, Sir, have decided to be personal in your reply. All I ask is that if universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice, then if you desire peace, you must cultivate justice.

In closing, I ask you, Sir, to please read the last paragraph in the letter in the Oct. 19th issue again, and thanking you, Sir, that you are on the ball and are a person of authority in the system. In peace; I am just, a number.

Keep Up The Good Work

To The Editor:

With reference to Chris Whitman's letter to the Collegian concerning the lack of talent and imagination of Kris Jackson's KAMPUS KAPERS. I think that Chris Whitman should come down from his-her trip to realize that the "same old shit" that he-she is "showered with daily" is the same old shit that goes on at UMass every day. Kris Jackson has made a humorous cartoon out of what happens every day in our own little Umie society. He attacks the problems at UMass through humor. Pinball addicts, drinking problems, drug problems, roommates, sexual freedom, dining commons food, etc. are all problems that many people on campus are so apathetic about that the only way they can be woken up out of their daze is through cartoons. Cartoons are the most read item in newspapers today. Kris Jackson is reaching more people through his satire than would a serious article on problems at UMass. If Chris Whitman and others like him-her would devote less time to reading Dennis the Menace, Peanuts, B.C., and other purposeless, but funny cartoons and read more satirical, relevant cartoons then maybe he-she would care enough about the problems to try to do something about them.

To Kris Jackson-Keep up the good work.

Kodak Grants $12,750 To UMass

UMass has received grants totaling $12,750 under Eastman Kodak Company's 1973 Educational Aid Program.

Kodak's financial support includes an unrestricted direct grant of $6,750 and a research grant of $6,000.

UMass is among 118 four-year publicly supported colleges and universities receiving direct grants from the company this year. The grants are based on the number of graduates from these institutions who joined Kodak within five years after graduation and are currently in their fifth year of employment. Kodak contributes $250 for each academic year--undergraduate or graduate--completed by graduates at publicly supported schools. Six UMass graduates are with Kodak.

Distinguished Teacher Nominee Sought

Have you ever had a teacher whose class always seemed too short, who left you ready to tackle the world with excitement over a subject, who could interpret scholarly research in the classroom adeptly, went out of the way to counsel you constructively, or otherwise offered you all the finest qualities of teaching one hopes to know? If that person is at UMass, the Distinguished Teacher Awards Committee wants to help you honor that excellence.

Nominations are being sought for outstanding professors, teaching assistants, and teaching associates. The annual awards, including honoraria, are bestowed each autumn. Then the search begins again with the Committee urging all faculty, students, alumni and other interested members of the University community to submit the names and supporting statements of their choices. Only one limitation is placed upon nominees...that faculty nominees should have taught at UMass for at least 3 years (does not hold for T.A.s).

Nominations should be submitted as soon as possible to allow for the greatest opportunity to collect information about each person during this semester. Please send to: Professor Fergus Clydesdale, c-o Kinney Thiele, Distinguished Teacher Awards Committee, Provost's Office, 362 Whitmore.

Sarge Would 'Bet A Buck' On Re-election Run

WEST SPRINGFIELD, (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent says that he'd "bet a buck" he will run for re-election.

Sargent attended a reception which drew about 150 Hampden County Republicans Wednesday night. The governor's office gave the appearance no advance publicity.

Sargent described the reception as "an opportunity for me to meet the people who have been helpful to me in the past. Presuming I would be running again, I would hope they would be in a position to give me a hand."

In remarks to the gathering, Sargent spoke of the possibility of his running for re-election and of recent Watergate developments.

"I'm not a betting man, but if I were, I'd be willing to bet a buck that I'll be running next year. I'm not announcing, but I'm willing to bet," he said.

Sargent said he was pleased that President Nixon decided to release the Watergate tapes, but said, "The President of the United States has a long way to go before he can restore confidence to the highest office of this land.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Persons with a "sweet tooth" are most apt to be born under Taurus or Libra and on the 6th, 15th or 24th. Those whose tastes run to spicy or peppery foods are likely to be Aries or Scorpio, born on the 9th, 18th or 27th.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What seems like a "sure thing" may be deceptive and costly. Know it and pull in money reins. Don't look for something for nothing. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could be drawn into your sphere of activity. Avoid putting too much stock into promises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Maintain low profile. Let others take initiative. Be a keen observer. Legal snarl indicated if you rush, push, insist or attempt to skip details. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could figure in plans, activities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Much that happens is "played down." There is undercurrent of secrecy. One behind the scenes may be pulling strings. Know it and quietly prepare to protect your interests. Check memos. Be aware of calls, messages.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on home, domesticity. Taurus, Libra persons may be involved. Emphasis is on emotional response to sudden change. Persons who know little may claim to know it all. Family member can become ally if you are diplomatic.

LEO (july 23-Aug. 22): Take it slow, easy. Remain calm in face of what might appear to be growing roadblocks, opposition. Read between the lines. Patience is a strong ally. Some who are in seats of authority may be trying to tell you something. Evaluate before responding in negative.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be somewhat slowed down by responsibility. You have obligations and to resent them would be the opposite of positive. If you adhere to principles, even though this means temporary discomfort, you ultimately will benefit. Message will become increasingly clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish what you start--deliver what you promise. You have chance now to gain prestige. Aries person, who seems to oppose, will be in your corner. Check tendency to chase "losing proposition." Know when to let go.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): One generally close to you could be withholding information. You have right to assert views and to be informed. Reject concept that "big brother" knows best--instead be independent, inquiring. Leo, Aquarius persons could figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pressing matters, close to home, should take precedence over other affairs. Don't duck issues. By facing facts as they exist, you create positive atmosphere. Hunch could pay dividends. Believe in yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't mix money and friendship. You risk both if you do. Be expansive without going to too much expense. Message should become increasingly clear. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could figure prominently. Romantic interests appear to dominate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will expand sphere of activity. One who discourages may be envious. Know it and heed your own counsel. Some of your best qualities surface--and are appreciated. Recognition is due from professional associate, superior.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be diligent. Leave no loose ends. Put together puzzle pieces. Don't be satisfied merely that something happened--find out why it occurred. Do some detective work. Messages tend to be garbled. Don't judge by surface indications. Delve deep for real meanings.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an organizer. You understand the motives of people. You draw to you may born under Capricorn and Cancer. You are going to be happier. You will travel and entertain to a greater extent. You will laugh and socialize. Life will take on a brighter hue. You have come through much and now pleasure can replace gloom.

International Non-War News

PHNOM PENH (AP)-Four divisions of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have left Cambodia for South Vietnam and are massed for possible attacks in the Mekong Delta and Saigon regions, Western diplomatic sources report. The troop transfer may be related to recent stepped-up fighting in Vietnam, sources said. It could also reflect a Communist assessment that Cambodia insurgents are now strong enough to operate alone without the heavy Vietnamese help of the past.

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)-Military firing squads have executed three more members of the outlawed Socialist party in the northern city of Antofagasta. Together with four Socialists executed in the same city Wednesday, their deaths bring to 84 the number of persons the military says it has executed since the Sept. 11 ouster of Marxist President Salvador Allende.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Director John T. Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council says he favors continuing wage-price controls past the end of 1973. Dunlop indicated it was still possible that controls would be lifted from some-but not all-industries by the end of the year. But, he said, "I do not think the state of the economy, in many sectors, is suitable for decontrol by that time."

WASHINGTON (AP)-House leaders have postponed consideration of a trade bill with a sensitive section affecting the Soviet Union, in an evident attempt to avoid heightening tension over the Middle East situation. The bill is a revised version of a measure sought by President Nixon to strengthen his hand in international trade negotiations. It had been set tentatively for House consideration next week.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The annual retail cost of a marketbasket of farm-produced food declined $24 in September, the sharpest drop in 17 years, according to government figures. The price decline, the first of the year, would have been much greater had middlemen passed along all the squeeze absorbed by farmers, the figures indicated.

Paul Hansen

The Monster Back

By JAY LUPPOLD

Some people call it strong safety. Others refer to it as "monster back". Whatever, that is what Paul Hansen does, and does well.

Hansen, an all-league and all-city quarterback from New York City has been the starting strong safety for UMass the past two years. So far this year, the 6 ft. 190 lb. senior has two interceptions, a big fumble recovery in the URI debauchery, and leads the defensive backfield along with Bob Parrot in tackles.

Paul was a quarterback on the freshman squad until the spring when Coach MacPherson converted him to safety. It turned out to be a good move. He played second string on the varsity his sophomore year and moved on to start as a junior. "Paul made our defensive backfield last year", MacPherson pointed out.

Everyone was rather skeptical about the defensive backfield before the season started, due to the loss of John Healy. "We really felt the loss of John, he meant so much to the team, and to me personally. We could always count on him to back us up if we messed up", Hansen said.

Hansen, along with Bob Parrot, are the backbone of the defensive backfield this year. He feels that the backfield hasn't quite played up to their capabilities thus far, due mostly to inexperience, which has resulted in missed tackles and assignments. Hansen added however that the coaching staff has been great, that they have believed in the secondary all the way.

The strong safety handles the responsibility of calling the defensive formations in the backfield rotating the coverage zones of the other backs. He is a very aggressive tackler and will often be seen coming up from his position to bust up a screen attempt or sweep.

As for the game against UConn this weekend, Hansen and company will have their work cut out for them. UConn has a lot of motion in their attack, like moving the tight end out wide on one side and moving the split end in close on the other side. The backs do the same thing with the flanker coming back to the halfback slot, and the halfback moving up to the flanker. Connecticut will be doing this so much that Hansen will probably be lined up as the weak safety instead of having to flip-flop (switching back and forth) all the time. It should be interesting to how it works out.

Hansen said that the team realizes it has to win to stay in contention. "We need this one badly, not only for the YanCon, but there is also a special feeling between the two teams, especially after the way be beat them last year".

Paul's character is best described by MacPherson-"He has given this school three good years of football, has always given us 100%. Paul has never given us any kind of problem such as academics or not hustling. He is a modest person who doesn't go around telling everyone that he plays football, stereotyping himself as a big jock".

Women Runners In Meet

UMass women harriers have a good chance to win the women's New Englands on Sunday (Oct. 28) in Falmouth. Mass. Their major competition will come from the Falmouth Track club and the Cambridge Sports Union.

This championship is not a collegiate race, since college crosscountry doesn't exist for women yet, but an open A.A.U. meet between A.A.U. clubs. The UMass women will compete under the colors of the local Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. as well as the UMass Women's track Club, their R.S.O. title.

Senior Charlotte Lettis will lead the UMass delegation. She is considered an easy favorite having won the New Englands 2 years ago and the regionals last year. Freshman Judy Kline will be running her first open cross-country race along with pre-vet major Linda Radwanski. Radwanski recently ran in the 10.6 mile Gardner, Mass. veterans Day roadrace finishing the hilly circuit in 1 hour and 36 minutes. Kline ran track in high school at Swampscott, Mass. specializing in the half mile.

Lettis has won every women's cross-country and road race she's entered this season. She won the first women's 15 kilometer New England Road Race championship in Manchester and the 10 mile Gardner race. In the Falmouth T.C. invitational cross-country run Lettis won by over 1 minute on the hilly three mile course.

On November 11th at 2 p.m. the women's Regional Championships and age group championships will be held on the UMass campus. Entry is open to any women.

The Saga Of Dick Williams

By GLENN POSTER

The Oakland A's are the world champs in baseball once again. Now, to an outsider, one might think of the A's as a cohesive unit working together to reach a desired goal - winning the World Series. The outsider would also think that all systems run smoothly in a businesslike operation from the boss on down. He would even go so far as to think there is long term job security. Joe Outsider went too far. Such is not the case with the A's.

Their boss, Dick Williams, resigned recently because he did not get along with his boss - team owner Charles O. Finley. Williams made the claim that he wanted to be closer to his family. He makes his home in Florida. He also is interested in becoming the next manager of the New York Yankees. Williams, incidentally, set a record of some sorts. He managed a Finley-owned team for three years. Until he came along, Finley had a policy of hiring a new manager every year.

But what does the future hold for Richard Hershfield Williams? Where will he go? Maybe he will take another pennant with him. He seems to win them everywhere. Let's look at where he's come from.

Williams was a utility player most of his career. He played for such teams as the Brooklyn Dodgers, Kansas City Athletics, on three separate occasions the Baltimore Orioles and finished his career with the Boston Red Sox in 1963-64. I don't recall him doing much for the Sox except that he once hit two homers in a game and another time was robbed of a four bagger when an outfielder fell over the short right field wall in Fenway Park and caught the ball that he hit while sitting down in the bullpen. The umpire ruled it a fly ball out.

Dick Williams retired after the 1964 season. He timed it right because his first job as a manager opened up almost immediately. The Sox' top farm team in '64 was the Seattle Rainiers of the Pacific Coast League. Boston, however, lost their working agreement with Seattle at the end of the year and the Rainiers' manager, a guy with the illustrious name of Edo Vanni, quit. The Sox acquired a new Triple A working agreement with the Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League. They needed a new manager. That man was Dick Williams.

In two years at Toronto, Williams won two Governor's Cups - emblematic of International League supremacy. He had such players as Mike Andrews, Billie Rohr, Russ Gibson, Joe Foy, and Reggie Smith. Foy won the batting title in 1965, Smith followed suit in '66. Williams also had players who would never get much of a shot at making the majors such as Ed Rakow and Stan Johnson.

During these two years in Boston, the Red Sox were finishing in ninth place. Their manager, Billy Herman, got the ax and Dick Williams was called up.

Everyone knows what happened in '67. It was the year of Yaz, Lonborg and company and the BoSox had their first pennant in twenty-one years. Williams got a new three-year contract.

The Sox were respectable in '68 and that's about all. They drew over 1.8 million fans into their small park to see if the miracle could repeat. But Jim Lonborg and Jose Santiage both were hurt and nothing much more happened. Carl Yastrzemski led the league in batting with a robust .301 average.

The tide turned in '69. One game was lost by the "football" score of 21-7. And one night in Oakland came the crowning blow. Williams fined Tom Yawkey's adopted son, Carl Yastrzemski, four hundred dollars for not hustling on the basepaths. At the end of the season, Williams was fired with a year to go on his contract. So much for a "take charge" type of manager in Boston for the next four years.

In 1970, Williams was a third base coach for the Montreal Expos. The following year he went to Oakland. In Vida Blue he had the pitcher of the year and the A's became winners taking first place in the Western Division of the American League. And then, the next two years, the A's established themselves as the world champions.

The Boston Red Sox made a big mistake in September 1969 when they let Williams go. Personally, I hope he manages the Yankees so he can beat the brains more often out of the Sox every year.

Good luck, Dick, wherever you go and in whatever you do, and bring a subway World Series to Shea Stadium next year.

WMUA

The traditionally important (or is it importantly traditional?) Yankee Conference game of the year takes place Saturday at Storrs, Connecticut. The Minutemen take on the Huskies of the University of Connecticut, with the Yankee Conference title hopes on the line. WMUA will be there to cover the game live. Game time is 1:30; air time 1:20. Join the traditionally important Don Gorski and Larry Convoy as the bring you all the action live from UConn. That's WMUA...91.1 FM.

Crew Vs. Dartmouth

By MARK DLUGOSZ

The crew team's fall season is rapidly drawing to a close, and soon the winter training of weight work and indoor conditioning will begin. The crew team had a scheduled tri-scrimmage for this Sunday but the meet will consist only of two teams, Dartmouth and UMass, as Yale has said they will not make it up this weekend. This is proably because Yale plans to attend the Fall Regatta that had been changed to this Saturday from several weeks ago, as the Merrimack River had been far too choppy. the UMass team had voted not to attend, as they must pay travel expenses themselves in order to get better equipment.

Last spring UMass missed a large spread in "Sports Illustrated" due to a teletype error of that magazine. The magazine has expressed their apology to Coach Vespoli. UMass is virtually assured of a large spread should they repeat as Dad Vail Champions. This would be well-deserved coverage as only two teams have won the Dad Vail back to back in the last fifteen years. Coach Vespoli's goal for the year is to repeat last year's performance at the Dad Vail. This would be one of the rare times in collegiate sports history where a club team would repeat in a world acclaimed meet as champions.

If it is a good day this Sunday it might be worth a bicycle ride down to the Connecticut River to watch the crew team and enjoy the day.

NCAA Rules... No Go For Towne

By STEVE CROWE

"Rules are made to catch certain people," philosophized a discouraged Jack Leaman, "but sometimes they catch people who weren't meant to get caught."

The UMass basketball coach was referring to the news that his number one recruit, Jim Towne a 6-7 forward, has been declared ineligible to play during the 1973-74 season.

Under present NCAA rules, a student is not allowed to participate in intercollegiate athletics unless he had a 2.0 ("C") average in high school. But in Jim Towne's case, the line was not so clearly drawn.

Some schools are run on an 8-4 system, which means they have eight years of primary school and four years of high school. Others run in a 6-3-3 (six years of primary school, 3 years of junior high and 3 years of high school).

Jim Towne came from the Glens Falls school system where grades 7-9 were in the junior high school. They had decided about ten years ago that the would be a 6-3-3 system, but their transcripts still outlined the students' four year high school performance.

That one extra year did Towne in.

"He had a horrible freshman year," explained Leaman. His grades dropped as fast as height rose. He grew about five inches in that year and his grades dropped to below "D".

If the Glens Falls school system had been a three year high school, Towne would have made it easily. But his atrocious freshman year brought him down just below the 2.0 mark.

The loss of Jim Towne leaves a big hole in Leaman's lineup. Seven forwards are gone since last year; four graduated (Charlie Peters, Tom McLaughlin, Tom Austin, and Chuck Olson) and three are ineligible. (Besides Towne, Tom Gilliams and Tom Ryan must sit out this year.)

Coach Leaman might have problems filling the void this year.

"Right now, we have two outstanding forwards;" he said, "(Al) Skinner and (John) Murphy. Now we might be forced to play (Joe) Semder, 6-5½, and (Steve) Mayfield, 6-7". But, Leaman was quick to add, "Freshmen will play with the varsity only if they're getting sufficient playing time. If they're not, they will play J.V."

As for Jim Towne, there is a chance that he might play in the AAU league in Springfield. Alot of ex-UMass players played in that league last year, including John Bettancourt, Mike Pagliara, Chris Coffin, Rich Vogley, and Ray Ellerbrook. Greg Duarte, a junior on this year's UMass team, also played two years ago when he was ineligible to play his freshman year.

The loss of Towne means that alot of pressure will be on Al Skinner (6-3) to do the rebounding again this year.

Leaman could not compare the impact of Towne's ineligibility the loss of Julius Erving to pro basketball three years ago.

"This is a different kind of situation," said Leaman. "The Erving thing slipped up on us unexpectedly. It was more traumatic. We had put together a team to see how good we'd be in our senior year." Then Erving left and the UMass team went 14-12.

"We're more prepared to handle the Towne situation," added Leaman.

Then, thinking back to all the forwards lost, Leaman said, "My philosophy has always been, 'You have to play on Saturday night whether they (all of the players) are there or not.' You play with who you've got there and you do your best. And I've got a feeling," he added, "that we're going to do alright".

WUMV-TV

WUMV-TV will again be showing the UMass-UConn football at the Bluewall Sunday night beginning at 9:00 p.m. Marty Kelley will be calling the play-by-play and Earle Barroll will provide the color.

At halftime of the game, a special double feature will be shown. WUMV will present films of high school All-American halfback Bob Peck and the UMass J.V. team as they take on the Rhode Island Rams.

Also, there will be a halftime interview with lacrosse star Harry McVey. McVey was the leading junior college scorer last year and is expected to greatly help the UMass team this year and this weekend when they travel to upstate New York to take on Cornell.

UMass-UConn In YC

By SCOTT HAYES

UConn or UMass? That is the question which will be answered tomorrow in Durham, New Hampshire when the UMass harriers go after a record fourth straight Yankee Conference title, starting at 10:30.

For the last seven years the Conference cross country championship has been held by either UMass or UConn. Each year, the team that won the dual meet between the two schools went on to take the Conference crown.

If this year follows the pattern set over the past seven years, then UMass will win the Conference title again, because the runners downed UConn 25-32 earlier in the season.

Although seven teams will be running in tomorrow's race, only UConn can be considered a threat to UMass' championship hopes.

UConn will be looking for great performances from freshman star Bruce Clark and defending individual champion Bill Cantin in their attempt to regain the YanCon title. Clark took first in UMass' 25-32 victory over UConn, and Cantin didn't run.

Entering the meet with history on their side, the Minutemen have a squad that combines both youth and experience. Three runners from the top six in last year's Conference Meet will pace the UMass team. Co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, along with Sophomore Tom Maguire, give UMass experience up front. Senior Paul Segersten will be running in his third Conference championship, while John McGrail, Chris Farmer and Paul Doiron will be in their initial championship meet. The three freshmen will be battling it out to see where they fit in with the veterans.

Last year, Thomas finished second, Maguire fourth, and Gillin captured sixth to give UMass the edge over runnerup Rhode Island.

Some individual runners who could break into the pack of UMass and UConn runners are Tom Grundy of URI and Bruce Butterworth of UNH. Butterworth has been the most successful individual runner in the YanCon so far this season. The New Hampshire star is only a step behind Harvard's outstanding runner, Rick Rojas, probably the top harrier in New England.

Jerry LaFlamme of Maine, has been beaten only by Butterworth and should be up front in tomorrow's race, as well as Vermont's Stan Dunclee and Mike Berry, and George Reed of UNH.

The course at Durham shouldn't cause any problems. It's the type of course that can't hurt the runners because it's a flat, fast course. The race itself should be a great one for cross country fans. It will be a close, competitive battle with the runners going all out to win. The runners won't have to hold back because there are no big hills on the course.

Tomorrow's race will involve little if any strategy. The runners from UMass and UConn have been running against each other for the past three years, and know their opponents' style of running. Simply, whoever runs the hardest will win the Yankee Conference crown.

In reality, the 1973 Yankee Conference Meet shapes up to be a dual meet between UConn and UMass, with some top individuals from the other five Conference teams going after personal satisfaction.

Women's Tennis 4-1 Over CCSC

By NANCY M. THOMPSON

The UMass women's tennis team, after losing to Williams Monday 9-0, came back to finalize their season with winning 4-1 over Central Conn. State College yesterday afternoon. With the season complete the team now stands with a winning record 4-3. Seniors saw their last play of the year as two out of three singles matches and both doubles matches were taken from Central on the UMass home courts.

Ann Foley, again in the number one spot for the team, endured three sets with her opponent Carol Zimnotch of Central 6-0, 2-6, 6-3. Ms. Foley despite an extremely sore arm came back in the third set after being down 3-1. Senior Patty Heslam had little trouble, in second singles, defeating Central's Jane Desilets with a convincing 6-1, 6-0. On the third court Beth Perkins split sets only to lose in the third after playing an excellent second match against Central's Jackie Greer, 3-6, 6-1, 4-6.

Both doubles teams found victory for UMass as usual. Galen Good and senior Meg Parry made few mistakes in handing Central Conn's Sally Greer and Betty Cunningham a 6-2, 6-2 loss early in the afternoon. Karen Wesley and Donna Volpe playing second doubles won the final two sets of a split set match against Esther Gorham and Lucy Jensen to give a resulting 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Coach Sally Ogilvie was very pleased with the performance of the team as a whole for the season and will be looking forward to several informal matches to be played this spring.

In the New England College tournament at Yale University last week-end, UMass was well represented though wins were not easily found. The one doubles team from UMass, Ronnie Sanders and Diane Green saw their way to the quarter finals but were ousted by Yale's number one team. In singles Ann Foley and Donna Siscavage lost in first rounds, Ms. Foley to Mt. Holyoke's top player, Abbe Wise and Ms. Siscavage to the first on the Colby College team.

UMass-UConn: For Beanpot

By BILL BALLOU

Possession of an ugly, squat piece of pottery is the prize that goes to the football team that wins the Yankee Conference championship.

And that ceramic, the Beanpot, is laying on the line for tomorrow's UMass-UConn game at Storrs.

The Huskies are undefeated in the conference, at 3-0, and in sole possession of first place. UMass is 2-1, tied for second with Rhode Island and New Hampshire.

If the Minutemen lose, their shot at capturing at least a share of their third straight Beanpot is as good as gone. If they win, they could be in at least a two-way tie for first with UConn, and depending on the outcome of the BU-Rhode Island game, possibly a three-way tie including URI.

Through the years, Connecticut and UMass have been the bitterest of Yankee Conference rivals. The Minutemen lead the series, 24-17-2 (the two ties came in 1970 and 1971) and have lost just once since 1960 (27-20 in 1968).

But a look at the all-time Conference records indicates just how evenly matched these teams have been since the conference was formally organized in 1947.

UMass has the best all-time conference record at 68-34-4, while Connecticut stands second at 67-34-4. At the time of last season's game, UConn led UMass by a game in the all-time standings, and the UMass win (49-16) put them on top. A Connecticut win tomorrow would do the same for the Huskies.

Connecticut, a strong team with a 4-2 overall record, is most dangerous when they run. The man to watch out for is Eric Torkelson, a powerful running back who's picked up over 600 yards rushing already this season. The Huskies also boast another dangerous back in Ray Jackson, a speedster who sat out last season but had an excellent spring.

UConn may have a problem at quarterback where the man slated to handle the job, Brad Rock, has been knocked out of commission with an injury. This leaves two freshmen, Lou Mancari and Peter Palmer, running things.

The Minutemen are in pretty good shape, physically at least, after Saturday's loss to Rhode Island.

They're still missing tackle Tom Harris, and center Kevin Moran, a stalwart so far this season, is very doubtful. If Moran can't start, his place will be taken by Bruce Pinto.

Defensively, they're in good shape.

Before every season Dick MacPherson says "Our first goal is to win the Yankee Conference championship." Not even that first one will be reached if the Minutemen lose to UConn. It's the most important game of the season for UMass, but as MacPherson says, "The way we've been playing, every game is the most important game."

Game time at Storrs is 1:30 p.m. The best way to go is to take Route 91 South to Route 190 East. Take 190 East to Route 32 South to Route 195 South, which takes you into Storrs. The drive will take about an hour and a half.

Sub Goalie Humbles Tufts

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Paul Pelloquin.

On or before Wednesday, October 24, he was just another name on the roster: a face in the team picture.

On Thursday, October 25, he became a hero.

On that day, Pelloquin and his mates, who go by the name of the UMass soccer team, shutout Tufts, the sixth-ranked team in New England, 1-0.

The defense was superb, the offense came through in the clutch, and it was enough to hand the Jumbos their second defeat in nine games. (Tufts was not undefeated as this reporter erroniously reported. They were 7-1 going into the game, having lost to Weslayan, 2-0, on Tuesday).

Pelloquin, starting his first varsity game, was given the assignment by coach Al Rufe in the hope that he would gain some experience under fire. Instead, it was Tufts which had the experience, and it was unpleasant, of playing against the inspired goaltender.

In blanking the Jumbos, Pelloquin turned away 17 shots, and many of his saves were of the spectacular variety.

For most of the game, it looked as if the contest would end with a double blanking. Neither team could get on the board for the first 75 minutes, although both teams blew some excellent chances.

Tony King netted the clincher with only ten minutes left. Tufts fullback Dan Waggoner was called for a personal foul about 30 yards from the net, giving UMass an indirect kick. Mike Nugent took the free swipe and lofted a long centering pass into the goal box. In the scuffle that ensued, Bob McChesney somehow shuffled the ball to King who had no trouble finding the open net.

UMass started the game by napping on the field for the first five minutes, and the only thing that prevented two Jumbo goals was the performance of Pelloquin.

After the near nightmare, play settled down to an even battle that culminated in eleven shots for Tufts and ten for UMass at the half.

Tufts controlled play for almost the entire second half. The Jumbos managed another eleven shots on net, while the Minutemen were held to three. But King took the only shot that meant anything.

The final ten minutes, following the UMass score, were hectic as Tufts pulled out all the stops in an effort to even the score. The effort went for naught, however, as UMass sweeper Dan Ouellette turned back several scoring bids.

The Tufts defense was impenetrable for most of the afternoon. Fullbacks Chuck Price and Dale Graden constantly beat the UMass attackmen to the ball, shutting off many of the Minutemen's offensive thrusts.

But it was the UMass defense that earned most of the plaudits. Besides Ouellette, Curt Syer, Gary McKenna and Bob Merrill were unyielding.

And one can still not say enough about Pelloquin.

KICKING IT AROUND-The Minutemen travel to Storrs tomorrow to take on UConn in a game that could make or break the booters chances to capture the Yankee Conference crown. The Huskies are presently tied for first in the YanCon. UConn is also ranked number three but could move up in the next balloting as they knocked off top-rated Brown earlier in the week.

A Soccer Farce

Every Tuesday morning, Rod Commons, the Sports Information Director of Brown University, issues the results of the New England soccer ratings poll.

The poll, in itself, is useless.

The rating board is composed of only twelve university or college soccer coaches from the New England area. These twelve coaches are expected to be able to judge fairly on which teams are the best in the area.

How can the coach from Westfield State make a qualified judgement on a team like Tufts or Brown if he has never seen them play or scouted them for an upcoming game?

The board is a farce. It is composed of the soccer coaches from Springfield, BU, UConn, Amherst, Harvard, Westfield State, Dartmouth, WPI, Yale, Bridgeport, Tufts, and URI. The chairman is Cliff Stevenson, head coach at Brown.

A quick glance at the ratings shows that of the twelve teams that are represented on the board, eight are ranked. This is not to suggest any funny business, but three of those teams have worse records than UMass, and are ranked ahead of the Minutemen, whose 3-1-1 record (at the time of the voting) earned them fifteenth spot.

I would be interested to know what criteria the coaches use in determining their picks. Record is obviously a factor as it is the only thing many of the coaches know about teams they have never seen. But records are not the most important criterion used by the coach. If it were, then one of the undefeated teams would be number one instead of five, six, seven, nine or ten, the rankings held by the unbeatens.

Level of competition is probably considered, but that also is not all important. If it were, then teams like Springfield, Yale, New Haven, and probably Maine would be ranked higher.

The poll is conducted by phone. On Monday morning, all the coaches on the board phone their votes in to Cliff Stevenson, who tabulates the results in his home. The rankings are highly dependent on Ma Bell. In this week's results, the records of all the ranked teams are given, except for UMass, which failed to notify Commons or Stevenson of their week's results.

Everyone realizes that the ratings cannot be perfect, but they have been particularly useless as an indicator or predictor. This week alone, No. 1 Brown lost to No. 3 UConn, and No. 6 Tufts dropped contests to No. 8 Weslayan and No. 15 UMass. If they fail so miserably at this, what good are they in their present context?

The board and the poll, if necessary at all, are in desperate need of revision or improvement.

Why aren't all coaches in New England invited to participate in the balloting? That alone would not insure fairness, but more diverse opinions could only improve the rating process.

Each coach's ballot should be sent to either an independent auditing firm or to an official of a New England university or college that does not have a soccer team. This would reduce the possibility of tampering. Aithough the ratings have never been fixed (I hope) the possibility is always there.

Everyone Else Does It

by Jan Franks

The immense collection of books and cards and magazines and records and paper and pencils and sweatshirts and various quaint and hideous gewgaws which make up the Minuteman Mercantile has proved to be a haven for shoplifters. Since the beginning of the semester, over 60 sticky-fingered shoppers have been apprehended. According to Tom Doherty, one of the security guards at the store, this number represents roughly one fifth of all shoplifters in the store, the remainder of whom walk blithely away with their booty stashed in their pockets.

These figures indicate that shoplifting is, indeed, an extremely serious problem. Last year, the cost of goods sold at the Campus Center was approximately 4 per cent higher than budget. A fair portion of this amount came from rip-offs. What students may fail to realize is that when the Campus Center loses money, their own Campus Center fee increases to pay for it. An increase in shoplifting jacks up the already hefty fee another 3 or 4 $ per student.

In the face of such a problem, security at the Minuteman Mercantile has tightened considerably. The crowded aisles are patrolled by a number of security guards dressed, not in obviously formidable green uniforms but in regular Joe College-boy garb. They look like and are students.

Let's pretend that you, the reader, for example, have ripped off a pen from the store. A security guard cannot stop a pilfering person until he or she has concealed something from the store on his or her person, and has left the store. You pass furtively or nonchalantly (depending on your style) through the turnstyle. If you have been unlucky or clumsy enough to be spotted, a man will come up to your side and ask you if you intended to pay for that pen you put in your pocket.

Next, you will be ushered into a bright, cluttered room in the bowels of the store where you will be asked to return what you took and presented with a contract. This contract states that you were, indeed, guilty of shoplifting and that you have agreed to pay a fine so that the store will not prosecute.

The Natural Place To Go

by Joyce Kosofsky

Demian, Mitch, Margie and Judy; a friendly crew.

Located at 35 North Pleasant Street in beautiful downtown Amherst lives the EQUINOX, a natural foods cafe. Complete vegetarianism reigns supreme at the cafe and its menuboasts fresh garden salads, sprouts, yoghurt, home made soup, yeasted and unyeasted breads, herbal teas, and natural honey ice cream. Sounds good to me.

Walking into the EQUINOX was reminiscent of a truck-driver's stop. That's what the place looks like, if you can see through the plants. There's a counter that's the main eating area with a few small tables scattered around. It's a small place, but who wants to eat in a cafeteria anyway? Yeah, it does get a bit crowded around peak eating times. I found that the best time is between lunch and dinner, because the out-to-lunch-bunch and the all-day-except-dinner-fasters haven't made it there yet. Plus, you can talk to the fascinating crew of crazies that run the place when there's no one in there.

The guy with diapers on his head digs in.

Try one of the EQUINOX's specials. You can munch on the greatest homemade soup (next to my grandmother's) in an unhurried "chew your food well" atmosphere. With it you can get a salad, bread and cheese and a soothing cup of herbal tea. Mmmmmmmmmm it's good. Or you can choose from an assortment of salads; fresh garden, yogi, turkish, or travelers. The crew at the EQUINOX has proved that all salads needn't be just lettuce and tomatoes. You can eat a sandwich there on yeasted or unyeasted homemade bread. Or rice cakes. And if your not that hungry and just want a small snack, the EQUINOX serves half sandwiches, or small cups of soup. For the sweet toothed person (like myself) the EQUINOX serves honey ice-cream and has the best carob milkshakes for all the chocolate junkies around.

The service is great. It may not be the fastest in the world, but each portion is individually prepared and the crew who work there are friendly. The atmosphere is relaxing, you can enjoy your meal. The prices aren't too high. In fact you can have fill for lunch with a 99 cents special. The food is great. But chew your food well, or the guy who wears diapers on his head will tell you to slow down.

The View From a Bus Stop

by Tony Granite

The non-schedule of the Free Campus Bus System encourages pause to observe the traffic scene and other distractions at UMass.

Particularly of an afternoon on North Pleasant Street, at the Morrill Science Center bus stop.

The interminable late afternoon waiting for the northbound livery brings home the monstrosity that is the traffic problem on campus.

North Pleasant Street, at this point in time (4:00 p.m.-ish) and place, is a crawling, bumper-to-bumper effluence of Detroit's polluters.

After inhaling the noxious fumes for as long as 30 minutes, one is convinced that there's gotta be a better way to go. For, encapsulated by glass and tin, the lonely drivers who strain past on polar routes to their Belchertown digs or Mike's place vent their spleens in violation of religion and law.

Rarely do they stop at the brilliantly marked cross walks to permit pedestrians their right of way.

Campus Security makes its infrequent patrols. But it, too, is carbound and oblivious to the law that applies also to them that cars must stop for the pedestrian in a marked walkway.

The blind get equal treatment. One young lad propelling the white cane that proclaims for all who can see the universal badge of his infirmity had to be pulled from the path of an iron monster, one bright and otherwise cheery Fall afternoon. He couldn't match the muscle of the souped-up Mustang, anyway.

One wonders if no-fault driving in this Commonwealth extends to contact in a crosswalk.

Others have tried sticking their toes into the hot crossings and have pulled them out just in time to avoid being scalded by drivers oblivious to the law.

Such motorists are the more remarkable for the lonely splendor-on-the-tar which they exercise in the traffic that congeals past the Morrill Bus Stop. Only one car in twelve was recorded recently as carrying a passenger.

Despite the hazards posed by these non-stop drivers through the un-signed "Ped Xing" zones, and the nausea stimulated by the noxious fumes being spewed by clunkers and Cadillacs alike, the view from the bus stop can be entertaining and otherwise informative.

One discovers that if he likes jello, he'll love the well-fed UMass coed. Especially those who run for the busses as they finally crawl around the bend at Clark Hall.

And the highway repair crews have been considerate (or simply exercised their male chauvinism) in leaving a washboard effect at curbside. For when the coeds hunkered over the ram's horn handlebars of their 10-speed cycles hit this stretch, they make the long wait for bussing worthwhile.

The best show on campus, no doubt, happens at the bus stops. And there's a new feature for each season of the year. Just closed, after a long and heady run, has been the midriff spectacle for the navel observers entranced by such maneuvers. And the curtain has only just recently been drawn over the bra-less bussers, too.

The show will open again in the Spring. But by then, Campus Security will have discovered the pedestrian crossing law and have started to enforce it... all-fault parking on the campus will have banished its traffic to the campus perimeters... there won't be time to observe navels because the Free Campus Bus will be running every ten minutes, as promised...and the sprints for the seats will be safer because the stop signs for X-ing Peds will have been installed at last, to restrain unaware drivers from harvesting white canes.

Ah me, who said the best things in life aren't free?

Letter To The Editor

To The Editor:

Christine Dillard's review of Midsummer Night's Dream was fine in respect to her background info on the New Shakespeare Company, but I think it somewhat misrepresented the performance given. I agree that MND is not "gloomy, dry and heavy". But, as played by this company, it was exaggerated, erratic and, therefore, heavy.

Much of the deficiency was of a physical nature. Student Union Ballroom has terrible acoustics and all of the visual inspiration of a shoebox. There is little chance that the viewers in row X can enjoy the play fully (unless, of course, they felt the way I did, and decided on a few moments of quiet sleep). And the actors are forced to declaim loudly merely to communicate. Ergo, any possibilities for the shading of dynamics was nullified. Intimacy was impossible.

Unfortunately, the actors only exaggerated the ugliness of this forced declamatory style. Certainly, their body movements were expressive; but, they were also excessive. One can believe in the love of a handsome, young and concerned couple; but one can only be repulsed by a raving lunatic who gestures "meaningfully" with every declaration. Modern Shakespeare is in sad shape when it starts resorting to melodramas.

Ms. Dillard did a lovely job of citing various elements of the play--none of which I saw in the performance.

I'm not really knocking this young company. We all know, thanks to last year's As You Like It, that they are really quite good. Of course, then they performed in the slightly more congenial (acoustically) Campus Center Auditorium, and more than one of them knew how to deliver a speech without any gestures at all.

I would comment more on the last half of the play; but those scenes found me far away from our beloved SUB. I've learnt never to subject myself to undue stress, and I consider the effort necessary to pick occasional moments of enjoyment out of a theatre presentation quite unrewarding.

Migrants Across Rt. 116

by Kevin Mack & Emmett Schmarsow

Migrant farm workers? To most Umass students, this phrase probably conjures up images of Cesar Chavez and his United Farm Workers Union in California and of the grape and lettuce boycotts. But consider the thousands of acres of tobacco fields in the Connecticut River Valley. Who do you suppose picks the tobacco in those fields right across Route 116? The answer: Migrant farm workers.

Last Friday we visited a migrant worker camp about ten miles from campus, in No. Hatfield. The Sugarloaf Camp at maximum capacity houses about 220 workers. It is owned and operated by the Consolidated Cigar Company, a subsidiary of the Gulf and Western Corporation. Consolidated Cigar recruits a large percentage of its workers from Puerto Rico. These recruits sign a work contract (usually for six months) which stipulates a wage of $1.90 per hour. These workers do not receive time and a half for overtime hours but are frequently requested to work more than the 40 hours for which they are contracted. The company also provides housing for the workers in an old army barracks and a newer barracks-like structure. For $17.50 per week the company will also provide the worker with three meals each week day.

Most of the workers are single, but many are supporting wives and families, either in Puerto Rico or in the Spanish speaking ghettos of Holyoke and Springfield. It is not uncommon for a migrant worker to be supporting a family of six or more on a net salary of $70 a week. And that is with overtime.

When we arrived at the camp on Friday morning we began to look for someone who could speak English. Luckily, we ran into a man named Willy, who was happy to tell us about the migrant worker's lifestyle. He even gave us a tour of the barracks and we were treated to a marvelous flamenco guitar solo by one of Willy's friends who was on a lunch break. Willy, who had learned English while serving in Thailand with the U.S. Army, felt that the camp was, "alright — except the money." Willy has no family to support and spends much of his money at bars in the area.

The housing was adequate. The exterior of dingy green cement blocks closed a sparse interior of hard wood floors and drab off white walls. Several men, who were on a lunch break, sat around smoking cigarettes and listening to a local Spanish radio station. A television set stared impassively at four rows of fold-up chairs in the recreation room. (All of the programs are in English anyway). There were no other recreational facilities for men.

One of the men had slipped that morning and broken several fingers. He held a bandaged hand in the air to wave at us as we left. There was also a man on crutches; he had been run over by a tractor some time earlier in the season and waited three days before receiving proper medical attention.

In the camp cafeteria, we met another Puerto-Rican who could speak English. Several days earlier he had quit his job at the camp and would start working for the physical plant at Umass that evening. Joe was a native of New York and even had two years of Fordham University behind him. When his parents inherited land on the "Island", as most Puerto Ricans call their home, he returned with them in hope of finding a decent job there. But he had no luck and ended up back in the States working in this migrant camp. Because he had a driver's license and could drive a truck he made $2.25 an hour — up from the $2.00 he had started at. Later that day we met a local couple, who were white, and who worked in roughly the same job, who had started at $2.35 per hour. And they had no experience in agricultural work.

As we were leaving the Sugarloaf Camp, one of the foreman screeched by us in a new green pick-up truck. Slamming on his brakes, he yelled to us — two young, camera toting, university types — "Didn't you see the no trespassing signs" (There are none).

"We are only taking some photos of people harvesting tobacco", we answered, not telling him the whole truth, "We thought it would make an interesting autumn story".

The foreman loosened up a bit, "it's too late now," he said, "the crop is already in. Besides you'll have to get permission from higher up to do something like that."

A few days later, we spoke over the telephone, to someone higher up; a man at the Company's office in Glastonbury, Connecticut named Mr. Hurley. At first Mr. Hurley was reluctant to speak to reporters about the migrant workers. The company has received a lot of unfavorable publicity from Springfield Newspapers and from Channel Three in Hartford. So we were somewhat surprised when Mr. Hurley gave us about twenty minutes of his time. His main gripe about the press was that they do not report both sides of the story. His side of the story consisted of these points:

1. The minimum wage for farm labor is only $1.30 per hour. Consolidated Cigar paid a minimum of $1.90 per hour. They are not legally obligated to pay overtime rates since the work is legally classified as seasonal.

2. While the migrant workers may be "downtrodden by American standards" (Mr. Hurley's words and Puerto Ricans are Americans, by the way), they are well off by Puerto Rican standards. Puerto Rico is a relatively poverty stricken land and the workers sign the contracts of their own free will. They are paid better than for comparable work in Puerto Rico.

3. Mr. Hurley insisted that these are not "migrant" workers, rather they are contracted, seasonal labor. Mr. Hurley did not like the connotation of the phrase "migrant worker", but later in our conversation he used the same term to describe the men. So we will use the term, too.

4. The company is not against unionization by some "responsible" labor union. Mr. Hurley mentioned the Teamsters or the AFL-CIO. He did not consider the United Farm Workers to be a "responsible" union.

Mr. Hurley agreed with the proposition that it would not be economically feasible to harvest tobacco without the migrant workers. The tobacco growers simply could not find enough local people to work in the tobacco fields for such low wages and for only six months of the year. So the company is dependent upon the migrants from Puerto Rico.

As Mr. Hurley said, "Somebody has to do the work."

$ Platter Chatter $

By Mike Kostek

The past four years have seen a complete turnover in terms of Amhérst's record emporiums. Gone forever are the half hip, half $ Listening Post, the quaintly stiff Superficial Smile, the wonderfully hippie White Light and Amherst Audio, which was good for an occasional sale until it died of anemia.

Last year For The Record swung open under the guidance and bankroll of a young local who featured low prices and a limited stock. They've since moved to roomier and more convenient digs in the front room of Faces Of Earth, and still feature the lowest standard price in town (no sales — just a flat $3.78 for all your usual records). They've consequently expanded their stock and have a good supply of cut-outs ($1.99's) and the only used record exchange in the area.

Last spring a new record shop opened, called the New Record Shop. It featured prices comparable to For The Record, and a larger selection in most areas. They've moved out of their awkward scene in the Carriage Shop into the old Amherst Audio store.

The New Record Shop is likewise a home-town operation with one or two people getting together the cash to own a store, and aren't businessmen in suits by any means. Unfortunately they've had to recently raise their standard price (from $3.89 to $4.13,) but they do have new releases on sale for $3.69 (as well as having two NRBQ albums in the window and giving them their own section in the racks.) They do sell some promos for 99c - $2.99, and have a fair amount of imports mixed with the stock.

Enter Discount Records. Now this store is one of those run by the men in suits, namely Columbia Records. Hipsters run the joint, but you know who makes the money. Anyway, before you discount them "the biggest selection of any store in Massachusetts east of Boston," according to its manager, and will rack up every record they can get their hands on. Monster Classical, Jazz and MOR sections are promised, with the Grand Opening the 22nd. Discount will be the place to go for things you can't find anywhere else, as well as having a hefty import rack. There's really no other reason to shop there, except for the sales, as the $4.98 standard price is obviously prohibitive.

New releases will remain competitive with $3.33 specials, and weekly label sales will set up an entire label for $3.98.

The store itself is nice and big, but quite disconcerting after the down-hominess of the other two stores. A turnstyle checks you in and everything is handled in plastic wood racks in much the same manner of say, Sears or Korvettes. It's stores like this that turn music into 'product'.

In any case, it will be an interesting addition to the Amherst record dispensing facilities.

OCCUPANCY OF MORE THAN 2 IS DISGUSTING
CLASS D ACCOMMODATION
WARNING: Residence in a dormitory may cause loss of sanity and permanent social disorientation.

by "Carol McBaren"

Maybe you have had the distinct pleasure of leaving your bicycle chained in the dormitory basement, returning to find it, not stolen, but stomped into a thin layer of foil. Or perhaps your notice, lovingly prepared, was set afire barely minutes after you had posted it in the elevator.

I was met at the bus stop in Fraternity-Sorority Park by a sister whose small size belied her enthusiasm. On entering the house, I was led to the precisely-furnished apartment of the housemother, a charming woman of the old school, who took an obvious pride in the smooth way the house was managed. I was invited to stay for dinner, so we accordingly proceeded to the dining room. To someone used to the hangar-like atmosphere of Worcester Commons, the homelike, intimately furnished room seemed faintly unreal.

We stood at our places until grace was said, then the lights were dimmed, and we set into course after course of simple, but deliciously-prepared fare, served by the members of a nearby fraternity. During coffee the lights were turned up, and the president made a few announcements which were followed by reminders from the membership. One young woman's remark that she had lost her Wonderlash, brought a round of laughter, while reminders of an upcoming rush were received in a less jocular manner.

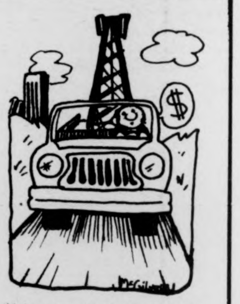
During dinner, my companion, who had been with me since the beginning of the evening, answered my questions about Greek life. She had been a member of the sorority since it had moved to its new location in the Park, where there were to have been six houses. (The University had planned to build dormitories on the site, but changed its everactive mind.) The project was sufficiently hampered by work stoppages and the campus trend away from the Greek system to cut the final number of houses to three.

I was escorted ("Males must be escorted"), to the neighboring fraternity by my guide. The decor shifted from soft lighting and framed pictures to the bluish glare of fluorescent tubes and flypaper suspended from the ceiling. I was introduced to a strictly masculine gathering, which was in the course of devouring plate loads of hearty food. As our conversation progressed, people would disappear from the table, materializing seconds later with fresh heaps of chicken and potatoes. One of the brothers at the table started to describe the place, remarking that through sports people can quickly get together and get acquainted. He said unashamedly that the place could easily be termed a jock house. Sports made the house a tight community.

In each house I visited, I asked how many members would attend that evening's impeachment rally. Estimates ranged from a few to none. There seemed to be little need to ask why there were virtually no Black students living in the Park. The atmosphere, one of white, middle-class camaraderie, would perhaps seem sufficiently repulsive to those Black segments of the population which seek their own cultural experience.

Last weekend you may have noticed the surviving members of the UMass Ceres cult staging their annual harvest replacing perhaps the moratoria and demonstrations festival in the streets of Amherst. Like the attack scene in the movie "Zulu", wave upon wave of frenzied collegians broke forth into their ritual cries of a last Bacchanal before autumn dwindled into the winter. I remarked to some bewildered onlookers that such activity was becoming more popular, which once heralded the harvest season.

Homecoming in Fraternity-Sorority Park meant the return of past generations to the ancestral hearth, which would be tended through a new winter by this year's crop of Greeks. The scene reflected the social permanence of the Greek system which is somehow alien to the dormitory experience. I was asked to imagine the warmth of my reception if I returned as an alumnus to Washington tower. Suddenly the pagan ritualism of my Greek stereotype seemed to conflict less with my humanistic values when I remembered the bizarre incident of bicycle squashing spawned by the hollow experience of dorm life. What had seemed the anachronism of forced communion with the spirit of a dead era now seemed to reflect on the less than sane life style that I had believed in as the enlightened approach to individual growth. Perhaps, it suddenly occurred to me, the answer to the lonely alienation of a UMass dorm can be found in the Greek way, which years ago was rejected as too staunch a defender of the status quo.



It is now 11 p.m. Do you know where your car is.

If you decide to sign the contract, the security guard who picked you up and two witnesses will also sign it. One copy of the contract will be sent to Whitmore. The other is kept by the store. It is to be emphasized that these documents are strictly confidential. No one has access to them and after you leave the University, they will be destroyed.

If, on the other hand, you believe that you are innocent, that it was an honest mistake that you walked out of the store clutching a pen you may take your case to the Student Court. Here you and the store will be treated as equal parties. You will be presumed innocent until proven otherwise. If you are found guilty you will be forced to pay the consequences.

This procedure is not as cut and dried as it may appear. The University Store has the prerogative to handle shoplifters as they wish. If you do hassle the guard, perhaps by taking a swing at him and trying to run away, the store can and will increase its fine and may refuse to settle out of court.

Nevertheless, the store has established a general policy that all students will be handled in the above outlined manner if they do not give the guards any trouble and if they are not second offenders. All non-students and graduate students caught shoplifting may be taken to a regular court by the store.

In past years, all shoplifters (both students and non-students) apprehended by the University Store could be taken to Northampton District Court, leaving an unsightly and permanent blot on their record. The new system was devised last year by Jim Pappas, the Student Attorney General, in conjunction with the store and approved by the Student Senate. It insures the undergraduate student that his misdemeanor will be handled within the University as long as he does not repeat his offense.

Many have remarked that this system is far too lenient. Jim Pappas disagrees. "The experience of getting busted is a painful and intimidating one," he says. Budding Perry Masons often find that court is humiliating and court fees are no joke. It seems that this slap on the wrist is not without its sting. Significantly, very few shoplifters are caught twice.

Softly, Meeting and Hesitating

Malay Meeting

by Barb Hoffman

"Shit," stated the Countess, flourishing the offending manuscript. Beside her, the Count winced openly. How the woman abused the freedom of speech! He turned to glare at her. Ignoring him, the Countess continued, visibly excited. "It's predictable... one might daresay, contrived. As for characterization, why, it's naggingly non-existent." Face glowing, she paused, looking intently at the uneasy dignitaries grouped around her, clutching drinks in their hands. The Count gulped his own gin rickey nervously, waiting.

He had thought from the beginning that it was all a bloody mistake. True, inviting the other counsuls to meet once a month for dinner and drink was appealing. Malaya was a jungle, its loneliness punctuated by sporadic beatings of native drums. The outstations were at best, desolate consolations, but spaced far apart. Yes, it was good to hear some English voices, if only once a month. But Marguerite was not to be satisfied so readily. No, there had to be more. "Culture," she called it, in a rare moment of lucidity. "We are in desperate need of culture here," she claimed, and her fine, dark eyes hardened with purpose. Her consequent suggestion then, for each consul to work on a story to be discussed at each monthly gathering, was met with enthusiasm. Not a terribly creative group, they plagiarized eagerly from both Punch and W. Somerset Maugham, deriving from both sources the stories and satires to be discussed over the invariable curry. It did give them something to do those nights, besides the drinking, besides the maudlin rhapsodizing of England. But Marguerite was doing a bit too much lately. Nurtured on a steady diet of both Oscar Wilde and Evelyn Waugh, she possessed at times the tact of a mongoose coupled with the insistence of a locust.

Now she smiled broadly at the paralyzed bunch before her. Beckoning a servant to refill their glasses, she asked for further comments on the night's work. A short story, it involved a young nun who, after slipping on the chapel steps, suffers a bout of amnesia and leaves the convent to become an exotic dancer in a cabaret. During one of her acts, she slips on a pair of rosary beads dropped there by the club's religious bartender. She is jolted into remembering her status as a woman of the cloth. Stricken, she "tells all" to the sympathetic bartender, who was actually once a priest before he got amnesia when he stood suddenly from kneeling and hit his head on a Testament...

Though short, it had many details to its credit. The Countess, for one, relished it. Her glass filled once more, she now directed her smile at a bearded young man pacing up and down the straw mat. "Surely, Ferd, you have something to add. 'On cherche la critique ici.' " She dimpled. Noticing their blank looks, she hastened to explain that they were seeking criticism here, weren't they? "N'est-ce pas?' "

Ferd looked up quickly. He puffed several times on his cheroot before dropping it onto the mat where it sizzled. Frowning, he poked at it with his shoe and shook his head slowly. "There's a tendency to intrude in the voice, of course." The Countess nodded solumnly, listening. "He should have gone on more, it seems. There is hope here — he could always rewrite, as long as he starts from scratch. Basically, he must resist the epithet constructions he thrives on." A tiny, gold cigarette case emerged from his waistcoat; Ferd extracted a fresh cheroot and lit it.

A slight cough arrested him. He turned accusingly to its source, the diminuitive wife of the Fisheries Consul.

"I must say, there are some good images in it. Unusual, perhaps, like the one description of her legs," she blushed, remembering, "... as 'white ivories with veins of blue interlaced.' Vivid, very vivid."

The dignitary from Kuala Lumpur tapped the edge of his glass with a horny fingernail. "I don't know about that. The generally fuzzy characterization bothers me somewhat." He stirred his Bloody Mary ruminatively with his little finger. "I just don't know. Kipling was always so clear..."

The other consuls chimed in eagerly now. There were disputes over the use of veiny ivory, punctuation (a heated and prolonged debate on the individual merits of the semi-colon, the colon, and the period) and the writing style of Rudyard Kipling.

At some such point the Count excused himself. Muttering apologies lost in the din, he made his way past the beads that separated the main room with his bedroom. He had developed a terrific headache, yet whether it came from the talk of Voice or the actual sound of their voices arguing about Voice, he could not presume to know.

The Countess was in the process of summing up and getting on with the next piece when someone unmistakably groaned. It was the author of the night's controversial piece. Miserably hunched over the original copy of his work (now slashed through angrily with leaden comments) he rose from his stool in the corner and skulked off onto the veranda.

"Well." The Countess cleared her throat uneasily. "Well, one must learn to take constructive criticism — and take it well — if one writes. That's the true secret of writing." Unconvinced, she turned in supplication towards Ferd.

Outside, in the humid Malay night, the still was broken by the creak of the stairs off the veranda accompanied by groans. Then the locusts covered all sounds.

Clean Living's bold front.

It was a dull start. The forty or so faithful NRBQ fans dwindled in looking like they'd just been to two or three wakes, lined the concrete walls and waited. Soon enough Clean Living wandered on stage to please their faithful fans whose only response was an occasional nod of the head or foot stomp.

Slowly the auditorium was filling up and by the time NRBQ came on, it was obvious who the bulk of the crowd had come to listen to. Despite Terry Adams' ace-bandaged ankle, his distinctive beat lead most of NRBQ's songs Friday night. By the end of the first show, a majority of the audience was showing signs of life, even a few bodies swaying. Supposedly the second show was a lot better, hopefully for NRBQ, but we didn't bother staying.

The 11:00 Show

As I sat on the floor of the Campus Center auditorium, which was still sticky from the spillage of those who attended the first show, for the first time in my life I was glad to see the homely face of Poor Richard's music editor, Mike Kostek, looming out of the semi-darkness at me; this meant I'd have someone to talk to while Clean Living was on. If you're not going to dance there's no point in listening to them. I greeted him cheerfully, "Kostek, you old scumbag."

Talk about fanatics: Mike had been to the first show and was willing to sit through Clean Living a second time just to see NRBQ again. Naturally I was led to expect a lot from them by the time they came on. Strangely enough, considering Mike's usually decadent musical taste, NRBQ turned out to be a really decent bunch.

Also surprising was their approach to doing the concert: An amazing variety of material, from a brief, schmaltzy interlude from "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" to Persuasions-type a capella four-part harmony, and to the best of my knowledge there wasn't a single number that went on longer than five minutes. No extended boogies whatsoever, much to the discomfort of the dance crowd, with the exception of "Shake that Thing," which started and stopped so many times that no one could dance to it anyway. Their overall sound, however, was exceedingly tight and good timey and every one enjoyed the show, with the possible exception of the thirty some-odd year old dude in the white Panama suit who couldn't find anyone to dance with.

Live Music:
Sweet Pie
At the Bluewall

Last year, there was a big brouhaha about Sweetpie, a blues-pianist boogie-woogie or whatever, singer-comedian type who appeared dressed in the barest of loincloths when he played. He was being touted as one of the most original and interesting and entertaining creatures to appear since the sun appeared. The people who were telling you this were masters of hype. Maybe Sweetpie was different last year; I don't know. ! DO know that I saw him this year, and I was massively disappointed.

To start — Sweetpie is not obscene, or, as one gentleman yelled at him, "gross". The jokes he indulges in, especially of the sexual variety, reek of a nine year old telling a dirty story to his friends, and a lot of times the jokes only get reaction on a level of shock. (The way he combines words has a lot to do with it.) His sexual jokes aimed at politicians often run the dregs of the most tired Nixon jokes I've ever heard. I don't know about you folks, but I've noticed that making fun of Nixon doesn't get one anywhere, and because the jokes are told with such frequency ("If Nixon was able to ball every night instead of going into the bathroom and playing with himself, he'd be a lot better off..."). C'mon now — Zappa was doing this stuff about six years ago, and the Fugs with Ed Sanders were doing it even better then. Enough nostalgia, already!

And his piano playing! Who the hell needs cocktail lounge blues?? Hell, I like the blues, but I do not like categorized chops played over and over again. It begins (as a friend of mine said) to numb your brain.

Sweetpie is a hype, and his audience is often there to "make the scene". He is an entertainer, and I can't fault him as such, but he is vastly overrated. And I wonder what would happen if the Blue Wall were to feature some high energy, kick-ass improvising music instead of cocktail lounge blues, or vapid country rock. It would threaten, and that has to be dealt with too. It would be interesting to find out who the jokers, scene-makers and hucksters down at the Bluewall are. But as long as they feature acts like Sweetpie (whose music poses no thought, whose jokes give no revelation — who is, essentially, just a clown who's not got much to offer), we'll never find out. I hope we find out soon.

Carpenters
Springfield Civic Center
19 October 1973

> —I'm very proud of my main influence in the music business and I think I should be. I think that the Carpenters have added more to music today than any other group put together.
> — Martin Mull

The Carpenters are an anachronism, representing the rosey life style envisioned and lived out by many during the Kennedy and Johnson years. The American Dream. Life, happiness, and faith in love. The only problem is that this life no longer exists, except in the fantasies of the idealistic. On Oct. 19, the Springfield Civic Center was the stage for these fantasies to once again be enacted. The audience of 5,000 was composed mostly of young girls and older women and their comparatively bored boyfriends.

Ths show opened with a voice from above welcoming us all "to the Carpenters Concert". From then on out, it was like a television theatre. This voice, like the stereotyped T.V. game show announcer we used to watch when we were too sick to make it to junior high, was heard but not seen. The inane comedy of Skiles and Henderson preceded the appearance of the Carps, and the audience ate it up. Comedy can be intellectual and insightful a la George Carlin or it can be mundane as this was with the emphasis being put upon making animal noises rather than making worthwhile sense. Skiles and Henderson weren't funny but they were like the typical Ed Sullivan comedy team (minus the juggling) and these concert-goers were all tuned in and turned on.

The Carpenters were pretty much as expected. They ran through their string of hits as well as a rather lengthy medley of oldies. Richard (he's the one with the spun gold hair) introduced the medley in complete seriousness with words to the effect that "over the last two years the oldies are really coming back, and I'll be honest, I was thrilled." Coming from Martin Mull, it would have been hilarious, but from Richard, it was serious and matter of fact. All of Richard's talks to the audience could have been taken directly from cue cards, for all the feeling emoted. Karen was a little more personable but she knows she's a star, and as such, she needn't really pay much attention to the fans who came to see her. The show was not totally undynamic with some spice being added by an occasional Tony Peluso guitar lead or Bob Messenger sax solo. Karen even favored us with some of her famous drumming, but in general, the sound was very much like that of their records.

When the 55 minute set was over, The Carpenters received a standing ovation, but like with television, when the show is over, it's over, and there was no encore. The dream was over. In a world with rapidly depleting food and fuel supplies and ever increasing air and water pollution, the Carpenters are a last bastion of the vision of the good life, ideal love and purity. Those were such happy times and not so long ago...

Bill Staines
Student Union Ballroom
October 21

If you like folk music, but haven't heard Bill Staines your life is not complete. He is one of the best, although almost unknown, folk musicians I have ever heard. Those who went to the free concert in the Ballroom on Sunday night know what I mean, Bill Staines took time out from recording his third album to make his annual visit to UMass.

Once on stage, he never stopped performing, if you can call being himself performing. He just kept playing fantastic songs with short breaks for humorous stories that were really funny, and not your average pause. He told about driving down the entire Philadelphia Turnpike on a winter night — sideways, before breaking into "Allegheny", a song from the third album. He also sang some old favorites, like the "Song About Nothing" and "For the Birds". I didn't really know what to expect, but I hope my new enthusiasm is catching, it is so nice to find someone who plays "Just for me, Just For Love".

Live Music:
Some of My Best Friends
The Pub

It was so hot in the Pub that night that my eyebrows were sweating, but I wouldn't miss them for anything. Yeah, they're some of my best friends and they play some good music.

Oooooh they're good. When they played they rocked the crowd out of their seats, onto the floor, and even into the aisles. It was Dancing Room Only and the bartenders worked as hard as our feet. Jeez the place boogied.

"I wish I knew," they sang, "What I thought I had." I know what they have. They have David on electric piano and trumpet, Freddie on bass, Roger on drums, Ken playing sax and flute, Rick on lead guitar, and Ellen and Jackie singing their hearts out so that you want to say "oooooh yeah."

"Come along Baby," they sang, "Baby, I can't get enough." Neither could the crowd. It was one big happy family there. Everyone shouting out their favorite song, singing along with the rest. The crowd knew who their best friends were. They loved them.

"Didn't I blow your mind this time," they sang, "Didn't I?" They always do, and this time was no exception. Each song was better than the last. The band got tighter and funkier as the night went on. i thought that the dance floor was going to break. But we rocked on.

"I'm gonna spread the news," they sang, "That if it feels this good gettin' used, then keep on using me... 'til you use me up." We will but I hope we never do.

YOUR HIT PARADE

Well now. All this time we've been telling you what's good, what's bad, what's up and who's down. And what good has it done us? Not bleedin' much. I'm still here in the cubicle they call an office (HA! - Ed.) getting nothing. No payola, no drugola, no ham from Black Oak Arkansas, no pliant wenches. And then For The Record calls and tells me what you people have been doing with your time and money for the month of September. Well, you're getting better...

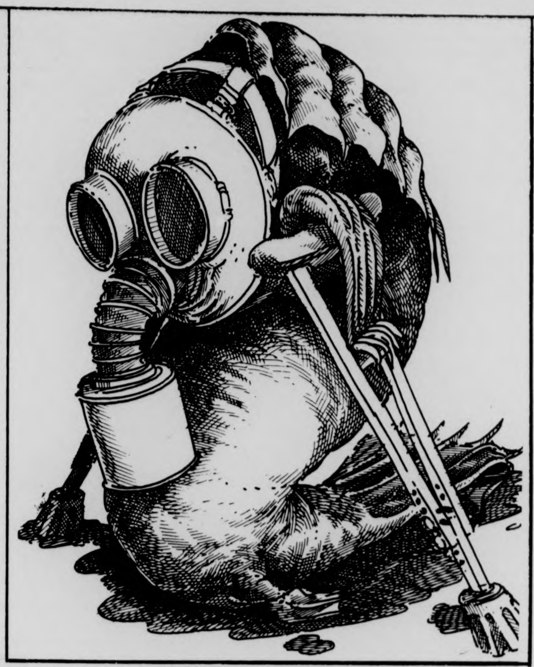
Dead After the Flood: Soft & Dreamy

by Jackman Wilson

Wake Of The Flood
The Grateful Dead
Grateful Dead
GD-01

Perhaps I looked forward to the release of this album with such high expectations that I was bound to be in some way disappointed. The Grateful Dead had not made a studio recording for several years, not since American Beauty. Their contract with Warner Brothers had expired, and this was to be their first album on their own label. There was every reason to expect something special from the band who, when the clock struck twelve last New Years' eve at Winterland Ballroom in San Francisco, Bill Graham introduced as "the greatest rock and roll band in the world."

Make no mistake, Wake of the Flood is a good album. All seven songs, considered one at a time, are well written and performed. A few of them deserve individual attention.



"Mississippi Half-step Uptown Toodeloo" is probably the best song on the album. I wish I could play it over the newspaper. The lyrics are of the "what's the point of calling shots this cue ain't straight in line" variety. Keith Godchaux's piano playing is at its best, and Vassar Clements' violin adds a bluegrass quality which blends well with the band's sound. Jerry Garcia and Robert Hunter wrote this one, and anyone who has been to a Dead concert lately will recognize it.

Another good song is "Here Comes Sunshine", also by Hunter and Garcia. Phil Lesh, whose bass might have the greatest range of any bass instrument in history, gives the simple melody depth and subtlety. This is the sort of song I whistle to myself during boring classes. The vocal harmonies, which figure prominently in all the songs, are particularly well done.

I sensed from the first time I heard the album that something was missing from the texture of the album as a whole. Of course, I expected the Grateful Dead's style to change. It always does. But the style of this album is not so much changed as subdued. For the most part, the instrumentals stay on the ground, and the emphasis is on vocals throughout the album, throwing the entire production slightly off balance.

All this makes me sound like one of those assholes who yell "boogie!" at concerts every time the band plays something soft. I have no objection whatsoever to soft music. The Grateful Dead, in fact, never liked their image as a boogie band, which they acquired by accident. All that is lacking on Wake of the Flood is variety — the songs sound a little too much alike.

As far as the technical business of studio recording goes, Wake of the Flood is flawless, so far as I can tell. Now that Warner Brothers can't mess with the mix, the Dead are free to run their own show. There are some unusual effects on a few of the songs, such as making Phil Lesh sound like he's playing underwater.

The overall feeling of this album is soft, dreamy and sometimes even sentimental. Changes in the band, necessitated by Ron McKernan's tragic death, have altered the Grateful Dead's sound appreciably. Considering the high degree of control possible in a studio recording, I interpret Wake of the Flood as an indication of the directions the Dead wish to follow in the future. The no-left-turn-unstoned craziness of the San Francisco scene lies far behind. Urobouros will have his way. The Grateful Dead mystique is gradually evaporating and their inspiration alone will have to perform the magic. Let us hope that Wake of the Flood, a fair-to-middling attempt, will soon be followed by a less weary, more exciting release, or at any rate a more lively one.

The Heat Is Rising, the Past Is Calling

GOODBYE YELLOW BRICK ROAD — ELTON JOHN (MCA 2-10003)

Quantity rather than quality might be a good description for Elton John's new album; 'Goodbye Yellow Brick Road. Although the album does contain some excellent cuts it could have easily been made into a good one-record album by just omitting all of the shit.

In comparison to Don't Shoot Me I'm Only The Piano Player, which didn't enjoy as much popularity as Honky Chateau, it was an improvement. But to have the bad outnumber the good, and be forced to skip around the album just to hear the good cuts seems like a large price to pay to listen to Elton's smooth voice turn over "Sweet Painted Lady" or "Harmony", two of the album's better cuts.

Orchestration was done by Del Newman who also did the orchestration for Cat Steven's Catch Bull At Four and can be heard at its best during "The Ballad of Danny Bailey," "I've Seen That Movie Too" or "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road."

If nothing else, the album is worth listening to just for "Candle in the Wind", Bernie Taupin's tribute to Marilyn Monroe.

You can rock to it, sleep through it, or cry to it, but if you're smart you might try sitting down and seriously listening to it. You may find your hand getting a little tired from skipping around the two album set, but it should be worth it.

PRETTY MUCH YOUR STANDARD RANCH STASH — MICHAEL NESMITH (RCA APL1-0164) — Pretty much your standard hippie C&W-rock record, with one side nice and no. two being poop. C

RADIO LONDON — THE WHO (Trademark of Quality) — This is a stereo Who bootleg of unreleased studio stuff (Circa 1968-70), and is an aural and visual treat (it's pressed on clear orange vinyl). Included here are such great lost tracks as "Water", "It Don't Really Happen That Way At All" and "Early Morning Cold Taxi", all of which are excellent. Some of the tunes do show why they were left in the can, but all are interesting to the true Who fanatic. "The Seeker" is the same as before, but "I Don't Even Know Myself" and "Summertime Blues" are quite different. The topper of the record, though, is a fierce, maniacal "Young Man Blues" that supercedes the Leeds version by far. A minus

AT THE OLYMPIC — FRANK ZAPPA & HOT RATS (Trademark of Quality) — Ah, a blue Frank Zappa record. This particular bootleg, however, sounds like it was recorded in the ladies room of the place across the street from the Olympic. So, the sound is barely functional mono.

Side One has a peculiar performance of "Sharleena", a compendium of Zappa themes old and new called "Twinkle Tits", and a rugged version of "Directly From My Heart To You". Side Two is a side long celebration of "Chunga's Revenge" that drags a bit, but still has some burnball guitar by Frank. Featured in this, the first Hot Rats first performance on March 7, 1970, are Sugarcane Harris, Aynsley Dunbar and Ian Underwood. B minus

CHICAGO VI — CHICAGO (Columbia KC 32400)

Here's another pleasant release by Chicago — pleasant, but nothing exciting. Vocals are satisfying as usual, but surprisingly, the playing seems quite restrained. Qualified exceptions are the bass player, Peter Cetera, who lays down some nice lines throughout, and the addition of J. G. O'Rafferty on pedal steel on a couple of tunes.

The album's opener, "Critic's Choice," sounds like it's intended to be a cute little "dig" at music critics considering reviewing Chicago's work:

"What do you need?
Is it someone just to hurt?
So that you can appear to be smart?
Keep a steady job?
Play God?"

Oh, come now. What can I say but "Argumentum ad Misericordiam" and "Argumentum ad Hominem"?

Most memorable cuts: "What's This World Comin' To," "Something In This City Changes People" and "Feelin' Stronger Every Day." B.

ESPERANTO

MOYLE

Material wise, this disc has a couple of good tracks. "On Down The Road" moves quite well. Most of the other songs have good ideas, but are ruined by one of the various instruments in the band.

If and when this band cuts down on the number of members, one could foresee a fruitful future. The potential is there. C+

CHILDGROVE—SUNI McGRATH (Adelphi Ad 1022)

Two men sit by the road-side with guitars in hand and begin to play as the birds sing and the trees shake softly in the autumn breeze. We are seated by the road across from the two and are given a series of instrumental ballads which flow into the air as a horseman goes trotting softly by. For half an hour or so the notes pass as if they were in a trickling stream surrounding us. We applaud and the two musicians bow low in gratitude.

We turn 'round and see the two seated on a fence-post nearby and listen in expectation of more of the same sounds. It appears, unfortunately, that the two have decided on a long ballad which seems to drag on like the slow flow of sap from a tree in the spring. For over twenty minutes, they continue to strum and all we can do is sit and listen as our minds wander from the snail-like circular music as it seems to go endlessly in a downward spiral. Finally their repeating rhythms stop, and all that can be heard is the record player clicking to a stop.

If you find yourself seated by this road side you would probably enjoy the soft flowing guitars in the first half, but you might find yourself leaving as we almost did once they start their second drawn-out half.

"By The Author Of THE OTHER"

by Ed Smith

The suspense novel in the 20th century has to a large degree degenerated into "pulp" literature. The intrigues and twisting plots of Charles Dickens often seem to be eons away. What was once the art of portraying little known aspects of human behavior has become the thriller. Thomas Tryon in his second novel, Harvest Home, has retrieved the suspense novel for modern readers.

The story starts out in an unassuming manner. Ned Constantine, the narrator, moves with his wife Beth and daughter Kate, from New York City to a quaint New England town in Western Massachusetts. The name of the town is Cornwall Coombe and while it first appears picturesque, Tryon slowly brings in a more sinister note.

The town is a farming community and the people insist upon using the old methods of working the land. The town's people, the reader learns, are also locked into other old ways, such as a belief and worship of the earth gods. While this itself is not very thrilling, the rituals and resultant behavior of the people become the center of conflict in the novel.

As the story progresses the narrator is caught up completely in the strange behavior of the community. As Harvest Home approaches, the night when the women of the village perform an unknown ritual in the forest, Ned attempts to find out what it is they do. The conclusion is terrifying, but I am not revealing it.

As a second novel, Tryon's writing betrays some lack of polish. In introducing the past of the narrator, he attempts to slip the information in while the narrator is lying in bed thinking. While the information is necessary the technique is stilted. The use of foreshadowing in the novel is also rather mechanical. This owes somewhat to the large number of mysterious happenings in the book and also to a lack of completion in Tryon's style. After reading a short portion of the book one knows whenever something strange is just about to happen. This detracts from the book's element of suprise.

Tryon takes a great deal of time in this novel to begin the actual story. It is necessary to set the scene, but he takes an inordinate amount of time to do so. All these problems are not enough to ruin the novel, but they do show that Tryon has not yet reached the level he is heading for.

In reading Harvest Home there is also a great deal of psychological drama along with the suspense story. The devotion of the people to ancient gods, including Mother Earth, is understandable in the light of the way they survive. The land, for them, is the beginning and end of life. They go to great lengths to insure that the Mother will continue to provide for them bountifully. Even so, their behavior is ghoulish at times and the narrator's final confrontation with them is quite believable.

Both the suspense of the novel and the underlying motivations of the characters make this book a promising sign for Tryon's career as a novelist. He shows expertise in many areas and despite the failings mentioned above, this book makes interesting reading.

Shifting Focus: Theatre And Film

by Mark Cuddy

Few things in life give me the urge to write. A movie did. No, there was nothing really special about it, it did have its quota of name stars but just the fact that it was a well put together film made it interesting.

We the audience look for different things when we view film and when we view theatre. When we go to a movie-theatre, we buy our popcorn and proceed to our seats where we expect to be entertained. After the movie is over, we talk about the images that remain in our minds. VISUAL images that may explain the whole theme to us. Comic scenes or tragic scenes. The look in someone's face or the beauty of mother nature. The destruction of mother nature by man. These all are images which the film has tried to imprint on our brain.

In theatre the focus shifts. We go to the theatre to learn something and to be exposed to well-written scenes involving verbal conflict. Of course I'm leaving out most of the avante-garde theatre and dance-theatre but the overwhelming majority of plays do fall into the category above. No longer is the director trying to convey his message by trying to overwhelm us with poses or with a stage devoid of action and only the set to look at. He tries to implant a theme that comes VOCALLY. The actor's movements are important but they only emphasize what the actors say. It is by word of mouth and not by sight that makes theatre become magic.

When a playwrite finishes writing a play, it is a complete entity unto itself. But just looking at a screenplay there is something missing. Sure the screenwriter has done his job, having written the dialogue, some blocking, and the general direction of the film but it lacks meaning. There may be a theme that is visible (although in most cases it changes according to the director) but the theme doesn't relate to the audience or rather the audience doesn't relate to it. A playwrite must create something that not only has plot (conflict) but also an interpreting of the action that is strong enough to stand by itself. In "Moon For The Misbegotten", there is no way the director or actor can change James Tyrone and the groping helplessness that the audience takes in from listening to him. He is a character that O'Neill wrote from both his heart and memory. The character of course is based on Eugene O'Neill's older brother James. O'Neill wrote this play (his last) with the intent of making some sort of final judgement The audience is left with that image whether the play is read or viewed in performance.

Faculty Club: A Fine And Private Place

by Ed Smith

Seen here, perhaps the one percent of the University that appreciates it.

Tucked away behind the Morrill Science Center stand two of the most historic buildings in Amherst.

They are the Stockbridge House and the Homestead House, respectively the first and third oldest houses in Amherst. These houses, which are connected by a forty-foot portico, form a unit in which is located the University Faculty Club.

The Faculty Club has been located in the Stockbridge House since 1934 when President Hugh Potter Baker ordered much needed renovations and then allowed the club use of the house. Only a few years back the Homestead House was moved from its former site, where the Graduate Research Center now stands, to its present position adjoining the Stockbridge House. Tom McDonald, manager of the club, said renovations of the entire structure had been done just last year.

According to McDonald, the club has a private club license and is supported by dues from the members. The dues are figured at a rate of $2 per $1,000 of income with a $24 a year minimum.

Since both houses are state property and the Faculty Club pays no rent, a great deal of their overhead is cut. As well, the club is non-profit and these two factors combined enable the club to offer their members very reasonable prices both in the bar in the Homestead House and the restaurant section, located in the Stockbridge House.

In the bar mixed drinks with bar liquor go for 80 cents with specialties as high as $1.25. The restaurant offers a substantial, but not gourmet, menu. The prices here are reasonable but not on a par with the savings in the bar. A complete steak dinner, for example, is offered at $5.95.

Probably the most attractive aspect of the club, according to Dick Wood, the evening bartender, is that members have a place on campus, away from the students, where they can find a relaxed, quiet atmosphere. The Stockbridge House has several dining rooms and meeting rooms where groups can find seclusion.

Most of the employees, waitresses and cooks are students. Although they have no connection with the Food Services Branch of the Stockbridge Program, both of their cooks are in that program.

Of the 7,000 or so administrators, staff and faculty who are eligible for membership, there are only about 350 members. The exact reason for this was not really made clear, but it is fortunate for the club that it is so. The facilities of the club are limited and a much higher membership would exert a considerable strain upon them.

Membership, according to Wood, is split evenly among those eligible. The Chancellor and Board of Trustees usually belong, with a spattering of members from other departments and offices of the university.

Both the structures which house the Faculty Club have rich histories. The Stockbridge House, built in 1728 by Samuel and Hannah Boltwood, is believed to be the oldest house in Amherst. Prior to becoming the property of the Massachusetts Agricultural College in 1864, it served as a home for a half dozen families. Probably the most colorful was John Field who moved into the house in 1739 after marrying the widow Boltwood's daughter. During the Revolutionary War he was imprisoned in his own home with a group of other Tories. In the late 1700s he was one of a group of Amherst farmers who joined the Daniel Shay's of Pelham in their unsuccessful rebellion.

Since its acquisition by the state, the house has had many residents. Levi Stockbridge, the fifth president of Mass. Aggie, lived there for fifteen years and since then the house has borne his name.

Ruth Ward, hostess for the club, who has been there thirteen years, pointed out some of the original features of the house. A great deal of the original paneling has been retained along with several colonial hearths. Sliding "Indian" shutters and small hiding rooms attest to the early settlers fear of attach. One aspect of the construction which interested me was a single step from one dining room to another, which had originally been a bedroom. Ms. Ward said this owed to the colonials belief that witches would never step down for fear of not being able to get back up and thus would not kidnap the children from the bedroom.

Said to be the third oldest house in Amherst, the Homestead House was built by Jonathan and Sarah Cowles, probably in the early 1730s. It became state property at the same time as the Stockbridge House, but was very run-down until its recent renovations.

It is certainly commendable that the University saw fit to preserve these two beautiful houses. the only thing that is a little disconcerting to me is that these landmarks are being appreciated by only a little more than 1 per cent of the University community.

Black Film Fest & Art Exhibit

by Aishah Raman

In an era when fifty so-called "Black Films" were released in 1972 alone, with no concern for quality, it must be remembered that it is the vulnerability of Black folks, starved to see their image on screen, that resurrected a dying Hollywood film industry. This is ironic when one considers that as early as 1903 with a production of Uncle Tom's Cabin and 1915 with D.W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation, the purpose of Black images used in films was to demean and distort. There is now a swelling roar of outrage against the contemporary Hollywood produced propaganda. The films presented by the Black Cultural Center of New Africa House in cooperation with Fine Arts Council and Campus Center Program Council in the "History of Black Film Festival" (October 29 through November 2) will illustrate that beginning in 1917 Black filmakers were already searching for alternatives to Hollywood.

The Film Festival will present (with two exceptions) films that were written, produced, directed, and acted by Black artists and will indeed illustrate that the so-called "Black Films" written, produced, and directed for the most part by whites is indeed a deliberate misnomer. The two exceptions are Emperor Jones starring Paul Robeson and St. Louis Blues starring Bessie Smith. These are obviously included because of the stars' importance. Ms. Pearl Bowser, director of Chamba Educational Film Services and St. Clair Bourne, one of the most important contemporary filmakers will be lecturing nightly on the historic and social background of each film.

The following is a description and schedule of the film showings:

October 29 at Thompson 104: Spying the Spy 1917 — Ebony Film Corporation silent short, part of a series surrounding the misadventures of a Black detective. Scar of Shame 1927 — The Colored Players Film Corporation of Philadelphia; silent drama about a young pianist who marries a poor working class girl out of pity. The drama that unfolds is a tangle of caste and color consciousness terminating in tragedy.

October 30 at Thompson 106: God's Step Children 1938 — Micheaux Production, drama surrounding illegitimacy and passing, based on novel, Naimo, Negress.

October 31 at Thompson 106: Emperor Jones 1933 — starring Paul Robeson. The story of the rapid rise to power of an ex-convict, personal corruption and the abuse of power. Based on a play by Eugene O'Neil. St. Louis Blues 1929 — W. C. Handy's St. Louis Blues starring Bessie Smith. The only film she ever appeaaed in.

November 1 at C.C.A. Let the Church Say Amen 1973 — Saint Clair Bourne, 2nd prize at Philadelphia Black Film Festival 1973.

November 2 at S.U.B.: Rasta 1972 — Clive Davidson, 1st prize Philadelphia Black Film Festival, Rastafarian movement in Jamaica. A Luta Continua 1972 — The struggle Continues — the revolutionary movement captured on film by five Black filmakers who spent 6 months living with the Frelimo movement in their villages and on the battle line.

Films will be shown at 8 p.m. each night with a single admission charge of 75 cents or a series ticket charge of $3.00. Tickets can be purchased at Herter Hall (Room 125) and New Africa House (Room 115).

Also in celebration of The History of Black Film Festival Week, film archivist Brother Charles Griffin will exhibit memorabilia including posters, photographs, handbills on early Black films at the New Africa House Art Gallery. The exhibit will coincide with the Film Festival and will open on Monday, October 29, 2-6:30 p.m.

WHe☐re NOTHInng can G★o WoNG

by Mike Wallace

Westworld, directed and written by Michael Crighton (Andromeda Strain) with Richard Benjamin, Yul Brenner and Dr. Stephen Kiley. Playing the Campus Cinemas.

I suppose you have seen the advertisements on T.V. or somewhere by now and you're wondering about the strangeness of a sci-fi western. This film seems to have generated a bit more popular appeal than the standard Adam Roarke Drive-In fare around lately, but I fail to see why.

The film involves two twenty-first century non-schitzoid men who become a bit so after spending a few days vacationing in Westworld. The latter is just one of three worlds offered by a different kind of tour agency allowing you to live out your historical fantasies. The film touches on the other two, Roman World and Medieval World in the end as Richard Benjamin careens through them trying to escape a psychotic robot. Basically, these era-resorts are detailed replicas of the real thing where everything from the saloon whores to the town gunfighter, and even the rattlesnakes in the desert, are computerized robots. Their function there is basically for the vacationer's sheer delight in destroying them.

"Nothing can go wrong," say the computer controllers who appear to be hired from the same agency as those who watch the blinky monitor screens on Star Trek and the Seaview. But, of course, things do go wrong. The Black Knight in Medieval World is programmed to lose a joust but runs a vacationer through instead. Rattlesnakes in Westworld bite. And worst of all, Yul Brenner, the mean ass gunslinger, a series 240 model, shoots back real bullets, much to the chagrin of Steve Kiley, who catches one. (Physician, Heal Thyself.) A lot of possible themes run through but Crighton misses all of them and leaves only a mechanical (no pun) horror film which exceeds to the extent that you're the kind of person who has nightmares about people chasing you.

A Westworld habitant goes in for her 50,000 mile checkup.

Benjamin is Benjamin, I've yet to see a film where he's not, but his clumsy disconcertion fits in well with the cold (non) control of the place. Kiley may have seen a lot of people die under the hands of Welby but he can't even do as much for himself convincingly. He should stop combing his hair back.

A lot of suspended belief is required. The finish is best. That's the only really scary part. Save your money and watch it on T.V. next fall.

WEEKEND

ALICE'S RESTAURANT (1969)

Arthur Penn's often funny and touching film interpretation of Arlo Guthrie's musical hassles with the police in Stockbridge, Mass., and his draft board. When the humor is present, the film captures the wryness of Guthrie's humor; yet when the dramatic elements emerge, a rather prolonged subplot concerning Alice and her marital hassles the film becomes a melodramatic mess of misused sociology. Filmed in the area with many of the participants in the original encounter. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 10-28, 7 and 9:30.

THE BICYCLE THIEF (1948)

Victorio De Sica's classic of post war Italian neo-realism. De Sica used all non-professional actors to tell the simple story of a poverty stricken man who, on the first day of his new job, has his bicycle stolen. The film follows he and his son's desperate search throughout the streets of Rome to recover it. De Sica wished the American translation be "The Bicycle Thieves" for it concerns two thieves as Antonio, the man whose bicycle is stolen, attempts to steal it back at the end. De Sica's simple direction matches the story. Bosley Crowther in the New York Times said: "One of the ten best films in 40 years. In its revelation of a lonely man in a complex world it ranks for all-around greatness with any picture made." Lecture Room One; Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Wednesday, 10-31, 4 and 8.

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID (1970)

A fresh and successful comedy-western which follows the exploits of two renegade outlaws in the early part of the century. The sardonic screenplay of William Goldman is based upon the real life exploits of Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid and in the process touches upon the theme of the closing of the American frontier. The direction is taut and ingenuous, the photography is beautiful, and the performances of Paul Newman, Robert Redford, and Katherine Ross are as likeable. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, 10-26, 10-27, 10-28, 7:30 and 10.

THE CRIME OF M. LANGE (1935)

Directed by Jean Renoir. M. Lange works in a publishing house in Paris, where his boss, the lecherous Batala exploits him and the other workers. In his spare time Lange writes stories about the West that Batala publishes. French critics Bardeche and Brasillach wrote: "A bizarre work that clearly bore the mark of the year in which it was made, with its exploiting capitalists, its workers' cooperative, its daughter of the people violated by an evil boss". Hampden Dining Commons, SW, Sunday, 10-28, 8:00.

The Taira Saga, a Japanese Film with English subtitles will be shown in Thom. 104, 7:30 & 9:30.

JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR

"And Now the Film," the ads proclaim as if fulfilling the prophecies. "Jesus Christ Superstar" has the charm of a hippie curio and the fascination of a beached whale. There's something hopelessly determined about the picture. It has the drive and rhythm of a pneumatic hammer and, is after the initial shock, about as enjoyable. Director co-scriptwriter Norman Jewison makes films which disguise themselves as disposable entertainments which overtly dissolve into glossy message films. Characters aren't just pieces of furniture in Jewison's films, they think, they know what "angst" is. Whipped before a public tribunal this hippie Jesus knew suffering — a bit of Bactine and this Christ would be back boogieing in the desert or knocking over picture postcards in his local temple. Jewison, a minor talent with mighty intentions, finds his artistic complement in "Jesus Christ Superstar", a desert operetta with Almighty intentions, and believes he's rediscovered the Holy Grail. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

KING OF HEARTS (1964)

Philippe DeBroca's lovely gossamar fantasy about the illusion of sanity in the world. It all takes place in a lovely French village during the First World War and stars Alan Bates. The film has an unbelievable rapport with college audiences — it has been running for more than two years at a Cambridge theater and often is discussed as one of the finest films ever made by students, certainly a good deal of fun. Academy of Music, Northampton. Ends 10-28.

THE LAST PICTURE SHOW (1971)

Cinema, West Springfield. The Best American Film of 1971 is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich the film is a straightforward well crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and is memorably played by Cloris Leachman, Jeff Bridges, Timony Bottoms, and Cybil Shepherd. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 11-1, 7 and 9:30.

A beautiful film about beautiful women and their lovers, Women In Love.

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO (1966)

David Lean's adaptation of Boris Pasternak's modern epic amounts to One Man's Family - Cossack style. This slick production is long and overly romantic. It reduces the novel to slick magazine pulp. The direction plods, the performances are slack and sloppy, the screenplay is academic and confusing, and the overall effect is as empty as the Maurice Jarre music score. A large cast is led by Omar Shariff as Zhivago, Julie Christie as the ever-patient Lara, and Geraldine Chaplin, Tom Courteney, and briefly radiant in a supporting role is Rod Steiger. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, Saturday, 10-26, 10-27, 7 and 10.

ELECTRIC GLIDE IN BLUE

FIVE EASY PIECES (1971)

A lyric and sombre comedy about a thirty-five year old drifter headed up the Pacific Coast to his first home. Bob Rafaelson's direction portrays human fraility with a devastating precision. Jack Nicholson is superb. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 10-28, 7 and 9:30.

HEAVY TRAFFIC

The second full length cartoon feature by the makers of "Fritz The Cat". A brutal, often offensive cross - section of urban living whose gritiness is compensated by its strong evocation of city living. Striking use of interplay between real life situations and its cartoon complement. The adventures of a young Jewish boy in New York with no social type rudely presented. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

HANG 'EM HIGH (1969)

A Clint Eastwood western. Mahar, Friday, 10-26, 7, 9, 11.

NIGHT WATCH

Elizabeth Taylor in an intricate thriller, with Laurence Harvey. Directed by Brian Hutton. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE SCARLETT EMPRESS

Marlene Dietrich as Catherine The Great. Joseph Von Sternberg's sumptious and mesmerizing visual trifle. A script that sounds like Imperial Russia was about a block away from Hollywood and Vine and a production which adds new meaning to the word "Chintz." Not to be confused with anything resembling history. Dietrich never looked better. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Tuesday, 10-30, 8:00.

SHAKESPEARE WALLAH (1966)

James Ivory's captivating excursion with a British acting company touring England. Ivory, is one of the most enjoyable American directors whose films have been largely ignored and this one is generally considered his best.

LATERRA TREMA (1947)

Derived from a novel by Verga, I Malavoglia, set in Sicily and intended as the first part of a trilogy (the sea; the sulphur mines; the countryside). Only this first part was completed. It is the story of the Valastros, a fisherman's family, poverty-stricken and exploited by canotieri (the men of the fish market). The film was hailed as a revelation by critics at the Venice Festival but it appeared very low down in the list of awards and was a commercial disaster. The Sicilian dialect baffled even Italian audiences. After the production company, Universalia, went bankrupt (because of its spectaculars not on account of this modestly budgeted film), it was cut severly and dubbed into Italian. In France, it was ruined by an overlaid commentary that reversed its meaning. It was not released commercially in Britain or North America and screenings have been restricted to film societies and specialized film theaters. After this film, Visconti again returned to the theater for several years.

THIRTEEN GHOSTS (1960)

So-so horror. Directed by William Castle. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 10-31, 4 and 8.

WOMEN IN LOVE (1970)

Ken Russell's florid interpretation of D.H. Lawrences novel about two sisters and their social and romantic entanglements in the English mining district during the early years of this century. Often simple, sometimes confusing, the film still has a strength both in Russell's splendid sense of exaggeration and Glenda Jackson's stinging performance. It won her an oscar. Many consider this to be Russell's best work; it may be but really doesn't approach the interesting films which followed in his career. With Oliver Reed. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday 10-27, 7, 9:15, 11:30.

Non-Union Grapes, Lettuce Issue

Atkin's Farm Picketed Sunday

By JERRY LAZAR

A widely publicized boycott of Atkin's Fruit Bowl on Route 116 Sunday afternoon brought an estimated fifty picketers carrying signs with slogans reading: "Don't shop here", "Atkin's supports scabs", and "Atkin's products are dependent on child labor".

The boycott, organized by the local Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee, is part of an area-wide attempt to remove non-union (scab) grapes and lettuce from grocery shelves.

Most of the picketers Sunday afternoon were students from UMass, Hampshire College, and Amherst College. They distributed leaflets which game a brief background of United Farm Worker AFL-CIO history, conditions of non-union workers' pay scales and health, and the reasons for the boycott itself.

The leaflet included quotes from a 1969 Senate Subcommittee report of migratory labor, which listed farmworking as the third most dangerous occupation, and from a 1969 California Health Department Survey, which claimed that farmworkers and their children are suffering from pesticide poisoning.

Children, ages 10 to 13, are performing hired farm labor for low wages, said the Senate subcommittee report, because the family breadwinner is not earning enough to support them, and the children are generally undernourished and undersized.

Howard W. Atkins, manager and owner of Atkin's Farm, was reluctant to talk to the press about the boycott situation, but said that union lettuce and grapes were "not available on the Springfield market."

Charles March, Western Massachusetts co-ordinator of UFW activities, claimed that Atkin's statement was not true.

"There's plenty of union lettuce available," said March, noting that area supermarkets which were previously picketed had managed to stock it.

Atkin's has been picketed for the past several weekends, usually drawing six to eight picketers per day. Sunday's picket, which started at 1 p.m., was widely publicized in the Amherst-Northampton community and on local college campuses.

"We're picketing Atkin's for several reasons," said March. "First we like to keep the picket active every day to keep the pressure on, and Atkin's is one of the few stores open on Sunday. Also, we want to focus on fruit stands as well as major chains, since fruit stands are responsible for carloads of grapes and lettuce," he said.

Atkins doesn't have to sell grapes from California," said March. "He has enough local produce," he said, citing the apples and cider which are Atkin's mainstay, a reason why "Atkins doesn't feel the effect of the pickets very much," according to March.

Attempts to negotiate with Atkins have been unsuccessful, said March, and have been met with anger.

"You have to remember, we're confronting a grower," said March. "He (Atkins) can see himself in the same position as the California growers, except the issue of unionization hasn't come knocking on his door yet," he said.

"We're asking Atkins to make a moral commitment to make up for the laxity of the California farm workers," said March.

Atkins declined to comment on how the boycott was affecting his business.

"We're farmers here," Atkins said. "My main business is growing apples. I'm a grower," he said.

March said that several supermarket chains have already agreed to cooperate with the non-union grapes and lettuce boycott, notably First National Stores and Big Y, and that negotiations are underway with Stop and Shop, Food Mart, and Shop Rite.

Also, the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee has successfully urged UMass, Hampshire College, and Amherst College to stop ordering non-union grapes and lettuce.

"We can't yet measure the effects of the picket lines in terms of commitments from supermarkets," said March, "but we are getting a lot of support in the form of community pressure."

The next supermarket chain on the picketing agenda, according to a member of the committee, is A&P.

Rising Costs Sighted

College Applications Stifled

By KATHY SHEFHAN

Applications for enrollment in colleges and universities across the country have been declining over the past few years. Speculation over the reasons for the decline at UMass were made by Mr. S. J. Lussier Jr., assistant dean of admissions. "Definitely, rising costs in tuition have affected enrollment" he said. Building construction costs, salary increases for workers, food prices, and the general cost of living have all contributed to the rising cost of higher education according to Mr. Lussier.

Mr. Lussier also admits that UMass has a reputation of wild going-ons (flaming toilet paper and screaming contests of Southwest?). The Boston papers have played up the Amherst campus as "a city in itself; one rape a week".

While these allegations may be a little exaggerated, UMass-Amherst does present problems for an anxious mother sending her daughter away to college. This, together with fact that more women are today looking for as good and as career-oriented an education as men, has resulted in the loss of half the women candidates for admission. Women are no longer satisfied with a Liberal Arts education and then a family, but instead are looking for an education at a prestigous college and on to a career.

Two years ago, there were 21,500 applications for admission to UMass. This year the figure dropped to 16,000. Much of this drop, according to Mr. Lussier, is due to the discouragement of out-of-state applications. When a non-resident student requests an application, he-she is also sent a letter from the admissions office outlining the slim chances for acceptance since UMass is a state university. Formerly, there were about 6,000 non-resident apliations to UMass, but after this letter was sent out, the applications dropped to 2,500. And the university usually has less than 150 openings for non-residents.

Associate Director of Financial Aid, Mr. Lynn Santner, also acknowledges the decline in admissions. In his opinion, "This year, financial aid problems and delays did have an effect on admissions because the Federal budget was not approved until mid-July."

The state budget was late, too. Students were alerted ahead of time that Congress was having difficulties revising the Higher Education Act. Funding was not assured and veto action or impoundment of funds by the president was possible.

"Many high school seniors", speculates Mr. Santner, "thought the Federal programs for financial aid might be wiped out. So, realizing that they didn't have the money themselves, many students didn't even bother applying to college." And in those who did actually apply for admission, there was a 2-3,000 drop in the number of financial aid applications.

According to Mr. Santner, UMass also lost a number of accepted applicants because limited financial aid could be awarded only while the funds were assured.

Federal funding did, infact, decrease this year by $300,000. However, the state budget was increased by about $300,000 to offset the Federal deficit. The total budget for the UMass-Amherst financial aid program is $2.9 billion. Most of the state funds are in the form of scholarships while the federal government appropiates money for grants, loans, and work-study programs.

One good product that came from the delay in federal funding is the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant or the BEOG. This program is available only to fulltime freshmen students who meet certain financial criteria. The BEOG is an Entitlement Program because Congress delcared that everyone who applies is entitled to aid, provided, of course, that they need the aid. Mr. Santner observed that the program appears to be underfunded at this moment, but congress has promised to appropriate more funds as students need them.

Although freshmen are still encouraged to apply for this grant, the program was too vague for high school seniors to rely on last year and could not be used as a recruitment gimmick.

Donny Plays

TREMENDOUS CONCERT! Chick Corea and Donny Hathaway tore the audience apart. Donny seemed to be in great spirits and the music was proof of that. There was a lot of security outside and in the cage as a protection against minor riots as has been the case in the past. All the protection proved to be unnecessary. The crowd was very well behaved. Only about one thousand people slowed up for the concert, which was about one quarter of the expected attendance. Hopefully, in the future, more people will attend so that the concerts will be continued.

Coming down the last stretch are some of the last walkers to finish. Among them are two blind students, each representing their fraternity or sorority.

Walkathon A Success

By DAVE GREENSLIT

For most students, Saturday morning is a time to catch up on lost sleep or recuperate from Friday night's activities. But for 70 UMass students, last Saturday was a time to raise money for the Heart Fund.

By walking or running a 12-mile course, volunteers raised an estimated $1700, according to Alpha Phi Omega advisor Frank Evans. The Heart Fund Walkathon was co-sponsored by APO and Gamma Sigma Sigma, the two service fraternities.

Last week, Heart Fund volunteers worked to sign up sponsors for the walk. Each sponsor then pledged a certain amount of money, usually 10 cents, for every mile the volunteer walks. APO and GSS members were located at four checkpoints along the walk route to initial the sponsor forms carried by walkers. This procedure verified the distance walked by volunteers.

Heart Fund walkers will collect pledges during the next two weeks and turn them in to APO and GSS. A representative will collect the money from APO-GSS. The funds collected will help finance research in heart disease. The dorm or Greek house that raises the most money will be presented the Heart Fund Cup.

This year's walk began at Haigis Mall in front of Whitmore and continued south on Rt. 116 to the Old Grist Mill and on to Atkin's Farm in South Amherst. Atkins donated apples to each walker who arrived at that checkpoint. The next stop was the South Amherst common, where checkpoint workers had juice donated by Finast waiting for volunteers. The circular course continued from South East St., to Main St., and ended back at Haigis Mall. There volunteers gladly accepted hot coffee and ate donuts given by Louis Supermarket in Amherst.

Although there were 30 more walkers in last year's Heart Fund Walkathon, this year's effort raised some $400 more. The goal of the Walkathon this year, said GSS president Diane Janvier, was to inspire competition among dorms and Greeks by presenting the cup, and to top last year's $1300.

..After the walk, the participants were greeted with donuts, apples and fruit juice.

You Too Can Study Abroad

By AVIS YUNI

A Study Abroad Night will be held Wednesday, October 31, 1973 from 7:30-9:30 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Sponsored by Alpha Lambda Delta (a female Sophomore Honor society) and the Foreign Student Office, speakers will include students who participated in seven, possibly nine, University programs abroad.

Programs will be discussed in Tanzania; Greece; Frieburg, Germany; Keele, England; University of North Ulster, North Ireland; Hebrew University in Israel; Summer in Oxford Program; and possibly programs in Bologna, Italy and Paris, France.

Dr. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs, will be there to answer any questions on other programs, administration, application procedures, etc.

The Director of Study in Greece, Incorporated, Katherine Kipreos, will also be there to answer questions. Ms. Kipreos will also be in the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore, the morning of November 1st to speak with students interested in study in Greece.

The format of the program on October 31st will be informal presentations about the repsective programs, followed by a question and answer period.

The deadline for almost all fall programs next year is December 1st. However, students interested in programs in England need to apply under an earlier deadline and are asked to come to the International Programs Office in the beginning of November. Those applying to Keelse, Lancaster, or Victoria, England are asked to come in the first week in November.

Most of the programs are two semesters in length, with participants paying the fee of the institution they attend abroad. More information will be supplied on Study Abroad Night or in 239 Whitmore.

MDC Vogler Fined

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Collegian reporter Mark Vogler, in Washington this semester on an OUTREACH internship, was given a $5 ticket by D.C. police yesterday. The charge was "improper use of the horn" according to Vogler.

It seems that Vogler was caught "honking for impeachemnt" outside the White House. There's no penalty for the first time, but Vogler, always the zealot, was caught making a return run past the White House.

Do you believe a picture says a thousand words? Need something extra to give that term project a lift? Have an old film favorite you would like to see? Taking a film course but cannot find equipment? The Southwest Media Center probably has what you're looking for.

"The Southwest Media Center is open to all students as well as faculty," says Larry Sinewitz, audio-visual co-ordinator in Southwest.

The Center having just obtained one portable television video taping system is also equipped with four 16 mm projectors, one portable screen and one reel-to-reel tape recorder.

According to Sinewitz, "The Center's policy on the equipment is that a student pick up and return the equipment personally, keep the equipment no longer than 24 hours, and show proficiency in the use of the media equipment.

Competency in operation of media equipment consists of prior know-how, which can be obtained in a colloquia given in Patterson House.

The Southwest Media Center, the only media center open to students, is open Monday through Thursday from 9-11 a.m., and Friday from 9-10 a.m.

For more information on the media center or a media colloquia, contact Larry Sinewitz at 6-9594 or the Southwest Media Center at 5-1551. The media center is located in JQA.

P.S.P. Backs Chilean Struggle

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

The Puerto Rican Socialist Party (P.S.P.), U.S. Branch, presented two Chilean movies, "When the People Awake" and "Venceremos", last Friday in the Campus Center. The two films elicited different opinions about the controversial happenings in Chile.

Mr. Dennis Berger said that, "the P.S.P. is giving solidarity to the people of Chile" and that the Party's position is "whatever solidarity they ask of our members we are ready to give. We will give direct support to the struggle in Chile".

In interviews after the activity, the audience expressed different opinions: Paul Mishler said that the "coup d'etat" was an effort "to stamp out the people's movement and prevent democracy."

Ms. Adriana Rothkegel, a Chilean, said that "not all the Chileans against Allende were fascist."

"I like the song that says-the unarmed song cannot command," said Ms. Jerry Casey. She added that "Allende's government was a brave try for constitutional changes."

Another Chilean, Mr. Carlos Lopez didn't think that the accusations of U.S. intervention could be true "because the causes for the 'coup d'etat' had not been analyzed yet".

However, many people were not sure if they had enough information to form an opinion about the present situation of Chile. Ms. Doreen Casey said, "most of the Americans don't really care about Chile, or even things that are going on in America."

In two days, it will be time for all ghosts and goblins to celebrate. For those of you who will be going out trick-or-treating, let me tell you a story. About a hundred years ago, a baby who was living in this local house mysteriously died. It is said that the baby now haunts the house. According to the resident, the baby cries often, and sometimes follows him around. The most recent occupant of the house says he has made peace with the ghost. However, if you don't know the ghost, be careful Wednesday night.

Dorm Security Up!

By MIKE COLLINS

A rising campus crime rate, financial difficulties, and the recent realignment of University security priorities has prompted action by several dorms and dorm area councils upon their respective security problems.

Residents of John Quincy Adams tower, in Southwest, elected a revised set of dorm security regulations by the required 2/3 majority.

The newly institututed regulations provide for the creation of a judiciary body to deal with irresponsible residents and the restriction of endangering behavior on the part of residents. Endangering behavior is classified by the regulations as any act potentially hazardous to the health and safety of Southwest residents. This includes hurling objects from the tower, the use of fireworks and any unneccessary noise.

The new security regulations also detail a new party policy for the dorm. Advance advertising of evening floor parties is forbidden. Party size is restricted to a maximum of sixty-five persons and a guest list must be presented to the dorm security coordinator in advance of the party. A floor resident will mark the party's floor number on the hand of each invited guest in an effort to account for all nonresidents in the tower.

JQA head resident Phil Chanin feels security at the dorm is sufficient with the approval of the new regulations so long as the dorm residents adapt to the rules. If residents would question strangers on their floors and report all suspicious behavior to the Heads of Residence, Chanin sees the likelyhood of theft and violence at the dorm being minimized.

At Sylvan, a proposal is being prepared to petition the University Administration to install steel doors at the entrances to the dormitories there and to reinstate University security personel removed to police the parking lots, according to Micky Harris, special assistant to the director at Sylvan.

The wooden doors now in use do not meet even minimal security needs, says Harris, because they can be easily jimmied or broken through. The replacement steel doors, ordered over seven months ago and paid for from the Sylvan area finances, have not yet been installed by Physical Plant personel, for some unknown reason. Harris feels, "...a seven month wait for doors is too long to leave security hanging."

Sylvan government also plans to request a security budget increase in order to employ more student security personel to cover for the lack of the special doors and the removal of University security personel.

Harris attributes the security difficulties at Sylvan to a lack of cooperation between student government, the vice-chancellor of student affairs and university maintenance.

Budget problems also plague Orchard Hill. Steve Stoia, Head of Residence at Webster, says that Orchard Hill security funds run out in March. Student representatives are currently engaged in forming an area government committee to introduce their petition for further funds to the Administration.

Rise Seen In Undergrad Quality Point Average

By BARBARA VOORHEES

The average Quality Point Average (APA) of a UMass undergraduate rose from 2.260 in 1962 to 2.818 in 1971, according to a study done by the University's Office of Institutional Studies last year.

The study shows that the average QPA rose to 2.393 in 1965, to 2.488 in 1968, to 2.696 in 1970 and to 2.818 in 1971.

The trend toward higher grades during the early 60's is attributed in this study to the improved background of the entering freshmen. Changes during later years are attributed to the introduction of new introductory courses so that a student can perhaps choose a more interesting course.

The 8-point grading system (A, AB, B, BC, C, CD, D, F) which was adopted by the University in May, 1969, also shares responsibility for the upward trend, according to this study.

"It would appear that; (1) about half, maybe more, of the AB's might have been A's under the old system; (2) that a majority of the BC's would have been C's under the old system, and; (3) that most of the CD's are more like high D's than low C's," the study reports.

A number of other academic studies and some faculty members suggest that the upward trend in grades is due, at least in part, to the pass-fail grading system which was instituted in 1969.

In a nation-wide report on the subject in the Nov. 10, 1972, issue of National Review, teachers are credited, or perhaps blamed, for the upward surge in QPA.

According to this article, the situation is due to a counter-reaction on the part of professors to the more competitive situation created by the great influx of students after World War II.

Professors, wishing to keep their students out from under the stress of a highly competitive situation, inflated grades. This, teamed with a student desire to abolish grades altogether, caused higher grades.

The magazine further reports that at some schools F grades have been abolished. Now grades lower than B are unsatisfactory and A's are the only way to go.

Last year the Faculty Senate at UMass decided to raise the minimum average for cum laude graduation from 3.0 to 3.2 beginning with the class of 1977. No degree higher than cum laude will be awarded automatically on the basis of QPA alone. Higher honors will be awarded only through departmental or BDIC honors work or departmental recommendations.

At UMass, professors have no set criteria for grading. Each professor is free to grade as he pleases.

If a student is dissatisfied with his grade, he can speak to the head of the department or the dean of the school in which the course is offered. The head of the department or the dean will look over the student's work and decide if the grade is fair or not. If there are no papers or tests involved in the course the student can write a letter describing what has happened and this letter will be put in the professor's file.

In a MDC random-sample survey, several professors discussed their methods of grading and their ideas on the upward trend in grades.

Chris Tolsdorf, a teaching associate for Psychology 101 gives multiple choice exams and calls the mean class core of BC. A student's final score is the average of all his test scores with added points for papers and of volunteer experimental work.

"It doesn't make any difference to the professor what he gives. Giving out A's and B's makes for better rapport with students and better teacher evaluation by students. It also makes it easier for students to get into graduate school," Tolsforf said.

Tolsdorf said that he has not been here long enough to notice any real trend in grades but he feels they are probably going up.

Professor Vancourt Hare, who teaches Production Management, in the School of Business Administration, said that he averages students' quiz grades for their final grade. He does not use a curve. He attributes the rise in grades to the pass-fail grading system. He feels that a lot of students entering college now are less well prepared than those of years ago.

"I think students are getting worse. There are a lot of transfers from junior colleges and the student body is less uniform. They are not as easy to teach," Hare said.

Professor Albert B. Nelson, who teaches Mineralogy and Rocks and Minerals determines grades on a percentage basis of 100 per cent. Below 50 per cent is failure and an A is from 90 - 100 per cent. He scales according to the class average.

He feels that the upward trend in grades is due to a change in attitude among students.

"For a while they were mixed up about the Vietnam war. Now it's a combination of attitude and better preparation. Not teacher leniency. Pass-fail has no influence," Nelson said.

Professor Bonnie Strickland, who teaches Adolescent Psychology, has threee exams and a number of outside extra credit assignments. She grades on a curve and a grade over 90 per cent is usually an A.

She feels that students are much better prepared when they enter college now than in the past.

Regardless of types of grading systems, which seem to range from giving a student a grade although you've never seen him or any of his work, to giving a C for regular attendance, to working closely with a student for 15 weeks on a special project, the grades here are getting better all the time.

War In The Mideast

As The Trapped Egyptian 3rd Army Is Relieved...

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The lead vehicles of a 100-truck convoy arrived with food, water and medicine Sunday for the 3rd Egyptian Army choked off in the hostile Sinai Desert by a ring of Israeli tank, Tel Aviv reported.

A second convoy also was allowed to carry medical supplies to the beseiged city of Suez at the southern end of the Suez Canal, Israeli spokesmen said.

The first trucks rolled through Israeli lines on the west bank of the Suez Canal following a face-to-face predawn meeting between senior Israeli and Egyptian officers on a bleak stretch of Egyptian sand, the Israelis said.

The Tel Aviv command claimed Egyptian holdouts attacked Israeli forces south of the beleaguered 3rd Army several times and that some of the 3rd Army troops fired on the convoy as it pulled into their parched desert trap. Egypt was warned the convoy would be stopped short if the firing continued.

Israeli Premier Golda Meir said she was happy the Israeli-Egyptian meeting took place after years of mutual isolation. She added:

"But to say that this leads directly to peace quickly, I can't say that. It's a start that people begin to talk."

The 1:30 a.m. encounter, about 60 miles from Cairo near a dry gully called Wadi al-Jandali, marked the first time Egyptians and Israelis have openly conferred at such a high official level since Oct. 29, 1956, the Israeli military command said.

The command reported that Israel was represented by Maj. Gen. Aharon Yariv, the assistant chief of staff. It also said a second meeting took place later in the day with Israel represented by Lt. Gen. Haim Bar-Lev, a former Israeli chief of staff redrafted for the war, and Egypt represented by its liaison officer to U.N. forces, Brig. Bashir Sharif.

Bar-Lev told Sharif the convoy would be turned back if the Egyptian forces fired on it again, the command reported.

Egyptian officials in Cairo refused to talk about the meeting or even confirm they happened, reflecting longstanding Arab refusal to deal directly with the Jewish state carved out of what once was Palestine.

The 3rd Egyptian Army of about 20,000 men has been trapped for about a week on the Sinai Desert side of the canal and in small pockets on the western side.

ISRAELI SOLDIERS raise the Star of David flag on a high point to demarcate Israel's cease-fire position at start of second U.N. sponsored truce

...Egyptian Command Makes Excuses And Claims Gains

By C.C. MINICLIER
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO (AP)-It is misleading to measure the results of three weeks of desert warfare by drawing lines on a map, an Egyptian army officer said Sunday.

Desert warfare is like naval warfare, he said, with each side trying to inflict maximum damage on the other, but with neither side seeking to take and hold areas of sea or land.

What is important, say the Egyptians, is that their army crossed the Suez Canal on Oct. 6, smashing the Israeli Bar-Lev defense line en route to initial successes in this latest war.

It is not known what the cease-fire will bring. But if the Israelis do not give up the Arab lands they occupy there will be another war, the Egyptians say.

Meanwhile the Egyptians point to the following as examples of political and psychological gains from this war:

+Great Arab unity.

+New economic pressure on Washington, applied through the decisions of Arab oil producing states to cut production each month until Washington persuades Israel to withdraw to pre-1967 boundaries.

+A new international awareness that the Israeli super-soldier, once able to defeat Egypt in six days, is a myth.

+Further isolation of Israel during the war is eight more black African states broke relations, including Ethiopia, which controls the southern entrance to the Red Sea.

+Revived big power interest in the Middle East after six years and four months of stalemate, prompting Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to say Oct. 25: "The United States recognizes that the conditions that produced the war of Oct. 6 cannot be allowed to continue..."

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said on Oct. 16 that his country was prepared to "accept a cease-fire on conditions that the Israeli forces withdraw forthwith from all occupied territories of the pre-June 5, 1967 line."

Both U.N. cease-fire resolutions have incorporated a 1967 U.N. action calling on Israel to withdraw from lands occupied as a result of the six-day war.

Israeli Premier Golda Meir says no Israeli soldiers will withdraw until a peace agreement is signed. Sadat says withdrawal must come first, adding "peace can only be established on the basis of justice."

Israel's Friends Diminishing

War Jars Relations

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) - Israel's intricately woven network of international relations has been badly shredded by the Middle East war.

Only eight black nations retain diplomatic relations with Israel in Africa, where once the Jewish state was solidly entrenched as a great friend of the emerging independent states.

In Europe, relations with some countries have come under a severe strain for what Israel calls neutrality in favor of the oil-rich Arabs during the latest war.

And at home, opposition parties have issued strong attacks against the Israeli government for allegedly failing to prepare for the war and for accepting a cease-fire before Arab armies were destroyed.

Among the problems in Europe, only the barest formality of diplomatic ties still remain with France. Israel charged that Paris should have canceled its contract to supply Libya with Mirage jet fighters after these planes allegedly flew missions in the war.

Israelis also were bitter toward Britain, which imposed an arms embargo on the combatants, stopping the supply of spare parts for Centurion tanks. The move had no effect on the weapons flow to Arab countries not directly involved on the battlefield, Israel said.

West German, declaring itself neutral, ordered the halt of the American supply of weapons to Israel through German territory.

But it was in Africa that the Israelis were stung the worst.

Since the fighting began, eight black African nations have severed, what were once more than just normal ties between friendly nations.

The Arab states "have consistently sought a peaceful and just solution to the Middle East problem," said a spokesman in Zambia, which broke ties with Israel on Thursday, apparently branding Israel as the aggressor in the latest war.

Israel is guilty of "bad faith," said an official in Nigeria, which also ended its association with the Jewish state Thursday.

These countries joined Ethiopia, Tanzania, Gambia, the Central African Republic, Madagascar and Cameron and 13 other African nations which severed relations before the war. Senegal said it had "frozen" relations until after the war.

Some of these countries once considered Israel their best friend for providing the practical assistance they needed rather than the handouts of bigger, richer nations like the two superpowers.

Death In A Small Country

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP) - There was Haim, her boy friend's best friend, and Zvika, the student leader who she went out with a few times, and Avner, the lawyer, whose wife gave birth a week before the war started.

All dead.

There was Rafi, who she went to Hacharmel Elementary School with, and Mario the pilot who took her sailboating, and Oded, her high school history teacher.

All dead.

And that was not all: Yoav was killed, and Danny, and Mair. Gideon, who rushed back from Columbia University to fight three days after the war began, was alive, but blind now.

Irit, who is 23 and a graduate this year of Hebrew University in Jerusalem, sat at a cafe table on Dizengof Street, Tel Aviv's main drag, and told what she knew of the war: first names, scrapbook snatches from her memory, the terrible immediacy of death in a very small country.

Irit stopped counting her friends when she reached 10. "I can think of two more," she said. "But what for?"

Death, an almost unpronounced word during Israel's war with the Arabs, is now becoming part of conversations here, although there are still no obituary notices in the newspapers, and little discussion in print about the numbers.

The Israelis gave a figure of 656 dead for the first week of the war. Averaged against the population of the United States, this would mean about 50,000 dead in American terms, more than the U.S. death toll in Vietnam.

U.S. defense officials have given estimates in Washington that the Israeli dead number between 1,000 and 1,500. This compares with about 800 dead in the six-day war of 1967 and comes out of a population of 3 million, of which 2.5 million are Jews.

And Back In Indochina...

PHNOM PENH (AP)-Government forces fought to clear Phnom Penh's southern approaches of insurgent troops Sunday, as rebel forces cut Highway 5, 12 miles northwest of the capital.

At the same time, the U.S. Embassy said Maj. Vincent Gomez, an assistant defense attache, had returned to the capital after being lightly wounded Saturday on the capital's southern front.

Gomez was reportedly observing government forces in frontline combat when he was hit in the arm by a bullet.

Field reports said insurgents virtually controlled a stretch of Highway 5 from Phum Kruos to Prek Taten, a distance of some 2 1-2 miles.

Insurgents have held a 10-mile section of HIghway 5 north of Sala Lek Pram, about 35 miles northwess of Phnom Penh, since Sept. 6.

Some observers believed the latest insurgent action was aimed at gaining a tighter grip on the vital supply link to Battambang province and at possibly launching an attack on Oudong, a small town west of the highway and once a royal capital.

Congress Confronts Nixon On War Powers, Prosecutor

By JIM ADAMS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress heads into confrontations with President Nixon this week over a new special Watergate prosecutor and war powers. And the preliminary impeachment inquiry gets under way in the House.

The President's decision to name a new prosecutor drew heavy criticism from Democratic congressmen, who said they will press ahead with their legislation to have the prosecutor appointed by U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica.

The bill is co-sponsored by a more than half the Senate-53 senators. A similar one is cosponsored by 106 of the over 400 House members.

Hearings on the President's firing of former special prosecutor Archibald Cox start Monday in the Senate Judiciary Committee, with Cox the leadoff witness.

Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson and his former deputy, William D Ruckelshaus, both of whom resigned rather than fire Cox, are expected to testify later in the week.

The House inquiry into whether there are grounds for impeachment proceedings against President Nixon begins in the Judiciary Committe Tuesday when it meets to set out procedures.

Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., says he will ask subpoena powers not only for the inquiry but for hearings on the confirmation of House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford's nomination as vice president.

Judiciary Republicans have indicated they will try to set limits at the Tuesday meeting on the impeachment inquiry to prevent, they say, "a fishing expedition."

By the end of last week 35 House members had co-sponsored resolutions to impeach the President and 86 had co-sponsored resolutions supporting the inquiry into whether there are grounds for impeachment.

The House votes Thursday on overriding President Nixon's veto of Congress' legislation to curb presidents' war powers-and the prospect is uncertain.

The resolution would impose a 60-day limit on presidents' power to commit U.S. troops abroad without Congress' approval.

A president could extend the 60-day period another 30 days solely for safe withdrawal of the forces he had committed.

Cox Cites Tape Controversey As First Step In Dealings With Evidence

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASINGTON (AP) - Former Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox said Sunday the presidential tape recordings over which he was fired "were clearly only a first step in seeking a great deal of important evidence from the White House."

Cox said that as part of an investigation of campaign contributions he would have sought accounts of a meeting between President Nixon and former Agriculture secretary Clifford A. Hardin which dealt with milk pricing.

The White House has refused to make such material available in connection with a civil court suit questioning a milk price hike granted by Hardin soon after dairy interests pledged $2 million for Nixon's 1972 campaign.

Alexander M. Haig, Jr., Nixon's chief of staff, would not say whether accounts of the Hardin-Nixon meeting would be made available to a new Watergate prosecutor. He said the question was hypothetical because Cox had never asked for that material.

Haig said he was "confident with a reasonable degree of good will that all of the information that the next special prosecutor will require will be made available to him in the form that is necessary for him to conduct his operation."

But Haig added: "Under no circumstances would we ever be true to the preservation of the powers of the office of the president to permit any investigator a fishing, free rein fishing expedition, into the vital discussions that occur in the president's office."

Cox appeared on the NBC television show "Meet the Press." Haig appeared on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Haig repeated that Cox was fired Oct. 20 as special prosecutor because he "insisted on a carte blanche ability in the future to demand further presidential tapes and memoranda."

Cox said he had to say "no" to President Nixon's attempted tapes compromise of Oct. 19 as soon as it was said that as the price of getting an account of the disputed White House tapes, "I must abandon the fundamental of any impartial investigation that I be free to seek evidence wherever it was in accord with the rules of law."

Cox said had he agreed not to further pursue Nixon materials in court, "that would have become a deal, a cover-up, I don't think you can restore confidence in our institutions by that kind of arrangemeet however much it might quiet things for the moment."

Cox said he believes Congress should pass legislation providing for a new special prosecutor. He said he would prefer to see the appointment made by the chief judge of the U.S. District Court in Washington despite some possible constitutional problems with such an approach.

Nixon said Friday that acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork would name a new prosecutor this week.

Cape Islands Feel Tourism

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

EDGARTOWN, Mass. (AP) - Three strong New England interests - the Kennedys, tourism and Yankee independence - have at times been on a colision course over a federal proposal to preserve the unspoiled islands off Cape Cod.

The two biggest islands, Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, are quaint preserves of 19th century seacoast life, for the most part free of the gaudy commercialism and crowding that has overtaken the mainland a few miles away.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has offered a bill that would put them in a federal trust that would drastically limit development. Opponents say this would make island residents like Indians on a reservation. But backers maintain it's the only way to save the islands.

The Nantucket Sound Islands Trust Bill, with its stiff controls on land use, would have profound effects on the islands' main industry - tourists.

Even the bill's opponents agree that the threat of the developers is real. Already, a clump of cramped condominiums has sprung up on Nantucket, an island 20 miles south of Cape Cod that is dominated by weatherbeaten architecture of the whaling days of the early 1800's.

And in the countryside around Hyannis Port on Cape Cod, near the Kennedy compound, miles of shopping centers, food stands, neon and hot top now overwhelm the calm beauty that attracted all the development in the first place.

Mass Action Charges "Waste" Of Taxes

BOSTON (AP) — The president of Mass Action said Sunday that the legislature's sergeant at arms office was "staffing for patronage people" and a waste of money.

Sam Tyler said the office's budget is "2.1 million that goes for door keepers, court officers and pages-a budget that is currently over-spending.

"I like to call the sergeant at arms office House Speaker David Bartley's brigate. It's a totally unjustified waste of taxpayers' money. There are 95 salaries over $12,000 a year for the door keepers, the court officers and pages. There are 18 people who are either door keepers or court officers who earn a total of $255,000 a year."

Gallup Poll Claims

Kennedy Would Be Victorious

PRINCTEON, N.J. (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy would be victorious in a presidential race against Gov. Ronald Reagan of California, according to the latest Gallup Poll.

The poll shows Kennedy, D-Mass., receiving 50 per cent of the vote and Reagan getting 43 per cent. Two per cent said they preferred other candidates, and five per cent were undecided.

In the Oct. 6-8 survey, 1,576 adults were asked: "Suppose the presidential election were being held today. If Gov. Ronald Reagan were the Republiian candidate and Sen. Edward Kennedy were the Democratic candidate, which would you like to see win?"

In a separate poll released earlier this month, Reagan was the leading choice of Republicans for their party's 1976 nomination, with 29 per cent naming him as their favorite candidate. Reagan was followed by New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller with 19 per cent and former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally with 16 per cent.

Kennedy was the top choice of Democrats as their party's 1976 candidate in a midsummer survey. He was chosen by 40 per cent, followed by Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace with 16 per cent.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guests for the live, 60-minute forum will be members of the Northampton City Charter Commission, who were elected in 1971 to review and propose changes to the existing city charter.

Northampton voters will be able to approve or reject the new charter proposed by the Commission, in the municipal election Tuesday, November 6th.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions to Commission members during the live broadcast.

Counties' Budget Makes New Jobs

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A record high county supplementary budget will contain about 80 new jobs, most of them already earmarked for the friends and acquaintances of the state legislators who requested them.

The $6.35 million budget covering 12 counties outside of Boston contains at least 40 new jobs plus 34 assistant district court clerkships already approved in separate legislation and more than $65,000 worth of jobs for the new Hampden County Housing Court.

The budget was made necessary by the 3.3 per cent cost of living pay raise for all county employes and the 10 per cent pay boost for judges approved in separate legislation. However, only one county, Dukes, settled just for that money.

The other 11 counties will get at least a few new jobs or money for summer employes or office equipment.

And the longer the budget takes to get through the legislature the larger it grows.

It has been amended three times thus far-twice in the House and once in the Senate, each time picking up another job or pay raise for someone.

The budget contains 13 new probation officers-just salaried at $11,278 a year. That is in addition to the 60 new probation officers approved in the regular county budgets.

The highest paid new position will be an $18,000-a-year purchasing director for Middlesex County. Norfolk County will get two new $11,895 posts-one for a solid waste administrator and another for a head executive assistant to the county commissioners office.

Hampden County will get, in addition to court personnel and probation officers, a new $9,323 post in the highway department and an interpreter for the district attorney's office at $9,924 a year.

Some employes with clout in the legislature will get more than their cost of living raises. For them a grade or title change will also mean a pay boost.

In the latest action on the budget in the House, the chief transportation officer of Middlesex County John J. Buckley will get a $894 raise to his $15,077 salary. Bristol County Treasurer Edmund Dinis and that county's registrar of deeds in New Bedford, John Gomes, will also get pay hikes.

For Barbarity, Hypocrisy:

America Reigns Without Rival

Richard Nixon in 1968. We knew all too well what his political rhetoric (i.e., "Bring Us Together" and "Law and Order") meant for we were fresh with wounds and scars from the civil rights struggle, assassinations of humanistic Americans, and Vietnam. White Americans who witnessed the civil rights movement, the anti-war movement, and the 1968 Democratic National Convention discovered you didn't have to be Black to experience police brutality and other forms of injustice in the name of "law and order"; Blacks were soon to witness a variety of reprisals mited out to humanistically-oriented White similar to those they once thought only reserved to "keep Black folk in their place." Some of us were myopic in describing the Nixon administration as either racist or sexist. The administration quickly responded by having some of our national figures openly endorse it, e.g., Mamie Eisenhower and Floyd McKissick. I have always believed that the racism and sexism within this administration are but symptoms of its far deeper malady-human "oppressionitis". How can any humanistically-oriented American not feel so fundamentally oppressed with the appointments of Daniel Moynihan, John Mitchell, L. Patrick Gray, Spiro Agnew and the Morman George Romney? Why must we be insensitive to the oppression that divides us through acts of omission, e.g., are there no minorities or women capable of high trust in our government at the cabinet level? Can you understand the oppression we felt when Spiro Agnew recently proclaimed his innocence to a large gathering of Republican women and declared he would not resign even if indicted? Can you understand the total impact of this oppression even when you consider it has taken nearly six years to inform the American people of Agnew's disqualifications for the vice-presidency and less than six weeks to destroy the political aspirations of Thomas Eagleton? Can you understand the oppression which characterized Jane Fonda as "a rattling irresponsible female" because she sought to inform the American people of her impressions of our involvement in Southeast Asia? Can you understand the historical relationship of Rev. Billy Graham to the Nixon Administration and not question why he isn't crusading against the malfeasance and the misfeasance of this administration with at least the same religious fervor he employed to help get it elected? Can you understand the oppression inherent in the ideological and political images presented by John Connally and Sammy Davis, Jr., who only a decade ago rallied around the political ideology of John F. Kennedy in his defeat of Richard Nixon? To charge them with racism or sexism would be inadequate for they would counter these allegations with a history which includes inter-racial marriage and "Female Republicans for J.C." (Perhaps it would be understandable if the J.C. stood for the highly respected Biblical humanitarian). Can you understand the oppression inherent in the Senate Watergate Committee? A cursory glance at the voting records of its chairman and cochairman would provide an indication of their regard for law and order, especially in the area of civil rights. It would not then be astonishing that they entered into a compromise with Richard Nixon over the Watergate tapes. Can you understand the oppression in this trio's selection of John Stennis rather than Edward Brooke or Bella Abzug to review the tapes?

Had Archibald Cox not served hs country so honestly by sincerely attempting to discharge his duties and subsequently challenging the right of any American to be above the law I would be forced to conclude that in the case of Richard Nixon the American people have never inaugurated a president but rather crowned a king. Mr. Cox's insistance of justice might well be the last opportunity Black and White Americans have to make brotherhood a reality. The treatment that this great American has received by Mr. Nixon is not of the benign neglect variety but rather of the overt inhumane order. Americans owe the same great human debt to Mr. Cox as we do to Thurgood Marshall. A fitting act toward partial payment of this debt would be honoring him and the U.S. Supreme Court by ascertaining him a seat on this high tribunal upon the occurence of its next vacancy.

Finally, I operate on the theory that Black-White relations are more honest and generally greatly improved when we know and understand the truth. Twentieth Century history clearly indicates that Black Americans have been the moral guardians of the Constitution. The ranks of enlightened and humanistically-oriented White Americans have been swelling since Thurgood Marshall and the Browns of Topeka challenged the constitutionality of "separate but equal schools" in 1954. Rosa Parks challenged the constitutionality of "racial discrimination in public conveyance" a year later and the nation was blessed with Martin Luther King, Jr. Two years later Daisy Bates and nine Black students in my hometown challenged the constitutionality of the "state's right doctrine". It was only providential that Frank Wills, a Black security guard at the Watergate, should initiate an inquiry that has led to one of the gravest constitutional crisis in our history. We are all indebted to Mr. Wills, but White America is deepest in his debt. Given the elements of time and location only Mr. Wills could have awakened White America from its dreamy sleep into the relevant nightmare that skin color doesn't automatically insure constitutional rights. Without these Black guardians of the law, our Constitution and our people might well be out of touch with each other. On July 4, 1852 a Black abolitionist and ex-slave, Frederick Douglass challenged White America:

"Go where you may, search where you will, roam through all the monarchies and despotisms of the Old World, travel through South America, search out every abuse and when you have found the last, lay your facts by the side of the everyday practices of this nation, and you will say with me that, for revolting barbarity and shameless hypocrisy, America reigns without rival."

Watergate will pass, but its empathetic lesson musn't, I challenge each American to begin now or continue exploring his or her humanity as an individual lest Fredrick Douglass' words haunt us on July 4, 1976.

Making $ In D.C.

Everybody is making a fortune in Washington these days. You cannot find a lawyer that is interested in taking anything less than an income tax evasion case. Restaurants are constantly packed with people in town for one legal battle or another, the traffic is terrible. New car sales are way up, now that so many government workers lost their limousines.

I have a friend who is making a fortune too. Her name is Irma Shennanigan and she runs a small boarding house on lower Pennsylvania Avenue. Shennanigan House is a famous landmark in Washington. It has housed many diplomats and statesmen in it's history.

I had a nice talk with Ms. Shennanigan the other day. We were discussing some of her most recent boarders and how she got to be a millionaire...which we both agreed wasn't anything unusual in Washington these days. Everybody is getting rich one way or another.

"It's the damndest thing," Ms. Shennanigan began, "It all started with those Mitchell people. They insisted having an efficiency on the third floor. Then they had telephones installed. Four of them. In three rooms. Have you ever heard of anyone needing to use the phone so much? I think it's downright crazy," she said.

"The funny thing about the Mitchells is that they took the apartment for four years until 1976. Mr. Mitchell said he had a good job with the government, but he didn't stay too long...had to forfeit his rent. I heard he's going to jail, and that his wife threw him out. Some of these Washington people are really crazy."

I had to agree.

"There was another couple of real screwballs that stayed here for a while. They worked for the government too. I could hear them talking through the register once in a while. They were always saying something about coverup, coverup, coverup. I thought they must have been cold so I turned up the hear. I was just trying to be nice, but the next day they both came down and asked me if I wouldn't cut it back. They said they were getting enough heat at work to keep them for the next ten years. I didn't know what them meant exactly. I never got to find out, because they both got fired too. I guess having a government job isn't like it used to be. Nobody seems to stick around anymore."

"But one of the biggest nuts that ever stayed here was this guy named B.B. Rebozo, "continued the wealthy innkeeper. "He was always walking around with a briefcase that had a handcuff lock on it. Everytime I asked him where he was going he would just say that he was going to Florida to do some laundering. I guess he must have been rich to go to Florida just to do his laundering.

"And then there was this guy Segretti. He had a hairdo like a babboon. He was a natural practical joker. He was always leaving me notes about how his hot water didn't work, and then he would tell me that up at the Senate Building Hearing Room they could keep people in hot water all the time. He was sort of a funny guy...always talking about creep this and creep that. I never understood him very well."

"The last guy I'll tell you about is this guy Cox. He was very quiet, never wanted to talk to newsmen like many of our guests here do. He said he was going to be here a year or so and that he had come to town to clean up. He was always bitching about wanting tapes. You don't suppose he was a freak or something do you? You know, the kind that sits in his room all day and listens to tapes smoking that funny stuff?

I had to tell Ms. Shennanigan that I didn't understand anything about people that come to Washington these days.

"Neither do I," agreed Ms. Shennanigan, "People used to come here, stay two or three years, do their work, stay out of trouble and leave. Now they come for two or three years, stay for a few months then quit or get fired. I make a fortune by collecting their rent in advance. I don't understand it. You don't suppose there is a leadership problem at the White House do you?"

It's Frightening

While going over the assigned reading of the week before, the Professor seemed obviously tired. In discussion with the class, his style, usually energetic and engaging, was lackluster and unenthused. While his knowledge of the subject was obvious, his thoughts were distant thoughts and thoughts away from the plan of conversation.

After announcing that he would continue discussion with the class after a small break for coffee, a student broke in with a request: soft spoken, but adamant she wanted to respond to another students comments concerning the topic being discussed.

"You may always make a response in my class", the Professor interjected and then all his hidden thoughts came out: the deep feelings that since the beginning of class had been hiding behind the veneer of a man engrossed in his subject. He went on, "Of course you never know. You don't know just what Nixon has planned down in Washington. He's got the military on alert, even Kissinger (usually cool) seemed shaky in his news conference today. In General Haig, Nixon's got a true link to the military. You never know when a coup d'etat will take place. I'm not saying that it will, but the climate is right, and the point is you just don't know what is going on. Indeed it is frightening."

Another student broke in and said, "That reminds me of the story about the Polish Logicians during the German blitzkreig of Poland in World War II. While the Germans were invading, the Poles were studying logic. What the hell are we doing here while this insanity is going on in Washington?"

"That's a good question", replied the Professor, "and I'm really not sure what to tell you. It is very difficult. What would happen if Nixon did take over the country? There is no organized resistance. Would the military join with this madman, or would they stay true to the constitution? I just don't know what to tell you except that, yes, it is very difficult to rationalize us studying while this is going on. However you've got to do something!"

The atmosphere of the class was quite subdued, as the Professor went over the possibility of the first coup d'etat in the history of this country. My thoughts drifted away slowly. They were personal observations and feelings. And the saddest thing of all is that I could see how it could happen.

Things are peculier down in Washington. Even the usually traditional George Meany is making bold statements concerning the mental stability of President Nixon. Reading the remarks of Nixon's Friday Press Conference, I feel that Meany might be right for a change. Only the public outrage of the American people, made Nixon give in and promise to give up the tapes. It wasn't a sense of justice: nor a sense of morality. It was the sense of saving one's own skin, and again hiding one's motives behind the over used Nixonite cliche- "public interest".

While Nixon's decision to hand over the tapes will take away some of the momentum of those moving for his impeachment, it will not stop the struggle in its entirity. The tapes issue was one piece of firewood: Nixon's entire Presidency supplies enough fuel for the "fire" of those who will continue to try and ouster the President.

Nixon is a desperate man. While I would like to believe that he was acting in the best interests of the country when he ordered a "military alert", I just can't. The entire "alert" seems too much like a diversion to get our minds off Watergate. Using the fear of war to disolve the fear of corruption is a neat but cruel political trick. Any sane person fears nuclear war more than corruption. The sad irony is that Nixon is going out the same way he came in: manipulating fears and emotions to polarize people. Alger Hiss might be living in England now so he can no longer be exploited by Nixon. Perhaps it is safe to say that the Middle East situation is the contemporary Nixon's Alger Hiss.

Nixon is a desperate man. People are beginning to realize this. It is not a pleasant thought, especially for those who for so long believed that he was "the one", and would "bring us together". The silent majority is no longer so silent. Congressman from Oklahoma as well as Massachusetts have been receiving the same demand from their constituents "Nixon must go". These people who believed so deeply in the Nixon Administrations are now angry and confused. These are the type of feelings that one gets when someone that you trusted or loved betrays you. Their belief has been hit hard. First sold out by Agnew..and now the "real" Nixon is coming out of the closet.

We live in a Democracy-if we can keep it. We can no longer sit back and be "armchair citizens", letting our sense of personal responsibility cease simply by watching Walter Cronkite. Citizens must assert themselves and make sure that this nation remains a Democracy.

But perhaps I am moving away from my original theme. What would you do if you turned on your T.V. or radio and you found out that every channel was the same. The message was the same. The face on the tube a mellow man, in military dress, whose face looked like it had been through one too many parades. And the message was always the same: "We have taken over the nation in the name of National Security ('there's that word again')". What the hell would you do?

Some of the people with whom I've discussed this have said that they'd fight the military. But I ask after the romantic inspiration dies off, what would you fight them with? Others spoke of running. To this I inquired, "where?" What would you do?

Perhaps such a scary scene will never happen. The point is that something is wrong in Washington. It is up to the Congress to try and set things right. We the people must put pressue on them to do so. It is time for people to sit down and really think about what is going on. It is time for Nixon to go.

A Drop Of Empathy

By O.C. BOBBY DANIELS

"They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth their needs must think
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake
And, with leathern hearts, forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! true freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And, with heart and hand, to be
Earnest to make others free."

Although my White brothers and sisters will never know what it means to be Black in these United States, the Nixon Administration has provided a significant element of empathy for them, i.e., the sense of frustration and powerlessness which overshadows their lives, liberties, and pursuits of happiness is inextricably bound to Black America's realization of these constitutional guarantees. White America can no longer play the "How Does It Feel To Be Black In America" game less they identify with the oppressors. It should by this time be clear that this is the identical struggle that Black Americans have been waging since Crispus Attucks gave his life at Boston Commons and the subsequent lives millions of Black Americans have given at home and abroad in the spirit of democracy. Democracy has never totally worked in this country; it has been compromised. My Black perspective suggests that on July 4, 1976 it will not be fully realized. For all too long the majority of White America has either ignored or placated its Black brothers and sisters; some have gone so far to openly express pity. Today they must face the painful realization that for nearly two hundred years they too have been incarcerated. I do not know what the deeper meaning of being White in America is during these turbulent times; however, it must be perplexing to some Whites who have historically viewed themselves as the privileged (master) class vis a vis the underprivileged (slave) class and suddenly be rudely awakened to the possibility that Washington (ruling class) has classified them on a continuum between "house nigger" and indentured servant thereby making them eligible for the same interrogation and invasion of privacy historically reserved for the underprivileged.

Granted Americans are at various levels of consternation over the facts that we are a nation without a vice president, an attorney general, and an assistant attorney general; nonethless, Black and humanistically oriented White Americans have persevered this reality since the election of

Israel Support: Not Unthinkingly

To The Editor:

Gretel Monroe, in a letter published in Friday's Collegian, expressed distress that "church groups in the Five College area" have "unanimously" decided to give "unthinking support" to Israel in the present mid-east crisis. Ms. Munroe deserves a response, because all of her comments quoted above are inaccurate, plus her assumptions that the statement endorsed the "ingathering of all the Jews in the world to Israel" and ignored the problems of Palestinian refugees.

The statement she refers to, came from a gathering of chaplains, campus ministers, rabbis and other staff persons working with religious organizations at the Five Colleges, hardly the sum total of church groups in the area. As convenor of that group, I helped to draft the statement, read it at the support rally for Israel on October 9, and distributed it to the media. The statement did not receive unanimous support, though all but a few did endorse it. Let me assure Ms. Munroe, in case she does not know the persons in that group, that they are not likely to do much of anything "unthinkingly" nor to agree on any statement on any subject without some hard work!

The statement began, "Israel, as a state and as a people, has a right to exist. That existence must be maintained even while questions of boundaries and economic and political justice for Palestinian refugees are being settled diplomatically. We abhor the use of war as a means of settling this historic problem." Clearly, that paragraph does not endorse the ingathering of all Jews or ignore Palestinian refugees. The second paragraph called for U.S.-U.N. cooperation in pressing for the continued existence of Israel, a cease-fire and intensified diplomatic efforts.

The third and final paragraph asked persons in the religious communities of these staff members to support Israel's existence. It continued, "Those of us who are Christians acknowledge our continuing need for the people Israel as, in St. Paul's terms, the root of our Christian faith. We have an historic burden of anti-semitism to live down." It concluded with a call for prayer, study, gifts of support, and labors of reconciliation.

Finally, I would like to make some personal comments which go beyond clarifying what the published statement said. The Jewish people have suffered much in their history on this planet, not least at the hands of western and Christian movements, culminating in Hitler's genocidal destruction of six million Jews. The many Jews I know do not blindly identify Judaism and Zionism, but they are increasingly persuaded of an important link between them. Jews at this point, like other peoples, have some rights of self-determination. It ill-behooves Christians, of all people, to deny them either that right or their theological insight into the connection between Israel the people and Israel the state. There is in the Christian world today a great deal of careful new thinking going on about the relationship between Jews and Christians. It is not yet clear where the spirit of God will lead in all this, but it is clear that something new is happening in the long and sad history of relationships between these two communities of faith. I, for one, intend to work and pray that that new reality may be incurnated soon rather than later.

It should be added that new thinking is going on among Christians about relations with Islam as well, though not yet so intensively as with Judaism. But it would seem that the least Christians can do right now is to make the affirmations made in our Five College Religious Workers statement.

Frat Life

To The Editor:

It seems to me that Fraternity life here at UMass has been subject to many distortions and has been the target of inaccurate stereotyping for all too long a time. Before going on, I would like to say that I am not a member of a Fraternity but have been allowed the privilege of living in one this semester. When I came to UMass as a freshman, I was subject to the usual stories about Fraternities being crazy with six inches of beer on the floors all the times. What I would like to say to all the Freshmen and Sophomores who may read this article, is just find out for yourself. There can be so many good times in a Faternity. Social life should be a part of your stay at college, and Fraternities have much to offer. You don't have to make any snap judgements about choosing one either. You have a whole semester in most cases and can even live in for a semester before making up your mind. Even the simple things can mean a lot, like eating a meal without feeling like you're in a train station. The food, by the way, is much better than some I've had on this campus. So if you've had some thoughts about it, or even if you haven't, think about it. Don't miss out on something that could really make your stay at UMass, and make you some real friends for life. Take advantage of a real opportunity; then you won't have to look back and wonder what you might have missed.

Lib-rary

By KAREN A. MONACO

Do you have any idea how many buildings here at UMass out of a total of 120 or so are named for women? Just take off one sock if you intend to use your feet to count.

I went to the library a couple of weeks ago and went through some of the old yearbooks. In doing so, I discovered something. If you want a building here at UMass to be named for you in your old age or in postmortem, it's entirely necessary that you have been a 30-year-plus member of the faculty or have at one time in your life been a President of the United States, and needless to say, be white and a male. If at the moment none of these seem to be in your immediate future then you can almost forget it. I managed to find five dorms named for women, Mildred (?) Pierpont, Mary Lyon, Elizabeth McNamara, Emily Dickinson, and (Elizabeth) Arnold. There may even be a couple that I missed. My next order of business was to find academic buildings named for women. I was unable to for quite a while. Finally, in desperation I found myself at Skinner Hall which houses the Home Economics Dept. I fully expected to see inside a plaque reading "Morris Skinner - inventor of the sewing machine" or something along that line but instead found the portrait of a woman named Edna (maybe they called her Ed for short) Skinner who was the first dean of the school. So at least I managed to find one academic building named for a woman even if it was an obvious one. No, I take that back. I found two. The other was WOPE (Women's Phys. Ed. Bldg.).

The next time you go into the new library pause a moment to look above your head. You will see two words that I assure you will do nothing less than inspire you, for together they form the name of the building . . ."Univiversity Library". There, just reading them here on the pages of the Collegian, didn't it just send a chill running throughout your whole body? It's difficult not to feel any emotion upon seeing or hearing it. Such a creative title. Almost as radically innovative as the names of the buildings at Hampshire. It seems that some really bright people got together over there and came up with the novel idea of resurrecting the Roman numberals, hence Academic Building I, II, III, and Master of the House IV, and V. But then, names such as those don't leave the average student in a quandry as to their origin and they are certainly nonsexist enough for me.

There may be some hope though in the form of the 28-story extravaganza sitting in the middle of the campus. I spoke with Jack Littlefield of the University Planning Office about the naming of the new library. I questioned the permenance of the iron work above the door to which he made a crushing motion with his hands so it would appear that "University Library" does not have to stay with us til death do we part. I am not in favor of renaming the other buildings with a feminist or androgynous ideal in mind. Water Polo at Girlden Pool? A Chemistry Class at Goessone? Paying lab fees at the Student Unice? But I would be very much in favor of such action with regard to the new libray. The size of the library does not even come close to the oppression that women as a majority have felt through history. So to even make such an analogy would be ridiculous and at best, inadequate. Possible names should be weighed carefully. I believe it to be imperative that special efforts be uddertaken to include among those names up for consideration, women, especially those who have made siginificant contributions to our history. Sojourner Truth is the name of one women that was proposed last semester. If this is not done, I am sure that the Board of Trustees' choice of name will share a semblance with nearly every other building on campus in their mirroring of our male-oriented culture. Two weeks ago we all watched our beloved ruler when he came out to annouce his choice for Vice-President. My friends and I were hanging on every word. Then Nixon said it. No, not "Gerald Ford", you're ahead of me. He said that for the last week he had been looking for a "man (ugh). . .or other individual to fill the office of V.P." I feel compelled to ask . . .an individual what? Is an individual a woman perhaps? Or maybe he meant an individual monkey. Obviously, I must be missing something. There must be something innately unfeminine about being a Vice President or in having your name cast in iron above the library door that hasn't hit me yet.

By the way, it is the Building and Grounds Comm. of the Board of Trustees to whom letters may be sent with suggestions or comments, regarding the naming of the new library. I'm sure they'd love to hear from us. A few weeks ago I was told of one suggestion, but would you want to study in a building called "O'Connell's Last Erection"?

Letter To The President

Mr. Nixon:

In view of the past and present circumstances, I feel your resignation would help us attain the goal of creating an everlasting peace that you've worked so diligently if not incognotoriously for.

While peace and law and order may be achieved more efficiently and irrevocably by your obvious methods, I'd rather it didn't. Ze National Security Council may have been the answer, or even Ze International Security Council, and hopefully it wasn't created after the dismantling of the aforementioned.

But I think we'd rather stick it out and try teaching our children. Hopefully it won't be how to decontaminate food and adjust breathing regulators but rather to live in harmony with what natural environment remains and how to feel and express their love for one another.

I realize that our economic structure does exist, and life will probably continue to evolve around it, but as Mick Jagger said, "I've got no expectations." But hopefully you can generate a new optimism in America by accepting your own resignation.

Whether you are guilty or not, it would most benefit the country and the world if you would resign the office of President. I don't care if you claim it's for health reasons or because, like Spiro said, an irresponsible press has injustly tarnished your public image. Then again, I don't care if you get time or the chair, but just get sick and we'll let you keep the million dollar mansion to live in.

I ask you please Mr. President, don't let all you've done in the world be in vain. If not for the half-million Indochinese, then for the 25,000 American men, resign, and propel us toward the new prosperity these people died for.

Let us forget the ten years passed, and begin where we left off. Let us return to a time when our nation trusted and even loved its president. You lost to that man, though it appears you're winning in the long run. But fair is fair, and cheaters should never win, especially when they do it twice, and in the same family even!

So please Mr. Nixon, for those who get in your way, and for the benefit of all mankind, RESIGN! It will most definitely be one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind. As Jack once said up in what you've been known to call, "Kennedy country," "Let us begin anew."

Just one question: Did Jack Ruby ever work for Bebe Rebozo?

Soloist Humphrey To Perform

Schubert's "Die Schone Mullerin," a story of a young man's tragic love, will be performed by tenor Jon Humphrey in his Oct. 31 recital at UMass.

The concert, which is part of the free series sponsored by the UMass department of music, will be at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The piece, a cycle of 20 songs, will be presented without intermission.

Mr. Humphrey is a noted tenor who has performed as soloist with the Robert Shaw Chorale and has recorded with the New York Pro Musica on Decca Records. Pianist Fernande Kaeser, also on the University's faculty, will be Mr. Humphrey's accompanist.

Gambling Traffic Slowed In South Shore Raids

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) - Fifteen persons were arrested in a series of weekend gambling raids that officials said "should make a healthy dent in organized gambling traffic."

Most of the 26 raids were carried out in a one-hour period Saturday in southeastern Massachusetts, according to Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn.

The locations hit were "not just ordinary bookie joints," Quinn said, but "offices" from which illegal gambling operations were coordinated.

The raids were conducted in Boston, Norwood, New Bedford, Fall River, Achusnet, Fairhaven and Westport. "The number used in this particular racket is the daily New Jersey lottery number," Quinn said. "This is practical evidence that the establishment of a state lottery has not cut into organized gambling operations. Let's not kid ourselves."

Most of those arrested were booked on various gambling charges, including accepting wagers, illegally using a telephone for wagering and possession of gambling paraphernalis, a spokesman said.

Cash and gaming equipment confiscated was taken to the state police training academy at Framingham, where Asst. Atty. Gen. John Irwin was coordinating efforts.

The raids culminated a year-long investigation that included court-ordered wiretaps, said John Larkin of the attorney general's criminal investigation bureau.

"This type of raid should make a healthy dent in organized crime in Massachusetts," Larkin said.

No Fishing!

GLOUCESTER, Mass. (AP) - The Georges Bank fishing ground will be closed for yellowtail flounder beginning Wednesday, the national Marine Fisheries Service said.

The federal agency said the area off the New England coast had reached its annual catch limit of 15,000 metric tons.

Watergate Lecture At Hampshire

The Rising Cost Of Newsprint!

By DEBORAH M. RANKIN
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Many American newspapers, already economizing because of a newsprint shortage, have indicated that a 14 per cent price hike in the commodity announced last week will probably force them to raise advertising and circulation rates.

On Wednesday the Canadian International Paper Co. said it was increasing the price of newsprint by $25 a ton to $200 a ton effective Nov. 1.

The size of the increase stunned U.S. publishers, who had been expecting a two-part boost announced recently by some other big Canadian producers. This plan called for an increase of $15 a ton on Jan. 1 and another increase of $10 a ton on July 1.

W.H. James, publisher of the New York News, sent a telegram to Canadian International rebuking the company for giving short notice of the price hike and calling the move "a flagrant disregard of common-sense customer relations."

James termed the proposed increase "highly inflationary."

His views were shared by Robert D. Nelson, general manager of the Los Angeles Times, who said: If prices "are raised inordinately, such as $25 a ton, there's no question but that this is going to trigger some inordinate advertising or other rate increases."

For many publishers the price hike was overshadowed by their continuing difficulties in obtaining newsprint, which has been in short supply because of a wave of strikes that just ended at the Canadian mills.

"Our immediate concern is to get newsprint at any price," said managing editor Ralph Otwell of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Some saw the increase as another reason to further tighten up on newsprint consumption.

"We'll have to cut back on the news hole somewhat, reducing some of the features," said publisher Robert Withers of the Rochester Minn., Post-Bulletin. "We've already cut back on comics."

But many other papers said they already had slashed newsprint consumption to the minimum and had no alternative but to pass the increase on to readers and advertisers.

Patrick Hession, general manager of the Newspaper Agency Corp. which publishes the Deseret Utah News and the Salt Lake Tribune, said the increase could boost ad rates and probably circulation rates too.

"We've already cut ourselves to the bone on circulation," he said. "But what else can you do? You have to pass it on."

For some papers which have recently raised ad and circulation rates, the increase came at a particularly awkward time.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus has a reputation for being stubborn. But in many cases the Taurus individual is determined and a fierce fighter for truth, collecting and analyzing information. Taurus is capable of interpreting, projecting, delineating and of being an artist, as symbolized by Venus, the planet associated with this zodiacal sign. Three Taurus celebrities who have demonstrated their open-mindedness to me are actor Glenn Ford, actress Janet Blair and author Jess Stearn. Whenever I talk about astrology with any of these famed Taureans, I am stimulated and encouraged.

NFL Roundup

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Bill McClard, who joined the team at midweek, kicked four field goals and the New Orleans Saints upset the Washington Redskins 19-3 Sunday in the National Football League.

The victory boosted surprising New Orleans' record to 3-4 - all three victories coming in the Saints' last three home games.

The Redskins record dropped to 5-2, but they did not lose ground in their bid for a second straight National Conference East Division title because second-place Dallas was upset 30-16 earlier in the day by the Philadelphia Eagles.

McClard, signed as a free agent last week after being cut by San Diego, kicked field goals of 35, 43, 30 and 37 yards. He missed another 37-yard attempt and a 47-yard try.

The Saints' only touchdown came on a nine-yard pass from quarterback Archie Manning to fullback Bill Butler. It climaxed a 76-yard first-quarter drive.

Curt Knight's 35-yard field goal in the fourth quarter kept Washington from being shut out.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Quarterback Roman Gabriel threw two touchdown passes and scored once on a sneak as the Philadelphia Eagles upset the Dallas Cowboys 30-16 Sunday in a National Football League game.

The Eagles posted 27 points in the first half as Gabriel hit Harold Carmichael with touchdown passes of six and 10 yards and dove over from the one. Tom Dempsey kicked a pair of field goals and two extra points.

The 33-year-old Gabriel, traded to the Eagles last spring by the Los Angeles Rams, completed 20 of 34 passes for 203 yards and two touchdowns.

In defeating Dallas for the first time since 1967 - the Cowboys had won 11 in a row from Philadelphia - the Eagles took advantage of a short Dallas punt, a fumble and two key pass interference penalties to build a 27-13 lead at intermission.

The Cowboys stopped the Eagles offense in the second half, but managed only a field goal as the fired-up Philadelphia defenders stopped hard-running Calvin Hill and limited quarterback Roger Staubach to short passes.

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) - A nine-yard touchdown pass from Fran Tarkenton to Chuck Foreman and aggressive defensive play helped the Minnesota Vikings to a hard-earned 10-9 victory over the Los Angeles Rams Sunday in the battle of the National Football League's last two unbeaten teams. The third-down pass lifted the Vikings, now 7-0, into a 10-0 second quarter lead and enabled them to withstand field goals of 30, 35, and 47 yards by Los Angeles Kicker David Ray, the last with 5:55 to play.

Foreman fumbled on the first play following the kickoff after being hit by Isaiah Robertson, and Jack Youngblood recovered at the Viking 47 to put the Rams in very good position to pull out a seventh straight victory.

But on the third down, Minnesota Jeff Siemon blitzed through to sack John Hadl for a 15-yard loss back at the Viking 40.

That play was typical of the Viking defense, which punctured the high-powered Los Angeles offense that had been averaging 361.5 yards per game, holding the Rams well below that figure.

Other key defensive plays were interceptions by Nate Wright in the second quarter and Jeff Wright in the fourth off Hadl, who had been intercepted only twice in his first six games. Another key defensive play was Carl Eller's block of a 32-yard field goal attempt by Ray in the second quarter.

Last Saturday afternoon Yogi Berra sat in the Mets dugout watching Tom Seaver. This Saturday found him in Storrs, to see his son Tim set an all time UMass receiving record.

Irish End Streak Of USC

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) - It was a crunching, high hit, knocking the helmet off the head of the intended receiver and drawing a collective gasp from the crowd.

Notre Dame freshman defensive back Luther Bradley was the player who put it to Southern California senior flanker Lynn Swann, one of the nation's best receivers. The sky-high yearling was just showing the visiting USC player he and his teammates were ready.

That's the way eighth-ranked Notre Dame's 23-14 victory over Southern California was accomplished here Saturday-with a hard-hitting defense that held No. 6 USC, 5-1-1, to 68 yards rushing and a total offense of 243 yards.

Trojan Coach John McKay was a disappointed man after his team's 23-game unbeaten string-the nation's longest, with 21 victories and two ties-was ended.

"We didn't have the ball much," he said, "but we shouldn't have only 68 yards rushing. They had the ball much more than we did. And where we got the ball had a lot to do with our offensive performance."

Swann, who made a great catch on a 27-yard touchdown pass from Pat Haden for the last Trojan score, added, "Notre Dame was really high. It was a very emotional game."

A beaming Coach Ara Parseghian, a man who has fought the rap of not winning the big one despite his great record at Notre Dame, said, "I am tremendously proud of this football team of ours."

It was a stirring victory for the Irish, 6-0, as they came back from a 7-3 deficit to take a 13-7 lead with 30 seconds left in the first half and stay ahead the rest of the way.

Pats Lose

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The mighty Miami Dolphins, stung by two New England touchdowns in the first period, rallied with the help of three field goals by Garo Yepremian and wore down the Patriots Sunday for a 30-14 National Football victory Sunday.

Miami, the defending Superbowl champion with a 6-1 record, surrendered its first touchdown in 189 minutes and 49 seconds after the patriots recovered a fumble and scored at 3:29 of the opening period.

The Dolphins struck back on the 80-yard drive to tie the count, but New England regained the lead 14-7 on the first play of the second period. Yepremian then took charge, extending his successful field goal string to seven in a row.

Yepremian connected on boots of 25 and 38 yards to pull Miami to within 14-13 at half time. Then he put the Dolphins in front to stay with a 23-yard boot after the Patriots' Jeff White, subbing for ailing punter Bruce Barnes, had a kick from the end zone partially blocked.

The third field goal by the soccer-style marksman came at 2:16 of the third period. Less than two minutes later, White fumbled a centering snap and tried to punt on the run while in the end zone. The ball went out on the New England 3 and two plays later Mercury Morris hit the right side for a touchdown.

The Dolphins drove 75 yards in nine plays for an insurance touchdown early in the fourth period. Larry Csonka capped the drive with an eight-yard run off his left side, reaching the end zone standing up.

New England scored on its first play. Jim Plunkett rolled to his right, escaped a trap and passed to Sam Cunningham on a 34-yard touchdown maneuver.

Cunningham, a rookie from Southern California, scored New England's other touchdown on a 6-yard burst on the first play of the second period.

New England was the last team to score a touchdown against the Dolphins, in a 44-23 defeat at Miami a month ago. In its last three games, the Dolphins had surrendered only six field goals.

Porsche Audi Introduces

New Model

The Porsche 911 Carrera, a street version of the winner of the Twenty-Four Hours of Daytona and other world famous road races, has been introduced for sale by the Porsche Audi Division of Volkswagen of America, Inc

Like the other 1974 models in the much-improved 911 series, the top-of-the-line Carrera is a sports-car-driver's sports car.

The Carrera can be distinguished immediately from other Porsche models by a rear 'spoiler', an aerodynamic device that improves the car's road holding ability, and distinctive side Carrera lettering. The Carrera offers a sizable list of standard equipment designed to add to performance or styling. A 2.7 liter (164 cu. in.) engine developing 167 hp gives the Carrera a top speed of 140 mph.

Ferocious Frosh Ram Rhody, 41-0

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

For you and I, Halloween comes this Wednesday, but for the freshman football team (guess they couldn't wait) Halloween came last Friday afternoon. The frosh tricked the URI frosh Huskies in the masquerade, and treated themselves to an afternoon of fun and laugher: in the process rambling over the Rhode Island Rams 41-0, in their season opener.

The Frosh scored in every way imaginable. . The first time they got their hands on the football they ran the Rams to paydirt. Following scores were on: a pass interception runback, an aerial bomb, a safety, and they kicked a couple of field goals to boot.

Coach Billy Maxwell was extremely pleased with his squad's performance and he "was equally pleased that everyone got a chance to play. With so many guys at practice sessions (70) it's not always possible to get everyone in the game."

Maybe you wouldn't give the details of your Halloween shabang, but it would be unjustifyable to the players involved, if these details were withheld.

The Frosh displayed a fluent running attack as they rolled up over 300 yards on the grond. It was a balanced attack with four players garnering over 40 yards. Richard Jessamy led the assault with 67 yards on 11 carries (and two touchdowns on runs of 15 and 1 yard). Others in the 40 yard club included T.J. Edmunds (10/52), Bob Peck (9/47), and Steve Williams (4/45). Keith Lang added a third touchdown via the ground route as he rambled home from 15 yards out to ignite the scoring.

After Lang scored standout defensive back Ron Harris (3 interceptions of the day) picked off a Rhody aerial and returned it 46 yards to put the Minutemen ahead 13-0.

Rhode Island just couldn't seem to do anything right. On an attempted punt, the Ram center got carried away and delivered the ball past the endline of the end-zone for a safety. (At this point the UM defense led the UM offense 8-7)

A 13 yard run by Richard Jessamy and a 19 yard connection between quarterback Frank DeFillipo and Receiver Larry Whitfield left the Minutemen with a 28-0 halftime lead.

After a silent third quarter, the offense went back to work in the fourth stanza. After Jessamy went in from the 1 yard line, Greg Sprout and Dan Starkey connected on field goals (22 and 36 yards respectively).

Viola, Massachusetts 41, Rhode Island 0.

A good word for the defense is a must. (The Minuteman varsity offense against Connecticut must have been modeled after the Rhode Island freshman offense on Friday). The Rams were held to MINUS 24 yards rushing. Their passing game was good for only 71 yards on 7 completions in 20 attempts.

Paul Segersten took sixth, running the course in 25:13. Pete Bortolotti was five seconds behind "Segs", taking seventh.

John McGrail and Paul Doiron, both freshmen, came through for UMass, placing eighth and ninth respectively. McGrail fought off opponents throughout the race, and was clocked in 25:22. Doiron nipped George Reed of UNH by one second. He finished in 25:25 to give UMass six of the first nine runners to cross the finish line.

Chris Farmer, the seventh UMass runner to finish, captured twelfth with a time of 25:36.

Vermont led by Steve Dunklee, took third in the meet with 89 points. UNH finished with 122 and URI, paced by Tom Grundy, totaled 128 points. Maine took sixth with 152 points, while BU placed last with a total of 176 points.

Coach Ken O'Brien exhibited a rare display of emotion while cheering for his runners. The mentor exploded with excitement towards the end of the meet, when it was evident that his runners had clinched the championship.

UMass was presented the championship plaque after the meet, one to go along with the many other plaques in Room 225, Boyden.

Huskies Trip Booters

Demeter shut off another threat in the same manner late in the game when he again left his net to gather in a slow roller off the foot of Jim Vollinger.

Meanwhile, at the other end of the field, the Huskies were bombarding Vercollone and the UMass defense. With Tim Hunter, Len Tsanteris, and Innocent leading the way, UConn pelted the net with 30 shots, (UMass managed only 13) forcing Vercollone into 13 saves.

Two bright spots for the Minutemen were King and fullback Bob Merrill. King controlled what little offense the Minutemen could muster, and Merrill, while having trouble with swing kicks, thwarted the UConn attack enough to keep the score respectable.

KICKING IT AROUND-The Huskies impressed as a good, tough team, deserving of their high New England and national rankings. Quotes from some UMass players after the game bore out this fact.

Dan Ouellette: "They are a very, very smart team."

Paul Pelloquin: "I think they could beat us any day of the week."

Tom Coburn: "They're a good team but we just couldn't get it together."

...Sacked At Storrs

cloud formations over Storrs as the UMass pass protection totally broke down.

The loss of center Kevin Moran, who played one play Saturday and re-injured his leg, was a major factor in the breakdown as was some shoddy pass-blocking by the backs, minus Paul St. Onge, who injured his ankle early in the game.

"It was obvious we had nothing on offense," Dick MacPherson said after the game, "they killed us with the blitz and we couldn't do anything to stop it."

"You've got to give them credit, though, they played tremendous defense."

The UMass defense wasn't all that bad either. The Huskies only had 215 yards total offense for the day, and were only able to get up one sustained drive for a score.

All three of their touchdowns came in the second period, and only one could be called the defense's responsibility.

That one was a 54 yard drive that featured Eric Torkelson leaping and running over would-be tacklers as he carried on eight of the 13 plays in the drive and scored the touchdown.

The other two were set up by offensive giveaways deep in UMass territory.

But MacPherson said it all after the game when a reporter asked him if it was the worst offensive performance ever by one of his UMass teams.

"Yes" he replied.

INCIDENTALLY: UConn is now 4-0 in the conference, and will have to lose the title as no one else is undefeated.... This will be the first MacPherson-coached team that hasn't at least shared the Beanpot....A sellout crowd of 15,551 in the stadium was accompanied by another thousand or so on a hill overlooking the field....A visit to the UConn locker room after the game revealed a number of handmade posters bearing pictures of Tim Berra and Pennington saying "Wanted--"....Next Saturday is "Salute to Yogi Berra Day" at Alumni Stadium.

Field Stickers, Vollers Bow

Last Thursday night, the UMass varsity sticker's unbeaten streak came to an end as Smith College ran away with a 2-0 win.

Smith was out to avenge last year's loss to the Minutewomen. Offensively, they were in the right place at the right time while on defense they kept a close check on UMass.

Had it not been for goalie Nancy Barr, Smith would have tipped the scales even more. Barr pulled through for the UMass defense as she broke up numerous scoring threats. Wendy Alpaugh's back checking and fine stickwork proved fruitless as UMass came out on the short end.

The UMass J.V.'s won, 5-0 in the preliminary.

The UMass volleyball team fell to Springfield Thursday in two games, 15-2 and 15-2. Tonight beginning at 6:00 P.M., UMass will host Bridgewater State College and Southern Connecticut in a round robin series.

North Stars Tie Bruins

BOSTON (AP) - Center Murray Oliver and defenseman Tom Reid scored their first goals of the season in the third period to boost the Minnesota North Stars to a 3-3 tie with the Boston Bruins Sunday night in a National Hockey League game.

The tie preserved a seven-year hex for the Bruins over the North Stars, who have yet to win a game in Boston Garden in 17 tries since they joined the league. Minnesota has three ties and 14 losses in Boston.

Reid fired a 30-footer past Boston goalie Ken Broderick with 2:38 remaining to gain the tie after Oliver had tipped in Fred Barrett's blast from the point of 8:30 of the third period.

Bill Goldsworthy gave the North Stars a 1-0 lead 15 seconds after the opening face-off when he took a bouncing puck off the boards and beat Broderick on a 25-footer for his sixth goal of the season.

Phil Esposito evened the count at 3:46 with his 13th goal in the first nine games of the season, taking a pass from Wayne Cashman in the corner.

Johnny Bucyk put Boston in front 2-1 in the second period and Carol Vadnais made it 3-1 in the third on some fancy stick-handling before the North Stars struck back.

UMass Vs. UConn: The Yan Con War

UMass Harriers Run Away With YanCons

By SCOTT HAYES

Some say history repeats itself. The UMass Cross Country team must be trying to prove the old adage, because history repeated itself for the fourth year in a row Saturday when UMass won their fourth straight title.

The team placed six of its seven runners in the top ten, as the runners came up with a brilliant team effort to retain possession of the Yankee Conference title. The harriers outscored UConn, a team which was supposed to challenge UMass for this year's YanCon crown, 22-44.

The race was something to watch for UMass fans. The familiar maroon and white dominated the top positions and showed all doubters who's number one in the Conference.

Randy Thomas outdueled UConn's Bruce Clarke for the individual championship.

Thomas, Bill Gillin, and Tom Maguire went right out at the start, with Bruce Clarke of UConn, and for the first two miles it looked as if it would be a four-way battle for individual honors.

The three UMass runners pressured Clarke, a freshman, and their experience showed as Thomas was able to pull away from the UConn star. Maguire also passed Clarke and held second place after four miles. Clarke came on strong in the last mile, however, to capture the runnerup spot in the Conference.

Thomas, who supposedly said before the meet "No freshman beats me twice in a row," saw his prediction come through as he completed the five mile course in 24:26.2. Thomas felt that Clarke may have been tired, having run against tough individual runners most of the season. The UMass co-captain also thought that if the top runners could pressure Clarke, they would be able to beat him. Thomas especially wanted to beat Clarke and settle matters after losing to him in the UConn meet.

Maguire also ran a sensational race, finishing just two seconds behind Clarke in 24:38. Bill Gillin finished fourth for the YanCon champions in 24:50. UConn's Bob McCusker placed fifth with a time of 25:03.

Huskie Booters Trip Minutemen, 2-0

By STEVE DeCOSTA

It was a day for crunching title hopes, and the UMass soccer team was not immune to the blitz.

The booters were out-hustled, out-played, out-everythinged in Connecticut on Saturday and the Huskies parlayed their superior performance into a 2-0 victory, clinching at least a tie for the Conference championship and completely erasing any possible Minueman title hopes.

The blitz began early as Bill Cooke put the Huskies on the board at 13:24. Franz Innocent took a throw-in, dribbled past a Minuteman defender and fed Cooke in front of the net. The UConn attackman sliced a roller toward the goal which UMass goalie Carl Vercollone deflected, but not quite enough, and the Huskies were up, 1-0.

The second Connecticut goal was incidental as far as the outcome was concerned, but the way in which it was scored puts it in the realm of the spectacular.

Late into the second half, 34:54 to be exact, UConn All-American Tim Hunter gave Innocent a long clearing pass down the sideline. Innocent, himself an All-NE choice last year, edged the ball toward the corner. Then, with the ball resting squarely on the out-of-bounds line, he rifled a cross pass to the top of the penalty box. With the ball about four feet above the ground, Gary Cirullo came in on a dive and headed a bullet into the net. 2-0, UConn, and the show was over.

The Minutemen were plagued by errors all morning. Missed traps stymied the offense and overburdened the defense. Another problem was on swing kicks. The defense was unable to turn the ball upfield and became content to boot passes out of bounds. Thus the Huskies were able to maintain control, driving deeper and deeper into UMass territory.

UConn goalie John Demeter had little trouble in garnering his eigth shutout. His defense, spurred by fullback Phil Whitehead, kept the pressure off for most of the contest.

UMass was able to mount only two viable scoring attempts. At 35:16 of the first half, Demeter robbed Tony King as the netminder came out of position to take a dribble right off King's foot.

Grid Hopes Sacked At Storrs

By BILL BALLOU

There were eight minutes left in the game, and UMass had the ball first and goal on the Connecticut seven yard line. Two plays later they were at the UConn three. Two plays after that, they were on the Huskies' 32 yard line, and had to give the ball up.

And that, friends, is the way things went all day long for the UMass "offense."

"Inept" is the only word Webster provides that can describe the Minuteman performance on Saturday. It wasn't just the 28-6 loss to Connecticut, a loss that says "Bye-Bye" to any hopes of a Yankee Conference championship for UMass, it was the way it happened.

Try digesting these peachy facts about the game:

--UConn caught the Minutemen for two safeties (a QB sacking and a blocked punt)

--UMass fumbled four times, and lost three of them

--Connecticut blocked two UMass punts, and partially blocked a PAT attempt

--UMass quarterbacks were sacked ten times for combined losses of 89 yards

--counting the sackings, the Minutemen rushed for a net total of two yards in 40 attempts, an average of 1.8 inches per carry

The only good part of the day for the offense came during the first two minutes of the game when a bad snap on a punt forced Connecticut to give up the ball on their own 25. UMass "drove" four yards in three plays and on fourth down Peil Pennington ran a fake field goal all the way in for the only UMass score.

The Minutemen added 104 yards passing to go with their two yards on the ground, but Pennington's 9-21 and Fred Kelliher's 0-2 are deceptive. They both spent the bulk of their playing time admiring

Piel Pennington calls on his number one runner, himself, as UConn defenders close in for the kill. UConn held the Minutemen to a 2 yard total rushing offense.

Call To The Freshmen

"Apparently I was wrong in not using freshmen. I thought it would be best for them if I didn't, but everyone else is using them and it seems to be working out well."--Dick MacPherson.
more coming on 8.5

The coach will bring his request before the Athletic Council today. "And I don't think there will be much trouble in getting the freshman rule as far as football is concerned at this school changed," he predicts.

Desperation? No, rather necessity. His running backs are depleted, their performance likewise. Saturday afternoons, are becoming all too taxing for the man to handle. His Sunday morning film sessions even more.

"I just don't want to see my team decimated anymore because we can't run the football," he demanded yesterday morning. The resultant: "I plan to use some of my freshman running backs this Saturday against Vermont."

He mentioned no names, but the emphasis is on "speed", a commodity lost with the exit of one Paul Metallo, a lost cause with this season's backs and an apparent possibility via this year's recruits. And so the freshmen. Enough of that.

MacPherson is "no way down on my young people. They're doing the best they can." But he is also not one to make excuses. "They're out there to do a job," he said, "and when they don't I let them and you (press) know."

Believe it or not he was more upset with the Rhode Island game than Saturday's attempt at UConn. His reasoning centers on who was and who wasn't there at both games. "From a coaching standpoint," he explained, "we were sadly disappointed and terribly sick of the teams performance against Rhode Island for they were healthy.

"We weren't healthy against UConn. It wasn't a true test of our team." He points to an often maligned offensive live that had only two of five men in their regular positions. He feels the loss of fullback Paul St. Onge when his team was ahead 6-0 was the coup de grace as far as backfield blocking and the game itself was concerned. "Without him, there was no one to pick up the blitz."

But he was also quick in repremanding his team for two safeties and two botched punt attempts. "There's no excuse for that," he said. "We're very concerned and very ashamed about it."

To date, UMass football has exhibited some obvious flaws which have not lacked in lambasting from press and fans alike. All too often though the critics themselves are obvious in their expertise. Let me lend a few ripples:

First, the football team expended themselves physically with their non-league opponents rendering themselves prone to horrors within their conference.

Second, the loss of a Richie Herman and a John Healy not only left a void in position, but one in psychological presence on the field. "We just don't have a gamebreaker a la John Healy on the field," amplifies MacPherson.

And finally you're UMass. You were 9-2 the year before, you won the Boardwalk Bowl. You have a Peil Pennington, a Tim Berra and the pre-season polls have indicated another blitz. Without question everyone and his brother is more than hypered for UMass. For many schools in the Conference their schedule and season revolves around beating the Minutemen.

You can sense the tensions on the road. Nobody likes Massachusetts. The President is not alone.

Ford Hearings Start Thursday

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Rules Committee voted unanimously Monday to begin public hearings Thursday on the nomination of Rep. Gerald R. Ford to be vice president.

Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., the committee's chairman, denied that the committee is holding up the Ford nomination and said the early hearing date speaks for itself.

Ford, the House Republican leader, will be the first witness.

Cannon said the Justice Department has withdrawn a previous agreement to make raw FBI data on the Ford investigation available to Cannon and Sen. Marlow H. Cook, R-Ky., and summaries of the material available to all members of the committee.

The promise was withdrawn Oct. 24 by Acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork, Cannon said.

Under a new agreement, the data is being made available to Cannon and to Cook the committee's ranking Republiian.

They must make their own summaries for the rest of the committee.

Cannon said witnesses, other than Ford, have not been decided upon.

Earlier in the day, Democratic congressional leaders said they hope the nomination can be voted on in both houses this year.

Nolan Says Impeachment "Just A Matter Of Time"

By DAVE GREENSLIT

The Boston Globe's Washington bureau chief said last night that it is "just a matter of time before events will unfold and he (Richard Nixon) disappers like the Cheshire cat."

Speaking to over 100 persons at an informal and often humorous discussion at Hampshire College, Martin Nolan described the political scene in Washington and the difficulties of getting information from the Nixon Administration.

He said aides in previous administrations were usually willing to offer information beyond the "official line." Nixon aides, he said, are kept pretty much in the dark and can never predict what Nixon will do. "How do you cover that?," Nolan asked. He added that reporters can only report "inconsistencies in the official report."

Introduced as a member of the Nixon "enemies list", Nolan termed such administration tactics "stupid and witless", and added, "but they weren't kidding." He said "if it wasn't for Watergate, we might all be playing softball in Danbury."

Nolan said the Presidential news conference is not an effective vehicle for obtaining information. He called it "Presidential turf." The President can choose those who ask less aggressive questions, he added, and emphasized that openly hostile questions build sympathy for the President.

Asked to comment on the choice between Gerald Ford or Carl Albert as a possible successor to Nixon, Nolan said, "Well, Ford is taller."

Henry Kissinger's days of flamboyance were over, he said, and he must now get down to the "nitty gritty" of State Department work. "Things like negotiating soybean deals with the Japanese," Nolan added.

Nolan was a replacement for Robert Healy, the Globe's political and executive editor. Healy speech had been titled "Watergate, The White House, And The Press."

Prof Damns Beavers

By MIKE KNEELAND

Nine-year old Barry French used to enjoy watching the beavers in a stream near his Pelham home. When the beavers were killed with the state's approval, Barry's complaints launched animal lovers, ecologists, UMass scientists and town residents into a controversy the area has not experienced for some time.

Scientists say the beavers in Pelham are responsible for discoloration in Hill Reservoir, which serves some 35,000 Amherst residents.

To build their dams, the beaver cut down trees that would not normally enter the stream. The tree and its leaves decompose in the water, giving it a brownish color. These affected streams then feed into Hill Reservoir.

To eliminate the water's discoloration, the State Fish and Game Commission has allowed the killing of all beavers on streams which feed into reservoirs.

UMass Professor Joe Larson, a nationally recognized beaver expert, says there are no alternatives to the beaver killings.

"Beavers are very plentiful in he state right now," he said. The Professor explained that beaver coats are no longer in fashion so it is no longer economically feasible for trappers to hunt beaver. This means there are often more beaver in an area than ecology warrants.

"It's hard to trap beavers alive...and there's no place to release them," he said.

Professor William MacConnell, of the UMass Forestry and Wildlife Management Dept., said the water's discoloration often goes beyond state law limit during the summer and fall months. The law, he said, does not permit drinking water to exceed 30 color units. With beaver activity, the water in Hill Reservoir may read as high as 500-600 color units.

LOST & FOUND

(Staff Photo - Sue Goldbaum)

"You lost a what? Would you mind repeating that? Oh. Well, we haven't seen one of those in about three years. How about a pair of old gloves?"

CC Lost And Found

I Can't Find My...

By BUFFY SPENCER

An elevator ride from the concourse level of the Campus Center and a left turn will not lead you to the land of Oz, but rather to the Campus Center Lost and Found. Although it innocently resembles a simple coat-check room, behind the facade lies a wealth of common and exotic misplaced objects.

A closet inside is filled with crude wooden boxes — a box of lost keys, a box for lost glasses, a` combination box for lost wallets, lost pocketbooks, and lost checkbooks, and a box for lost miscellaneous articles. Lost ID's are stored in a recipe-type file on the desk. Lost clothes, mostly jackets and sweaters (no pants yet this year), are hung on circular racks in the background, reminding one of Old Wierd Harolds' or maybe the second hand section of Faces of Earth. On top of the racks are a few old hats, which look like they probably hold a lot of meaning and memories for their owners.

Wendy Brus is in charge of the desk this year. It is her third year working behind the counter. There are four other women working behind the counter. The people who work there are all really dedicated to getting lost articles back to their owners. Wendy can't understand why people don't put their names and phone numbers on their possessions. The desk has a phone this year, 545-0170, and if any article has any identification and a phone number can be found, then the person is contacted. If there is only an address, the person is contacted by mail.

The desk is open from 10-4 Monday through Friday. In addition to a Lost and Found it also serves as a coat check room. Books are held for students who have too many to carry around all day. They also take care of TOC cards for alumni or anyone who doesn't have an ID to affiliate them with the university. Pictures for staff and Campus Center employee IDs are taken here. Wendy says that a lot of their time is spent in explaining to students that TOC cards are no longer given out at the desk (they were for two weeks) and in referring the people upstairs.

Last year women from the desk went around each week to the main buildings on campus picking up collected lost and found. This year they are attempting to set up a system where campus mail will pick up lost and found, which has been collected by janitors, during the week and bring it over to the CC. At present, most items are turned in directly by other students or indirectly through the information desk upstairs.

One new policy has been installed this year. If a student turns in something he would like to keep for himself, his name is taken and if, after two months it is not reclaimed, he may keep it. All clothes are given to Belchertown at the end of the year.

According to Wendy, the biggest item in numbers last year were gloves and mittens. She estimates at least a thousand turned in. So far this year eyeglasses are leading (25 pairs now) with keys following a close second. Recovery value on ID's is best because ID's are not much use to anyone but the owner.

Wendy feels that most people are basically honest. She can tell when students own something or just want something. Most wallets are turned in with money, and once even some loose money was turned in. Nice rings usually make it back to the desk as people seem to respect their sentimental value.

Middle East "Teach-In" Thursday

A teach-in presenting the Middle East conflict from an Israeli viewpoint will be held Thursday in Campus Center 113 at 8 p.m., co-sponsored by Hillel and the Israeli Student Organization.

The teach in will feature four speakers, a question and answer session, and an open discussion. It will be in response to a similar teach-in from an Arab standpoint, which was held last Thursday night.

"Their forum touched upon several valid issues," said a Hillel spokesman, "but it didn't explore a number of important aspects. We want to present our side," he said.

"Being pro-Israel doesn't necessarily mean being anti-Arab," he added.

Speaking at Thursday night's session will be Dr. Marcelo Dascal, a visiting linguistics professor, ("The world political situation and the Mid-East"); Dr. Chaim Gunner, a chemistry professor, ("Options for a resolution of the Middle East conflict"); Moshe Kamionski, an Israeli student, ("Myths and facts in the Middle East") and Rabbi Aryeh Meir, director of Hillel, ("The state of Israel and the Jewish people").

Judicial Hearings

Thurmond Hits Cox

By MARK VOGLER
Special To The MDC

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Sen. Strom Thurmond, (R-S.C.), Monday repeatedly questioned the objectivity of Archibald Cox as former Watergate prosecutor during an open session of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

After asking Cox whether he felt he could do the job of an independent prosecutor objectively and without bias, Thurmond commented that one with the background of Cox might be inclined to have a "Democratic bias," whether subconscious or not.

The members of the committee assembled this morning to continue their inquiry into Cox's firing and to further study legislation to establish an office of a special prosecutor.

Cox told Thurmond that he made every effort to do the job to the best of his ability without permitting bias to interfere.

When asked whether he had been critical of some of Nixon's policies, and if he had singled out former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell as "insensitive" to the Justice Dept.'s activity, he agreed.

Citing Cox's status as solicitor to the Atty. Gen's office in the Kennedy Administration, Thurmond suggested "and weren't you more or less the dean of his brain trust?"

Cox agreed with Thurmond that the inference could be made.

The South Carolina senator inquired about Cox's status as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1972. Cox replied that he was "only a candidate" to be a delegate.

Thurmond's direction of questioning became more apparent when he asked the former Watergate prosecutor bluntly "Did you ever participate in anti-Nixon demonstrations at Harvard?" He next read an editoral appearing in the Harvard Crimson referring to Cox's criticisms of the Nixon Administration.

Cox denied that the Harvard issue was related to any anti-Nixon activity.

Following a brief verbal confrontation between Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass., and Thurmond, Kennedy began his round of questioning by commenting "I was glad to hear all the marvelous things you did for my brother; some of them slipped my mind."

Kennedy commended Cox for fulfilling his task as special prosecutor, in "an exemplified manner of fairness, thoroughness, and completeness."

"You've done an extraordinary job, not only in this capacity, but in other positions of responsibility," Kennedy said.

Questioned by Kennedy as to "what remains to be done" in the matter of Watergate, Cox said the great progress has been made--but that "the job is nowhere near done."

"The personal question of determining who--if anyone--should be indicted, and presenting the matter to the grand jury remain before us...there remain a number of investigations which are difficult and at critical stages."

Cox said, "Other evidence has just come to light. It is hard to say just where the leads may lead to."

He mentioned the ITT case and 18 instances of wiretapping by the Justice Dept. as areas where evidence invites further probing.

Kennedy pursued his questions by remarking that President Nixon has balked at disclosure of Presidential files on grounds of "confidentiality" and encroachment of the office of the president.

"When there is evidence giving reason to believe that there is wrongdoing, then the principle of executive privilege does not prevail." Cox said.

Kennedy Aide: Chances Slim For Nixon Impeachment

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

Richard Drayne, press secretary to Senator Edward Kennedy, last night, called the public reaction to Richard Nixon's firing of Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox, "the largest I've ever seen." Kennedy's office last week received 3500 telegrams calling for the President's impeachment, while they received 150 voicing support for Nixon.

"We may have crossed the Rubicon on this," he said. "I've never seen the constituents so mad."

Drayne's comments came during a panel discussion on the subject of impeachment sponsored by the departments of Political Science and Journalistic Studies, attended by approximately 100 persons. Martin Nolan, head of the Boston Globe's Washington Bureau, moderated the panel, which also included Charles Claffey of the Globe's Washington Bureau.

Claffey said that the chances are slim President Nixon will be impeached on the basis of present evidence against him.

Drayne agreed with Claffey that there is as yet "no sufficient case against him."

In response to a question asking Senator Kennedy's position on impeachment, Drayne said that the Senator believes "the impeachment process should go on in the House of Representatives, as it is now." He is not taking a final position because in the event of impeachment, the Senate acts as jury.

Both Drayne and Claffey agreed that any Special Prosecutor nominated by the President would face serious opposition in Congress. It was more likely, said Drayne, that the Congress would move to appoint their own Special Prosecutor. He called chances that Congress would name Cox to the position unlikely.

Drayne cited a bill proposed in the Senate in 1951 which is interesting in light of the present situation. The Senate never passed the bill, which called for the appointment of a special prosecutor to act independent of the executive branch. The bill was proposed by Senator Richard M. Nixon.

The panel discussion was one in a series of meetings sponsored by the Political Science Department and the Journalistic Studies Department in conjunction with a seminar being held.

Administration Asks Stall On Trade Moves...

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration asked Congress Monday to lay aside temporarily the President's recommendations to liberalize trade with the Soviet Union.

Peter Flanigan, Nixon's chief adviser on foreign economic policy, also urged that Congress drop any moves to tie a free emigration requirement to such liberalization.

Flanigan said the position was a temporary one which would change if a satisfactory peace settlement is reached in the Middle East.

The question came up at a Senate banking subcommittee hearing on an administration bill to increase the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank from $20 billion to $30 billion.

Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III, D-Ill., told Flanigan an effort may be made to attach to the measure the amendment of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., which would make extension of credits to Russia contingent upon that country's acceptance of a free emigration policy.

Flanigan explained that his answer would cover both the bill pending before the Senate panel and the foreign trade bill approved by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Nixon had asked that the trade bill give him power to extend most favored nation treatment to the Soviets.

Russia Reconsidering Detente?

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

A dispatch of Tass, the official Soviet news agency, hints that Moscow is taking a long and thoughtful new look at the turmoil in Washington, as if wondering whether to hedge Soviet bets on the fruits of detente.

At the same time, indications of new strains on the fragile Soviet-American "era of negotiation" come from the American side with news that the Nixon administration is urging Congress to shelve temporarily the President's recommendation to liberize trade with Moscow.

Obviously, the Middle East crisis has opened cracks in the structure of the U.S.-Soviet detente. In fact there is a hint in what Tass has done that Moscow is wondering about Nixon administration's staying power.

As is customary in cases where the Kremlin treads cautiously, the dispatch got into the subject obliquely. But Tass never puts out an officially unsanctioned message, and it can make its point simply by quoting others out of context. In this case the quotation was from an American commentator's opinion that the administration needed daily crisis to deflect domestic criticism.

In this, Tass suddenly deviated from the extraordinarily wary, objective treatment Moscow has given what it calls the "Uotergeitskoye Dyelo"-the Watergate Affair-and related U.S. explosions. Is Moscow removing those kid gloves?

Rents And Fees Seeks Food Info

By ROBERTA McCANN

The Student Senate Rents and Fees committee voted unamiously last night to seek information from colleges in the New England area on their food services operations. The committee intends to use the data to provide suggestions for improvement of the UMass food services. The information could be used next Spring when the food services budget for the 1974-75 year would be reviewed by the committee.

The Rents and Fees committee will be meeting with Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services, Thursday night to discuss a possible increase in meal ticket prices next semester. The meeting will be held at seven o'clock in the Board Room of Worcester Dining Commons.

The committee passed a motion to lower the semester telephone fee to $19, a reduction of one dollar. Also, Knowlton and Leach dormitories will be wired for phones during intercession. Four other dormitories will have telephones installed during the summer.

The telephone rates were too high in the past year creating $53,000 in excess money which has to be spent on telephone related items. The one dollar reduction in the telephone fee next semester will use $10,000 while approximately $28,000 will be spent on the telephone installations. The remaining $15,000 will be held in case of a possible telephone rate increase.

At its October 15 meeting, Dr. Joseph L. Balintfy described a food services computer program. The program could be used to determine the preferences for meals and the frequency they should be served. The committee took no action to implement the program.

Chuck Hampton, Financial Manager of the Dormitory System, also gave a summary of the debt service. He noted that the Sylvan dormitories are losing money as compared to Southwest.

New Parking Plan In Effect After All

By BOB SCHEIER

Nearly six weeks after almost 1,000 UMass employes staged a work stoppage protesting the new UMass parking plan, that parking plan is in full effect--apparently without serious protest from employes or others.

A UMass spokesman said the plan, under which most persons pay higher rates than under the previous plan, is now being fully enforced. Enforcement of the plan had been delayed from the beginning of the semester until October first, and then until later in the month in the wake of the protest.

The employes staged the work stoppage September 10 and 11, after a rally in front of the Whitmore administration building September 9 during which the building was closed for several hours. Some employes said they would stay out until the plan abolished and replaced by the previous plan.

The leadership of the union called the employes back to work under the threat of the university seeking a back to work injunction. Carol A. Drew, the president of Local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employes was not available for comment on the union's current stand.

William A. Lambert, the director of transportation and parking for the University, said the process of distributing stickers for the close to 12,000 parking stickers on campus should be completed "in several weeks."

According to a spokesman for the UMass news office, Mass. Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn refused to rule on the legality of the plan while a court case involving the plan was still pending. The administration and the employes had agreed to seek the ruling from the Attorney General as part of an agreement ending the work stoppage.

Grad Senate Ponders Pay

By JANINE DEVLIN

The Revenue Sharing Plan was the principal concern of the Graduate Student Senate which conducted its meeting on Monday night.

The plan establishes the criteria which degree-granting units must meet in order to obtain a grant from the Graduate Senate. This would essentially "formulize" the procedure which these same academic "units" currently undergo in order to obtain money from the senate.

If the plan is enacted, each organization will be required to present a formal constitution for approval by the senate; each organization will be required to present their minutes to the senate; and each organization will be required to conduct a public election whereby two officers were designated. According to Senate President John Muller, the plan is considered to be "the most significant thing" which is scheduled for consideration this year.

The senate discussed the issue for a full thirty minutes unencumbered by the restrictions of parliamentary procedure, and then adjourned with the intention of continuing the long debate at their next convention.

Israel Offers POW Swap

First Supplies Reach Egyptians

(AP Cablephoto)

Near City of Suez, Egyptian soldiers of the Third Division, which is surrounded by Israeli forces, look glum and dejected after they were captured by or surrendered to Israelis. At a temporary detainment camp near Suez they await transportation to POW camp. Israel holds more than 4500 POWs.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The first emergency supplies reached 20,000 Egyptian troops stranded in the Sinai Desert on Monday and Israel offered to swap 7,000 Arab POWs for 450 Israelis held by Syria and Egypt.

Egypt denied claims that Israel ever held Suez city at the southern end of the Suez Canal.

Israel's 75-year-old premier, Golda Meir, paid a flying visit Monday to Israeli troops inside Egypt west of the Suez Canal.

Mrs. Meir flew in an Israeli air force helicopter to Israeli positions on both sides of the canal, including visits to positions on both sides of the canal, including visits to positions on the west bank taken by Israel in the latest Mideast war.

Israeli and Egyptian officers met for a third time on Monday in Israeli-held Egypt on the Cairo-Port Suez road. They took up the prisoner of war issue but no details were released. They agreed to hold further meeting.

Maj. Gen. Shmuel Eyal said in Tel Aviv that Israel wanted to trade 7,000 Arab prisoners for 450 Israelis he said were held in Egypt and Syria. Eyal told newsmen Israel held 6,800 Egyptian POWs, about 300 Syrians and a few Iraqis and Moroccans. He said Egypt held about 350 Israelis and Syria has about 100.

In Washington, acting Egyptian foreign minister Ismail Fahmy, a close associate of President Anwar Sadat, met with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to discuss the Mideast crisis.

In Cairo, Egypt said its 3rd army on the east bank of the canal "is valiantly standing firm, its morale is high and supplies are reaching it."

It was the first official comment on the status of the 20,000 troops Israel says it has cut off on the east bank.

The official Middle East News Agency issued the report, after Deputy Premier Abdul Kader Hattem met with representatives of the U. N. emergency peacekeeping force.

It said: "The 3rd army is standing firm. The 3rd army......inflicted heavy losses until emergency forces arrived Monday morning in the southern sector."

It said Israeli claims that Suez city had fallen were false, adding: "Suez still is in Egyptian hands."

The agency said Suez city "resisted all enemy attempts to attack it after the Oct. 22 cease-fire......forcing the enemy to withdraw from its outskirts......"

The statement added that more than 2,000 U. N. troops have taken up positions on the west bank, including some who entered Suez city on Monday morning.

Egyptian amphibious vehicles picked up emergency supplies at a pier six miles north of Suez city under the eyes of U. N. officials and Israeli troops, Associated Press newsman Daniel Grebler reported.

Thirty loads floated across the 200-foot waterway, Israeli spokesman said, but another 60 truckloads from an Egyptian mercy convoy allowed through Israeli lines were halted on the western bank because of the darkness.

The Israeli military command said that its warplanes shot down two Egyptian helicopters and its antiaircraft guns knocked down a third over the southwest Sinai coast a few miles south of the entrapped Egyptian 3rd Army.

There was no immediate report from Egypt and the unexplained incident did not appear to threaten the six-day-old cease-fire that has brought relative quiet to both Middle East war fronts.

But Syrian President Hafez Assad said in Damascus that his country will resume fighting if Israel does not withdraw completely from all occupied Arab territories and fails to restore the rights of the Palestinian people.

"President Sadat of Egypt assured me he had received full guarantees from the Soviet Union that there would be complete Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories and the Soviet Union gave assurances its position on this matter was fully coordinated with our positions and the interests and legal aspirations of our people," he added in a speech.

Israeli leaders said they permitted the Egyptian relief column with U. N. drivers at the wheel to cross Israeli positions about 60 miles from Cairo because of a special appeal from the United States.

Soviet Claim U.S. Alert Watergate Diversion

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union suggested Monday that the U.S. military alert was an attempt by the Nixon administration to divert attention from domestic problems.

The official Soviet news agency Tass indicated the Kremlin line by quoting from a column by James Reston in the New York Times. It said it was Reston's opinion "the administration needs a 'crisis a day' to shield itself from criticism at home."

Speaking of the alert and the Watergate tapes in an Oct. 26 column, Reston wrote: "......But now if he hands over the tapes, people say he has doctored them, and even when he staggers from one move to another, he is met with the cynical remark: 'A crisis a day keeps impeachment away.'"

The Tass report was given added weight by being reprinted in Pravda, the Communist party newspaper.

The Soviet press often uses Western press reports, or parts of them, to put forth a Kremlin position. The Tass-Pravda presentation of the issue didn't carry the force of a direct Soviet allegation that Nixon was playing politics with the alert, but would not have been printed if it didn't mirror the Soviet position.

Neither Tass nor Pravda reported Reston's assertion that Nixon alerted U.S. forces because the administration "did have solid information that the U.S.S.R. had put seven airborne divisions on 'high alert,' that the big transports that had been airlifting war material from the Soviet Union to Egypt were suddenly withdrawn, that these transports were diverted to the Soviet Union close to the places where the seven Soviet airborne divisions were located."

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told a Washington news conference on the day of the alert that it was issued after "ambiguous" Soviet signs that the Kremlin might intervene to help out Egyptian forces trapped behind Israeli lines.

The Pentagon said Monday that the United States is sending an aircraft carrier and five destroyers from the Pacific fleet to the Indian Ocean in response to a Soviet buildup in the Mediterranean.

In a related development, the Nixon administration urged Congress to temporarily shelve a bill to libralize trade with the Soviets pending a satisfactory Middle East solution.

Kissinger Meets Envoy From Sadat

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met Monday night with a special representative of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat regarding the Middle East situation. Both Kissinger and Ismail Fahmy said the meeting "was very promising."

Fahmy, acting Egyptian foreign minister and a close associate of Sadat, arrived in Washington in the afternoon and originally was scheduled to see Kissinger late Tuesday morning. However, the Egyptian official sent word he wished to see Kissinger at the first opportunity.

Fahmy arrived at the State Department about 6 p.m. EST and spent an hour and one-half with Kissinger, Assistant Secretary of State for the Middle East Joseph Sisco and other U. S. officials.

It was presumed that Fahmy delivered a letter from Sadat to President Nixon outlining Egyptian thinking on both an immediate cease-fire and the beginning of peace talks afterward.

Earlier in the day, State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said he knew of nothing to indicate the Egyptian official had brought a specific proposal for solving the Middle East conflict.

U.S., Allies, Meet Soviets To Discuss European Troop Cuts

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Hurting from a sharp split over the Middle East, the United States and most of its European allies meet the Soviets today for their first talks on mutual troop cuts in central Europe.

Last week Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger threatened to review the U. S. commitment to West Germany, where some 200,000 U. S. troops are stationed. Apparently he was not inclined to wait for the result of the conference. That could take years.

Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Communist party leader, says the Soviet Union will be ready for "realistic steps" in 1975.

Western officials said that the task will be complex and delicate, and agreements are not likely to be reached quickly or easily.

Along with the United States, Britain, Canada, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg are present. Though troops on their territory will not be immediately affected, Norway, Greece, Italy, and Turkey are also taking part.

Echoes were still resounding of some of the harshest words exchanged across the Atlantic since World War II. The Europeans, heavily dependent on Middle East oil, declined to help the U. S. airlift of arms to Israel. U. S. officials, from President Nixon down, publicly voiced the U. S. resentment.

The European allies also had their complaints. Some objected strongly to the United States alerting its troops on their territory last week without asking them first.

One U. S. official said he saw "not a ripple" in Vienna from this clash.

Western diplomats, trying to damp down differences among the allies, also refused to give credence to a report that the United States and the Soviet Union had already agreed to troop cuts over the heads of their European allies. This one originated with one of the smaller European governments.

Differences between the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies do not come to the surface so often, but they do exist. In the Middle East, as in other areas, Romania has not been toeing the Soviet line at all.

Oleg N. Khlestov, a legal expert from the Soviet Foreign Ministry, arrived in Vienna Tuesday with a 20-man delegation and a statement hoping for a "constructive approach" to the talks by other countries.

Egyptian Representative Meets With Kissinger

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A special representative of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat arrived here Monday for talks with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and possibly President Nixon.

Ismail Fahmy, acting Egyptian foreign minister and a close associate of Sadat, was greeted at the airport by Asst. Secretary of State Joseph Sisco, a leading U. S. expert on the Mideast.

Fahmy declined to speak to reporters. However, he is reported to have brought a letter from Sadat to Nixon dealing with the opening of Arab-Israeli negotiations.

State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said he knew of no specific proposals being carried by Fahmy. However, the spokesman added, "It is fair to say his visit represents the beginning of a discussion looking toward the finding of a means to begin negotiations" on resolving the Middle East conflict."

Egypt initiated the visit and Kissinger agreed to meet with Fahmy during a working lunch Tuesday at the State Department. American officials were indefinite on a Fahmy-Nixon meeting, but Egyptian sources indicated such a discussion is probable.

American sources indicate Fahmy was sent by Sadat for at least two reasons: To learn directly U.S. thinking on establishing Arab-Israeli peace negotiations and to further test the sincerity of the Nixon-Kissinger offers of even-handed American good offices.

Cox Says New Prosecutor Must Have Power To Get Evidence

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Ousted Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox testified Monday that a new special prosecutor by law should be able to bring court action to obtain evidence from the White House.

Cox told the Senate Judiciary Committee that frustrations and delays he encountered in trying to get evidence from the White House make it imperative a new prosecutor have such legislated power.

He also repeated statements that he now has concluded Congress should pass legislation providing for appointment of a new prosecutor by the federal District Court here.

Cox, on leave as a Harvard Law School professor, said there is some doubt about the constitutionality of such legislation but he has decided after further study that the doubt is "not a very serious one and I'd be prepared to run the risk."

President Nixon has announced that a successor to Cox will be appointed later this week by acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork, but 53 senators have introduced a bill providing for a new prosecutor appointed by U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica. Similar legislation has been suggested in the House by more than 100 members.

Cox testified at a Judiciary Committee inquiry into his dismissal by Bork, on Nixon's order, after he refused to accept a directive not to pursue in court his efforts to obtain tapes, notes and memoranda of presidential conversations.

He said acceptance of the directive would have established a "very dangerous precedent" and would have been seen by many as a cover-up. He said it would have led to later instructions interferring with his independence and the conduct of investigation.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., asked if a prosecutor could fully perform his duties without access to White House documents.

"I don't see how," Cox replied. "That's where the information is."

Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., asked Cox about rumors that he had been fired because his investigative trail was leading to the White House.

"I have no evidence to support any of the rumors of this kind," Cox said. But he added he had seen evidence that some of the President's staff are troubled by the breadth of the guidelines for the prosecutor's office.

In an opening, off the cuff statement that lasted nearly an hour and a half, Cox said that much of the evidence he sought is in White House offices and that, on the whole, his efforts to get it met with "frustration and delay."

"Certainly they furnished some things to us," he said, but he listed a number of requests for material that he said have gone unanswered.

He said this material included logs of meetings and telephone conversations of the so-called White House plumbers unit and other aides and files dealing with milk producers who made large campaign contributions and with electronic surveillance of columnist Joseph Kraft.

Cox also related a report concerning a member of the White House staff, whom he identified only as X, and a second person he called Y. He said that X reported being told by Y that after X's appearance before the Senate Watergate committee all of X's political files should be deposited in Nixon's files.

Cox testified there were other instances of files being transferred to presidential papers, including those of Egil Krogh Jr., former head of the plumbers unit and now under indictment.

"For the most part, it seemed to me our efforts were unsuccessful," Cox said in testifying about requests for White House documents.

He emphasized that many requests for evidence did not necessarily mean any wrongdoing, that evidence might show innocence as well as guilt.

In other Watergate-related developments Monday:

-Deputy special prosektor Henry S. Ruth told a House judiciary subcommittee that the Watergate prosecution staff is intact and functioning.

"There have been no resignations" nor firings, Ruth said of Cox's former staff members.

Ruth later told a newsman that he continues to function as he did under Cox, except that he now reports to Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Petersen, who now is in charge of the Watergate probe.

The subcommittee recommended extending the term of the Wwergate grand jury for six months beyond its Dec. 4 expiration date.

The History Of Black Film

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

The New Africa House Art Gallery is sponsoring an exhibition of the History of Black Film. The collection, that belongs to Mr. Charles Griffin, a film archivist, includes posters, photos and leaflets of Black films dating back to 1917. Ms. Aishah Rahman said that this collection is so valuable that "they are looking for some grant to preserve it and to exhibit it throughout USA to those interested in Black Culture".

Mr. Griffin, who had worked in theater with some of the artists in the collection, (he was stage manager for Paul Robeson) expressed his great desire "To do what I can to preserve the collection." Last time that he participated in a play was in "Wine in the Wilderness" in 1972 in New York City.

Most of the assistants to the exhibition considered it as a great event in public education about Black Culture. "This collection is one of the finest displays of Black Cinematographic History in the country," said Mr. John Bracey, Assoc. Prof. in the UMass Dept. of Afro-American Studies Dept.

"I just think it is a big move to the University as well as the state of Mass. to have an historical exhibition of Black Film in Western Mass.," said Mr. Mungu Abudu, a graduate student in the Theater Dept.

And to those that had not been exposed to the Black American Culture they will find the art exhibition quietly interesting as said by Mr. Ricardo Barrientos, a Central American student.

The New Africa House Art Gallery is open from 1 to 3 p.m. on weekdays.

Charges Marines With Subversion

Uganda Orders Troops Out

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)- Uganda's military government Monday night ordered U.S. Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy in Kampala out of the country within 48 hours on grounds they were engaged in subversive activities.

U.S. Embassy spokesmen declined to commend on the order broadcast on the official Uganda radio, and presented by the Foreign Ministry to U.S. Charge d'Affaires Robert Keeley.

Other diplomatic sources speculated that the expulsion could lead to the virtual closing of the U.S. Embassy or possibly a complete break in relations.

In Washington, State Department officials said they received confirmation from the embassy that the six Marine guards were ordered to leave Uganda.

"We had no choice but to comply," one official said.

He said that the question of whether to keep open the embassy in the Ugandan capital is "presently under study."

The radio listed the names of six Marines assigned to security duties at the embassy. It said Gen. Idi Amin, gave them until 6 p.m.-10 a.m. EST-Wednesday to leave Uganda.

Details of allegations against the Marines were not spelled out. The broadcast said the guards were not needed at the embassy since the Uganda government assumes responsibility for the security of everyone in Uganda.

Amin, a Moslem who expelled Israeli diplomats from his country, stepped up pressure against Americans in Uganda as a result of American support of Israel in the Middle East war.

Army Destroys W.W. II Gas Bombs

DENVER, Colo. (AP) - The Army began full-scale destruction of leftover World War II nerve gas bombs Monday at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal northeast of here, a spokesman said.

Secretary of the Army Howard Callaway approved the destruction of 4.2 million pounds of GB nerve gas contained in bomb clusters rather than moving the agents to a less populated area.

Arthur Whitney, public information officer at the arsenal, said the first of the 21,083 M34 bombs was detoxified starting at 7:45 a.m.

Whitney said the aresenal's crew of 32 workers would detoxify about five of the bombs daily. The program is estimated to cost $33 million and take about 33 months to complete.

The detoxification of the nerve gas bombs was scheduled to begin 29 months ago, but was delayed to allow time for development of equipment, said Col. Sampson H. Bass, manager of the program.

The bombs are stored outdoors at the aresenal adjacent to busy Stapleton International Airport.

Must The Beavers Die?

"In fact," he noted, "it was nip and tuck whether water would run this week because of the high color units."

Scientists admit that water with a high color count may be perfectly safe to drink. "It's purely an aesthetic thing," said Professor MacConnell. "Discolored water is not pleasing."

Chemistry graduate student Robert Pojasek says his studies have indicated that the beaver are responsible for manganese in the water. "When in drinking water," he said, "the chemical causes laundry and toilet stains."

He said that the manganese enters the system and causes the decomposion of "forest litter" whch in turn yields fulvric acid, the brownish material in the water.

The town of Amherst had a study done on the situation. The report said a treatment plant could be built to treat the water.

This treatment plant would have cost $30,000. Stanley Ziomek, Amherst Supt. of Public Works, said the town could not afford the plant.

Mrs. Jennifer French, mother of the boy who brought the killings to the public's attention, said she is against the killings. "The whole family is in the process of making a formal protest to the town," she said.

Mrs. French would like to see the beaver trapped alive and transported to an area where they would not effect a drinking water system. She argues that natural selection would determine the nature balance.

Professors Peter Derrico and Carolyn Peck have made the issue part of their Legal Studies 201 class. Professor Derrico said he would like to see the various factions meet to discuss the problem.

Derrico said the officials are reluctantly killing the beaver in the name of the people, but the people don't know what's being done.

All indications, however, are that the killings will not stop and that the people will not complain.

Holiday Decorations Use Fuel

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

'Twas two months before Christmas
And all through the nation, Holiday planners preached conservation.
Santa's bright lights, his greetings for Yule,
Were cut back and dimmed by the shortage of fuel.

An Associated Press survey showed that with a little less than two months to go before Dec. 25, many civic and business groups have canceled or cut back on plans for Christmas decorations in an effort to conserve power.

Even Bethlehem, Pa., known as "The Christmas City," is in an uproar. Mayor H.G. Payrow announced that Christmas decorations would be cut back by 80 per cent, saving 52 million watts of electricity.

Businessmen and residents objected, however, saying the cutback would hurt the tourist business and officials are still trying to work out a compromise.

The problem stems from a general fuel shortage, complicated by cutbacks in Arab oil production because of the Middle East war.

Officials in Austin, Tex., where shortages of natural gas have affected electricity production, said Christmas lights will be turned on as usual on Nov. 21 and will be burned until Nov. 25, but then will be shut off until Dec. 14 when they'll be relit.

In addition, holiday lighting displays on bridges across the Colorado River will be eliminated this year and businesses have been ordered to restrict their holiday spectaculars.

A business association in Pittsburgh announced that because of the energy crunch, the lighting on 60 downtown buildings, a tradition since 1960, will be canceled this year.

The Building Owners and Managers Association said that although the city has enough power, the cancellation was intended "as a meaningful gesture to the rest of the nation whose energy situation is far more critical."

Building supervisors in Minneapolis decided to discontinue a program of outlining structures in the downtown area in lights during the holiday season and the Ohio Public Utilities Commission urged businesses to cancel Christmas displays this year.

White House To Consider Citing Examples Of Distorted Reporting

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House plans to consider whether to pinpoint examples of what President Nixon has described as "outrageous, vicious, distorted reporting" by television commentators.

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said Monday he would explore the possibility of documenting President Nixon's charges that television commentators have compiled the worst reporting record he had seen "in 27 years of public life."

Warren made his comment after being asked at a news briefing if the White House would provide what one reporter called a "bill of particulars."

There was discussion at the briefing about Nixon's statement that one network said he had a $1 million trust fund handled by friend C. G. Bebe Rebozo "knowing it was untrue."

Warren said the President was not referring to the original report on the ABC television network that investigators were looking into the possible existence of such a fund.

Rather, he said, Nixon had in mind a subsequent televised interview on another network in which the questioner, he said, referred to the investment portfolio as if it were an acknowledged fact.

There was no such portfolio, Warren said, and the second network had been told as much by the White House.

Some of Warren's questioners suggested that certain anti-Nixon statements reported by the TV networks actually had originated with Radio Hanoi or public figures in the United States and had been clearly identified as the source at the time they were broadcast on U.S. news programs.

Warren was asked if the news media should not report public statements Nixon finds displeasing.

The White House spokesman said that reporting was important but that what Nixon asked for was "perspective".

Court Hits Boston School Committee For Delays Of Racial Imbalance

BOSTON (AP) — The Supreme Judicial Court Monday reprimanded the Boston School Committee for delays since the Massachusetts racial imbalance law went into effect eight years ago and told the committee they must racially balance the city's schools by September 1974.

The court, in a 16-page unanimous decision, rejected all of the committee's legal attacks on the state plan. The ruling marks the third time the school committee has lost its court battles against the law and plans proposed by the state board.

The state board of education has the power to withhold millions of dollars in state aid to Boston and to notify the state School Building Assistance Commission to withhold funds for any new school construction in Boston. The court used that fact as a hint, or threat, for the city school officials to act promptly to implement the racial balance plan.

"The committee must understand that the time for testing the meaning of the statute has long since passed and that the time for prompt action to implement it is at hand," wrote Justice Paul C. Reardon.

The Supreme Court turned down all of the committee's objections to the state plan, as prepared by Harvard Law School Prof. Louis Jafee last May in a series of hearings.

The court rejected claims by the committee that the state board acted arbitrarily in rejecting the November 1972 plans proposed by the city.

The court indicated that adjustments can be made in the state plan as is necessary to provide additional safety measures or vocational classes.

The court was adament in its call for racially balanced schools starting in the next school year.

"The committee, the court said, has the opportunity for "substantial participation" under the state plan.

Prime Min. Is Univ. Prof.

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — The prime minister of Barbados says he's learning as much or more than the students he teaches in his political science course at Florida International University.

Errol Barrow, 53, has been here since Sept. 26. He's spending three months at the school as a visiting professor of political science. His course is called "Conflict and Cooperation in the Caribbean."

"I was getting out of touch with the academic world, with political thought, the thinking of young people," Barrow said. "I'm finding it most rewarding. I'm sure I am learning as much or more than the students."

Barrow hasn't returned to Bridgetown, capital of the Caribbean island of Barbados, since he arrived in Florida. He keeps in touch through the daily mail which brings newspapers, parliamentary documents and personal observations. The cabinet is minding the government.

"But I'm not really participating in decisions. They don't have to consult with me to act, but they do keep me informed as a matter of courtesy," he said.

Barrow said he thinks "there's something wrong with a prime minister and a country if the prime minister couldn't leave for three months.

"I feel sorry for those leaders who can't leave for even a few days because they don't know if they'll have a government to go back to," he added.

Overseas Employment Opportunities Increase

While the employment market on the United States scene is extremely tight, the foreign market is wide open. Approximately 75,000 American citizens will be leaving the United States this year for employment in Africa, Asia, Australia, Europe and So. and Central America.

A new, dynamic organization, WORLD STUDENT OPPORTUNITIES, has a way to make it easy for students to obtain unlimited career opportunities in numerous areas. According to Mr. Gordon Schultz, President of W.S.O. the best way to secure employment contacts is through a professionally prepared resume that is acceptable to large companies with worldwide operations. Mr. Schultz states that his company prepares such a resume and provides his clients with approximately forty addressed envelopes to different companies, depending upon the profession and country preferred by his clients. W.S.O. staff continually reviews overseas employment opportunities and individualizes their service in order to secure acceptable employment for every applicant. W.S.O. provides the opportunity for its candidates to contact numerous companies enabling the employment client to do his own negotiating. This service fulfills a long time need and enables many qualified people to gain employment away from the tight American market. For further information contact: WORLDWIDE STUDENT OPPORTUNITIES, P.O. School Bus Service Could Be Altered For Safety

BOSTON (AP) — Cities and towns may be required to provide bus service for school children who live less than a mile from school but must cross hazardous roads to get there.

Legislation to drop the minimum mileage requirement for bus service in such cases was given a hearing Monday by the legislative committee on education.

Rep. Fred F. Cain, D-Wilmington, who filed the bill on behalf of his town, said some kindergarten children must cross railroad tracks and walk near major highways to reach their schools on foot.

Another bill considered by the committee would let regional school districts sell bonds to finance the purchase of school buses and other major pieces of equipment.

Donald J. Buss, superintendent of schools for the Hampshire Regional School District, said may cities and towns could operate their own bus service more cheaply than they could contract for such services.

He explained that currently school districts would have to finance the purchase of equipment in one year's budget, which makes the cost of a fleet of buses prohibitive.

Vermont Supreme Court Enters Highway-Environment Dispute

By PATTI LEE
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP)-The Vermont Supreme Court has been asked to break an impasse between the state Environmental Board and Highway Board over the applicability of environmental laws to a road project dubbed the "Brookfield massacre."

The controversy centered on the tiny Washington County town of Brookfield, where rough gravel lanes led to an unusual floating bridge built on barrels across Sunset Brook.

The state Historical Society protested in August a Highway Department project to pave the roads leading to Brookfield and onto the historic one-lane bridge. It was dubbed a massacre by Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, who said the project would spoil the rural beauty which was the hallmark of the town.

Construction of the two-mile stretch of highway is now complete, but the controversy has continued because of its impact on other planned highway projects.

The Environmental Board issued a declaratory judgment that an environmental permit was necessary, even though the construction was already underway. The Highway Board contended that Brookfield, and 43 other projects had been approved by the legislature before the permit law, Act 250, was enacted, and were exempt under a "grandfather clause."

In an attempt to settle the dispute, Asst. Atty. Gen. Benjamin Scotch prepared a compromise which would have applied Act 250 of 14 of the 44 projects and would have allowed the Environmental scaping decisions involving the Brookfield project.

The Highway Board agreed to the plan, but it was rejected by the Environmental Board. In an exchange of letters underscoring the impasse last week, Environmental Board Chairman Schuyler Jackson wrote the Highway Board saying he felt the compromise did not address the basic issues.

Highway Board Chairman Frank Balch replied that his board was willing to continue seeking a solution, but he felt any action had to be consistent with the advice of the attorney general.

Atty. Gen. Kimberly Cheney stepped into the issue Monday, with the announcement he had appealed the Environmental Board ruling to the Vermont Supreme Court.

Death And Influence

By PEDRO HERNANDEZ

"I was born in Argentina, I fought in Cuba, and I began to be a revolutionary in Guatemala." This is what CHE GUEVARA called his autobiographical synthesis. Born into a privileged family of Spanish and Irish descent in 1928, ERNESTO GUEVARA DE LA SERNA was to react strongly enough from his background. As Ricardo Rojo, a friend of the family, testifies, certain things were taken for granted in the Guevara household--"a passion for justice, the rejection of fascism, religious indifferences, an interest in literature and love poetry, and a prejudice against money and the ways of making it." This home conditioning naturally led to a feeling of rebelliousness, which was to make CHE into a revolutionary, once he could understand the social problems of Latin America.--CHE was born adult. He was a youth as a boy and a man as a youth.

His personal experience of three failes revolutions--The Bolivian Revolution, later to be overthrown by an army Putsch; The Guatemalan Revolution destroyed by an Imperialist intervention and the Mexican Revolution, rotted by internal sloth and decay. This experience changed a young doctor, whose nature was radical into a Revolutionary by intent.

He had moved from passive indignation to active resistance, from observing to planning. His sympathy for suffering humanity had become a strategy for finding the remedy for that suffering. To become a total revolutionary, all CHE needed was another Revolution.

In his reminiscence of the Cuban Revolutionary War, CHE describes his experiences with a great deal of irony, modesty, and self-criticism.- He found the early mistakes of the guerrillas "both ridiculous and tragic", wounded himself at Alegria de Pio, and his reaction was touching and unsoldierly. Not unreasonably, even though the wound did not turn out to be serious. His first concern was not to save his life-the primary duty of a guerrilla--but to die honorably.

Both in theory and practice, CHE GUEVARA despised money. His personal life had always been a reproach to greed, in his farewell letter to FIDEL CASTRO, there is a quiet pride in his assertion, "I have left no material possession to my wife and children, and I do not regret it. I am happy that it is this way." To most men, this admission would be humiliating· to CHE, it was a source of pride. How many other politicians could say the same on leaving office?

CHE had rediscovered his old commitment to the Poor Nations of the World, if he had ever lost it. He began to consider that the real contradiction was not between Capitalism and Communism, but between developed and underdeveloped countries. If the groups of underdeveloped countries, lured by the siren of song of the vested interest of the developed powers which exploit their backwarness, contend futilely among themselves, for the crumbs from the tables of the World's mighty and break the ranks of numerically superior forces. The World will remain as it is.....

His single and final goal was the liberation of Latin America which is more than a continent· it is rather our homeland, temporarily turn into twenty republics. In Death, CHE has more influence than when he was alive. Dead men tell no tales, but they can make a legend. CHE was not only one of the more heroic men of his age; he was also one of the more intelligent, more original, more ascetic, more radical, more human, and most beautiful men of his age.

SARTRE was correct when called CHE "The most complete Man of his age". History will probably treat ERNESTO "CHE" GUEVARA as the Garibaldy of his age, the most admired and loved revolutionary of his time. The impact of his ideas on Socialism and guerrilla warfare may be temporary· But this influence, particularly in LATIN AMERICA, must be lasting. For there has been no man with so great an ideal of unity for that divided and unlucky Continent since BOLIVAR. The young will find new heroes. but no more inspiring. And the consequences of his death are only beginning to be seen in the social upheavals and changes around us. When the General in VIVA ZAPATA! looks down at the riddled corpse of the dead guerrilla leader, he says, "Sometimes a dead man can be a terrible enemy." For the rich nations of the EARTH and for the corrupt governments that rule many of poor nations, the Dead CHE is a terrible and a Beautiful Enemy.

HASTA LA VICTORIA SIEMPRE...

A while back, before the avalanche of those events in the world and on campus that so preoccupy our consciousness, back a few weeks ago when the Bluewall seemed like a good place to go and when you even thought Sweet Pie was funny, a cosmic event was revealed to me. There I was, going thru the emotions of a typical day, when I found myself, without warning, transported ominously to another world. I had passed that barrier where time and sound coalesce and sight functions in a state of oblivious shock. I could almost hear Rod Serling's raspy voice, beckoning me to beware, to be on guard for those intangibles that I could never hope to understand but were plotting my debilitation and destruction. I promptly freaked. "AAAHHH!!!!!" I shrieked, unable to take it anymore. Someone had finally spiked the milk, I thought. When suddenly, I found myself, seemingly in one piece, although I had a faint humming sensation in my ears and the taste of prairie-oyster stew in my mouth, in a meeting of the infamous Central Area Academic Affairs Committee.

"Welcome to the Central Area Academic Affairs Committee Meeting," squeaked an ominous voice, from an undeterminable locus. "My name is Jonathan Slick, snicker! snicker! snerp! snerp!" he chortled. "Tonight we will take up Colloquia proposals."

"Right On!!!" screamed 50 more voices, none of whom I could see, but whom responded with a thunderous applause.

"Now as you know," Slick went on, "we will only pass those colloquia that satisfy our criteria. And those criteria, for you uninformed, are as follows:

1) The colloquium must be worthless.

2) The colloquium must be devoid of thought, content, or structure.

3) The colloquium must conform to our notion of academic merit, which, of course, incorporates the above two points.

4) The instructor must donate $500 to the Central Area Academic Committee's Annual Christmas Party which will be held in Rio de Janeiro this year.

5) The instructors must try to "like" us, not for what we are, or what we can do for him/her/it, but for the hot-shits that we'd like to be. You see it's simple. If you like us, then you are truly crazy. If you are truly crazy, then, of course, you belong to the Central Area Academic Committee. But then of course, you couldn't teach. Ah, but well! So it goes! And now, it is my privilege to announce those Colloquia which we will pass this year. They are as follows:

C-1: Wife Beating--taught by the illustrious Wing Wang Woo, a master in the art of Kung Fu. If your wife has been bugging you lately, giving you a lot of that sexist crap, then you need this colloq. Learn how to turn her into a quivering pulp. Mr. Wang will show you how his people treat their women. One credit.

C-2: Cunnilingus: A Fresh Approach--Tired of that same old Masters and Johnson's technique? Well here's a new one that will excite even the most frigid of you BIG MAMAS. This course will be taught by all of Central's Peerless Sex Staff. Includes $20 lab fee, and all you can eat! One credit.

C-3: Advanced Paper Macheing--This course is recommended only to those who completed the Beginner's and Intermediate Course. This semester's project will be a life sized model of an "ARAB IN FLIGHT". Required is a 500 word paper on What the Hey! Paper Mache. This course is taught by the Central Area Paper Mache Department faculty, which is renown the world over. Bring your own silly putty. One credit.

C-4: Creative Calisthenics--including such topics as the fifty-four different aspects of Pelvic Thrust, and the Ins and Outs of the deep knee bend, not to mention pushups and situps in different undreamed of styles. Taught by Miss Trixie DeLight and staff. An excellent way to trim down. One credit.

C-5: Bodily Functions: An Intellectual Perspective--taught by Jonathan Slick. Ever wonder what it's like being an asshole? Come and find out. Get to know all of you, for only thus can one perceive Nirvana. Bedwetters, bleeders and compulsive pharters, all welcome. Bring your own Lysol. One credit.

C-6: Posthumous Nosebleeding--Are you a Necrophiliac? Do you like dead cold slimy objects? Do you get your kicks throwing dead pigeons at cars? If so, this is just the course for you. The course includes a lifetime supply of gangrene bacteria. Get your whacks off, poke a cadaver today. Food Services has 1st option to your work. One credit.

C-7: Greasepole Climbing: The Laminated Approach--taught by the famed Joe College himself--a greaseball from way back. He'll show you how to tackle that pole, shinny up and score. No more being knocked, stepped on and losing. Nor more burnt ass and injured pride. Bring your own boxing gloves and cleats. One credit.

Free Puerto Rican Nationalists March

By ZOE BEST

Frente Unido (United Front) to Defend Puerto Rican Prisoners a coalition of groups sponsoring a march in Washington D.C. today, is seeking the release of the longest held political prisoners in the hemisphere: Lolita Lebron, Oscar Collazo, Andres Figueroa Codero, Rafael Cancel Miranda and Irving Flores. Today is the 23rd anniversary of an armed uprising for Puerto Rican Independence in the town of Jayuya. Harvard law graduate, magnum cum laude, Pedro Albizu Campos (who did not receive recognition at graduation because of his Blackness), founder of the Nationalist Party led this uprising. Campos had already tried the electoral route and had discovered the majority of ballots in favor of him, floating in the Caribbean.

In 1950, Puerto Rico was made a commonwealth which Governor Luis Munos Marin had defined as a "political mutation" but which the Nationalists called a colony. This same year, Nationalists were arrested, imprisoned without trial and their homes were burned. Campos then led a force of 300 women and men, overtook thepolice garrison and raised the Nationalist Party flag (which Marin adopted as the Puerto Rican flag later). This force then met 5000 soldiers and air force bombing of nationalist held buildings. At this time to call attention to this situation, Oscar Collazo and Greselio Torresola flew to Washington D.C. to attempt to assassinate Truman. Torresola was shot while crouching behind a hedge and Collazo was wounded. Collazo was sentenced to death but a two year campaign resulted in a commuted sentence and a new sentence of life in prison. Carneo Torresola, widow of Greselio, now released from prison, and Rosa Collazo had not participated in the D.C. action but were sentenced under the "acts of violence" section of the Smith Act to sentences of 4 and 6 years. Since they had been garment factory workers in New York City they were assigned garment work in Alderson Prison, the federal women's prison in West Virginia. Blanca Canales Torresola, relative of Greselio, had hoisted the flag above the post office in Jayuya, and was imprisoned in Alderson. Before that she had never been in the U.S. In 1956, she was transferred to Escuela Industrial de Mujeres at Vega Alta to serve a life sentence.

During the McCarthy purges within the U.S. and the Dulles Brothers' coups outside the U.S. (Iran and Guatemala), this country was in no mood to consider a polite request for Puerto Rican Independence. Thus to coincide with the Inter-American Conference in Caracas and the Congressional hearing on a resolution concerning Mexican migrant workers, another action was staged March 1, 1954. Coordinated again by Pedro Albizu Campos, Lolita Lebron led four of her Nationalist brothes into the House of Representatives. All opened fire resulting in the injury of five congressmen. Lolita Lebron was sentenced to a 50 year sentence eligible for parole in 16 years. Lolita Lebron has served nineteen years. Rafael Cancel Miranda, Andres Figueroa Cordero, and Irving Flores Rodriguez were sentenced to 75 year sentences with parole eligibility set after 25 years.

Lolita Lebron had written a poem before the action: "I love you, lady Puerto Rico/like the noble blood that has sanctified/ the Fatherland of Bentances and of De Diego/ and the wise master, Albizu Campos." (Betances a lawyer and a poet had sought independence from Spain and foresaw the need to sever political and economic relationships from the U.S. if independence was to be achieved. While on trial she suffered the loss of her son in a car accident. Lolita Lebron is still in prison in West Virginia. She has spent long periods in solitary confinement because of her refusal to give up speaking Spanish. In the fifties, she would go to the toilet to pray as the head office refused to allow her to attend the Catholic chapel. Lolita Lebron still insists today that Puerto Rico must have independence to provide a culture and future that is not exploitive of her people. During her trail she addressed the court, "I love you and I love the world as I love God...I ask God to forgive you and I forgive you, too."

Under a Life photo in 1954 is the caption, "A Harvard man gave a molotov cocktail party." Campos after the attack on Congress was besieged in his home and for two hours a gun battle occurred and finally after a teargas attack, Campos was captured unconscious. He died in a U.S. prison in 1965.

Federico Lora, of Frente Unido, asks the U.S. citizens to seek the release of these prisoners. "We recognize that Puerto Ricans by themselves cannot force the Nixon Administration to release the five nationalists. We especially call upon the antiwar movement and those who support us in our struggle for the independence of Puerto Rico to organize North Americans to join us in Washington on October 30."

Letters To The Editor

Arab Racist Attitudes

To The Editor:

In addressing ourselves to John Fisher's The Roots of All Evil" speech we first would like to express our solidarity with Mr. Fisher on a number of points:

First we applaud his assertion that "the Jewish people of Israel without doubt, should have all the right to live peacefully in the Middle East, in their own state and in secure borders, (and that the) Arab Palestinians must be granted their rights in their own land." Similarly, like Fisher, we maintain "that a sober, logical analysis based on undisputable facts might be quite helpful and valuable" in illuminating the controversy underlying the Middle East conflict.

If our analysis is to be factually based, what indeed is the Palestinian Arabs' attitude towards the Jewish people's right for national sovereignty? Article 20 of the 1968 Palestine National Covenant declares that: "Judaism in its character as a religion of revelation is not a nationality with an independent existence. Likewise, the Jews are not one people with an independent personality. They are rather citizens of the states to which they belong."

It seems to us that this view is in direct opposition to that of the leading theoretician of the Third World Movement, Franz Fanon, who has explicitly recognized Jewish nationhood. This discrepency in attitude between the Arab nationalists and Fanon seems to be based in nothing less than racism and anti-Semitism. For as Satre tells us, the anti-Semite is one who defines a Jew and then seeks to impose such a definition on the Jewish people. As a people and a nation we uncategorically reserve for ourselves alone the right to determine what we are. Certainly the stalwarts of National Liberation would not deny us this right.

Isn't it ironic then that Israel is continually categorized by "advanced political thinkers" and the "anti-imperialist camp," of which Fisher speaks, as the racists and aggressors in the Middle East. Isn't it ironic when it is precisely this Arab intransigence of the past 25 years, this Arab denial of the Jews' right of national self-determination which has resulted in four wars and the displacement of hundreds of thousands of Arabs and Jews.

Much has been said of the plight of the Palestinian refugees; how much less has the world grieved over the one million Jews stripped of their civil rights and property, and ultimately forced to flee Moslem countries as a direct result of Arab racism and its consequent aggression against Israel.

What then is the "root of all evil" in the Middle East? The Arabs and Mr. Fisher would have us believe that it is Israeli "imperialism" manifested in her occupation of Arab lands. They assure that a return to pre-June '67 borders will bring peace. Why were the June 4th borders not peace borders on June 4th but will become peace borders now? Why were not the U.N. partition plan borders of 1947 peace borders then but will become so now? The answer is that if there is a "root of all evil" in the Middle East it is Arab racist attitudes against the Jewish nation and her right to national self-determination.

Position Paper, Please

To The Editor:

A great deal of concern has been expressed recently by graduate and undergraduate students alike that the "faculty union" proposed by the Massachusetts Society of Professors seeks extraordinary, exclusive, and unseemly guarantees at the expense of the students of this University.

I believe that much of this concern is the result of a failure by the MSP leadership to communicate clearly its intentions to the various governance units on campus.

The Graduate Student Senate therefore requests that the Executive Committee of the MSP issue a position paper on the status of graduate students generally and graduate instructors in particular in the collective bargaining procedures which are sought by the MSP.

Trying To Stall?

To The Editor:

An entire week has passed since my last inquiry as to the MTA's position on the input of students into the collective bargaining process. In this time neither I nor my committee has heard anything from the MTA concerning this issue. This would lead one to believe one of three things:

1) The MTA -MSP - AAUP can't get it together within a week
2) The MTA - MSP - AAUP does not have a policy.
3) The MTA - MSP - AAUP is trying to stall.

I, personally, opt for the third. What do you think?

Thanks For The Party

To The Editor:

The Belchertown Volunteers would like to publicly thank the fourth floor of Grayson for contributing to the Halloween Party held for the residents of the Belchertown State School this past Saturday. The party included bobbing for apples, singing and dancing, and plenty of Halloween treats. It was enjoyed by both young and old alike. Thanks again.

Forget About The Past

To The Editor:

This is an open letter to all the Chicks around here who have boyfriends back home.

This is not in the true spirit of the University. This is a place to do new things and to meet new people. It is a place to forget about the past and forge into the future. When I came here I left my high school behind. Why haven't they?

Report Every Assault

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to the women on campus who fear for their safety at night and this means all of us. We all know that a rapist, pervert, mugger, etc. is not going to be especially picky about who he attacks. Yet most of us say to ourselves -- "Oh, it will never happen to me...." I though the same thing until the other night when I was assaulted. It turned out that this same guy got three other women that same evening. Yet I was the only one who felt enough concern to file a complaint and have the attacker brought to trial. If I hadn't, he would be lurking in the shadows tonight, waiting for you.

It makes my blood boil to hear women do nothing but bitch about the dangers that we encounter on campus. Until we all get together and do something about it, we will continue to be harassed by these degenerates of society. I can't over-emphasize the importance of reporting each and every assault immediately, and if possible, taking further action. The police can't help us any more than they are now unless they have all the facts. No matter how slight the situation, we must let them know what's happening.

As long as you sit on your asses and do nothing abut the predicament we're in, we're going to be bothered by this menace, both physically and mentally.

Hitchhiker Cooperation

To The Editor:

The subject of this letter is hitchhiking or, to be more precise, hitchhiking south from Amherst on Route 116.

We now have hourly free buses among the five colleges during the weekdays, and several runs in the evenings and on weekends. The system is by no means perfect, I know--sometimes the buses run late, sometimes they are overcrowded. Mr. Charles DeBruler of Smith College, who manages the system, is doing what he can to improve it. In any event, it would not appear to be essential that anyone hitchhike in the Valley.

Having said this, I must recognize that people will hitchhike. I also recognize that I will pick up hitchhikers when I have time and when it appears safe to do so. I enjoy talking with them. The Town of Amherst also recognizes that some hitchhiking is probably going to take place, and the town officials have done their best to make provision for it. As an experiment, two "courtesy pick-up" stations have been established on Route 116 a few hundred yards south of the junction of Route 9 and Route 116. One station is for students going to Hampshire and the other for students going to Mount Holyoke College and beyond. I notice, however, that there remain clutches of students at the traffic light where stopping is difficult and unsafe.

This is merely to suggest that the Town of Amherst is trying in good faith to do something to help us out, and I think we ought to cooperate. Acoordingly, henceforth I shall pick up hitchhikers going south only at the two stations I mentioned. I urge other drivers in the Valley to do likewise.

Simply Untrue

To The Editor:

I'd like to respond to some of the statements in last Friday's articles and letter relating to the Middle East.

The text of the "Third World Resolution" states that "every Asian or African state . . . voted against the development of Israel." This is simply untrue. The only Asian or African state outside of the Moslem bloc to do so was India. As a matter of fact, Liberia (in Western Africa) voted in favor of Israel, as did many Latin American countries and the entire Soviet bloc. Not a single African nation, except for Egypt, was involved in a vote against the creation of the Jewish State. In addition, Ethiopia, China, Honduras, and numerous other Latin American countries, including Mexico, remained neutral on the issue.

Skipping over the hebephrenic and turning again to the blatant, the "Third World Resolution" claims that Israel is a "supporter of the South African Regime". The facts are to the contrary. The government of Israel has at many international forums, including the U.N., condemned the apartheld system, and on Oct. 29, 1967 Joel Barromi, Israel's delegate at the United Nations, called for concerted international action against South Africa. More recently, the government of Israel has made financial assistance available to the Organization of African Unity's "Freedom Fund", which works against the colonial governments of South Africa and Rhodesia.

For those such as John Fisher who dismiss as "Zionist propaganda" the fact that Israel's survival is at stake I quote from an article that appeared in Al-Ahram, the semi-official Egyptian newspaper, on Feb. 25, 1971 (the same month in which Egypt announced its willingness to "enter into a peace agreement" with Israel) by its editor Hassanein Heikal:

"At this stage there are only two well-defined goals on the Arab scene:

1.) Erasing the traces of the 1967 aggression by Israel's withdrawal from all the areas occupied by it in that year.

2.) Erasing the aggression of 1948 by Israel's total and absolute annihilation. This is not really a well-defined goal, but an oversimplified one, and the mistake of some of us is starting off with the last step before beginning the first."

Unfortunately, this sort of article is not typical of the media within most of the Arab countries. It is, however, in sharp variance with the reasonable facade these same countries present to the outside world.

The "Third World Resolution" makes the point that their "struggle" is against "Zionism", and not against Jews. Gretel Munroe makes this distinction as well, implying that Zionist principles have very little to do with Judaism. Such a distinction is without factual or historical foundation. The hope for return to the Jewish homeland has been part of Jewish life and religion ever since the start of the Diaspora.

When the State of Israel is denied the very right of existence, as propounded in the "Third World Resolution", it is not merely "Zionism" that is under attack, but Judaism and the Jewish people.

Many of the Oct. 26th statements pertaining to the Middle East were, at best, inaccuracies, at worst, unconscionable lies. All student groups, including the students who adopted this resolution, have the responsibility of researching their allegations before presenting them to the Uniersity community as facts.

Both Sides Now

To The Editor:

I want to submit to the readers of the Collegian, and particularly to my brothers and sisters of the Third World and of the Arab World, some comments on the "resolution" adopted at the "Third World Students in Solidarity with Arab Brothers and Sisters" rally (see Collegian, October 26). I know I have little chance of being heard by those who adopted the "resolution", for I am an Israeli and Israelis, according to the authors of the "resolution", either do not exist, or do not have the right to exist, or else are simply not considered members of the human family. Nevertheless, I will try once more, because I believe dialogue is the higher form of human interaction, and because I don't consider myself entitled to exclude any group of human beings not even my Arab brothers and sisters, from the human family. Dialogue requires attentive hearing and true understanding (instead of misunderstanding, misrepresentation, misquotation, and straightforward distortion) of the other side's position. This is what prompts my efforts to understand the Arab views on the conflict. I expect the Arabs — and their supporters — to do a similar effort in order to understand an Israeli's point of view. This may be the only way to find a realistic solution to the conflict.

The "resolution" asserts that "The struggle of the Arab people of Palestine is in harmony with the sacred values of all human men and women, in harmony with the principles of international law and order, in harmony with the principles of self defense, and above all in complete harmony with revolutionary movements all over the world". If one recalls that the expressed aims of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (which the "resolution" supports) are the destruction of the state of Israel, the denial to its citizens of the right to self-defense and self-determination, and the violation of all standards of revolutionary ethics (Fidel Castro once said: "A true revolutionary never threatens his enemy with extermination"), one can easily see that there is no harmony but only the most obvious disharmony between what the "resolution" supports and the principles it invokes.

The validity of principles of justice and morality, as well as of essential human rights, stems from their universality, (i.e., from their applicability to every human being). The rights to a national sovereign existence, to self-determination, and to self-defense, which the "resolution" assigns to the Palestinians, should also be recotnized as inalienable rights of the people of Israel. These rights are valid only because they apply to every people in the world. They apply to the Third World peoples, to the "Second" World peoples, and to the "First" World peoples. They are valid for the Arab people, and for the Palestinians. But they must also be acknowledged for the Jewish people. No exclusion from the list of those entitled to national existence, self-determination and security can be justified on any grounds. Therefore, at the same time that I demand these rights for the people of Israel, I also demand them for the Palestinians. I am deeply convinced that the rights of the two peoples can be reconciled, through the existence of two independent national states, side by side, on the area of the British Mandate in Palestine. This is the only possible just solution for the conflict. The "resolution", however, adopts a one-sided and sectarian view of "justice" and of "principles", and deliberately ignores the legitimate rights and aspirations of the people of Israel. It contains, thus, an exact replica of the very same evils it purports to condemn: sectarianism, injustice, denial of human and political rights to small nations, and racism. Let me give one more example.

The "resolution" asserts that "we support the current war in the Middle East as a liberation struggle because it is a liberation struggle". This implies that "we" must support every (national) liberation struggle. Therefore, "we" must support also the Jewish national liberation struggle. And Zionism is the expression of the national aspirations of the Jewish people. To say — as the "resolution" does — that "the struggle has always been directed against Zionism and not against Jews" is exactly the same as to say (as the French actually said) that "the struggle is against the FLN, but not against the Algerian people". What grounds are there for excluding one particular national liberation movement — Zionism — from the list of those entitled to "our" support? Apparently, only the parallel claim that one particular people — the Jewish people — has not the right to determine its own form of political existence as a sovereign nation. And this is clearly a discriminatory claim against the Jews. Self-determination can only be a valid principle if it is universally applied, and its applications must include the Jewish people too. In the same way as Portugal's struggle against Frelimo is a struggle against the legitimate national aspirations of the people of Mocambique, a struggle against Zionism is a struggle against the legitimate national aspirations of the Jewish people. Maybe the analogy is obscured by the fact that the national aspirations of the Jewish people have been fulfilled, in the form of the State of Israel, whereas those of the people of Mocambique still must be fulfilled. But should the fact that an ideal be reached command a change in our essential commitments? Should we abandon our commitment to the rights of the Algerian people to existence, self-determination and security because of the success of the FLN in its struggle, and the establishment of an independent Algerian state?

Until there is no understanding and acknowledgement of the basic rights and legitimate aspirations of both sides in the conflict, there can be no hope for a durable peace. The "Third World progressive community" would be much more in harmony with the principles invoked in her "resolution", if she tried to foster a reciprocal and sincere understanding between the sides, instead of taking a prejudicial one-sided anti-Israeli position.

Peaceful Settlement

To The Editor:

The newly-formed Arab Israeli Peace Forum has been meeting in Amherst regularly. Discussions concerning the various aspects of the Middle East conflict have produced some prospects of reaching an agreement on some issues.

The Arab Israeli Peace Forum wishes to issue the following statement:

"Now that the ceasefire has taken effect, we urge all parties involved in the conflict to do their best to abide by the rules of the Geneva Convention concerning the treatment of Prisoners of War and to start working immediately for a peaceful settlement."

Unpublished Report
By Edward R. Weidlein
A recent but as-yet unpublished survey of college drug policies reveals that about 20 per cent of the nation's colleges feel free to divulge information about drug use by individual students to local police and the Federal Bureau of Investigation without the consent of the students involved.
Taken as a whole, the survey contains some of the most comprehensive information ever gathered on college drug policies.
The National Commission on Marihuana and Drug Abuse, chaired by former Pennsylvania Governor Raymond P. Shafer, sponsored the survey, which was completed before the commission made its final report a month ago. Parts of the study's findings appear in that document.
However, the bulk of the college survey, conducted by Gerald L. Robinson, executive director of personnel relations at the University of Pennsylvania, and Leon R. Young, director

Students Serenade Saint Cecilia

The Smith College Choir and the M.I.T. Glee Club will present a concert in honor of Saint Cecilia, the patron saint of music, on Sunday, at 8:00 p.m. in the Helen Hills Hills Chapel at Smith College.

The program will include George Frederic Handel's "Ode for Saint Cecilia's Day" (poem by John Dryden), and Benjamin Britten's "Hymn to Saint Cecilia" (poem by W. H. Auden). Both pieces come from a long tradition of music composed in the saint's honor. Bryden's poem was written for her feast day, November 22, in 1687, and Handel's "Ode" for the same celebration, November 22, in 1739. Benjamin Britten was born on Saint Cecilia's Day, and Auden's poem dedicated to him on his thirtieth birthday: November 22, 1943.

Britten's "Hymn to Saint Cecilia" is for unaccompanied mixed chorus with soprano soloists Sheila Heffernon, Dorrie Porter, and Katheryn Keene, all class of '76. Handel's "Ode for Saint Cecilia's Day", the major work on the program, is for mixed chorus, soprano and tenor soloists, and orchestra. Gretchen D'Armand, a teacher of voice at Smith College, will be the soprano, and Peter Payson the tenor soloists. Instrumental soloists, playing music written in praise of their own instruments, will be Joan Osborn '74, trumpet; Betsy Blachly, timpani; Melissa Mann '77, flute; Jeffrey Steele, guitar (in place of lute); and John Sessions of the Smith College Music Department, cello. William McCorkle will play the organ, Saint Cecilia's instrument.

The joint choirs and orchestra will be conducted by Amy Kaiser. The concert will be open to the public free of charge.

Marine Officer Programs

College men who join the Marine Corps Platoon Leaders Class don't do it for the money. They do it for the opportunity to develop their leadership abilities before they graduate. All the training is during the early or late summer only. Upon graduation you are commissioned a Lieutenant of Marines.

But the money can come in — and it can come in handy: Besides pay during training you are eligible to receive $100 a month every month of the school year — up to a maximum of $2700 during a college career.

If flying interests you, look into the Marines' Civilian Pilot Training Program. If you qualify, the Marines pay the entire cost of civilian flight instruction. It's worth about $1000. When you're done you have a civilian pilot's license.

The PLC program also welcomes men who plan to continue on to law school. The PLC program lets you continue your schooling uninterrupted until your law training is complete.

Your college education could lead to a rewarding association with the Marine Corps. The PLC is a great way to start. For complete information see the Marine officer selection team that visits the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday and Thursday the 31st of October 1973 and the 1st of November 1973 to discuss officer programs that are available. The team visiting the Campus will be located in the Memorial Hall from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Information on Marine officer programs can be obtained by contacting the Marine Officer Selection Office, 135 High Street, Hartford, Connecticut 06101. Phone 244-2168 or 244-2169.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Are you good at guessing zodiacal signs of friends, celebrities, persons you encounter at work? Here is a little test to measure your skill. Give yourself 20 points for each correct answer. Name the signs for each of the following persons: John Wayne (1) Carol Burnett (2), Jack Benny (3), Katharine Hepburn (4) and Mae West (5). Answers: If you score is 100, you have potential for becoming an expert--or you are psychic! If you come up with 80, you are very good. If you score 60, you are better than average. If you correctly guess two for a score of 40, you are on the right track. If your point total is 20 or nothing, you require more practice at sizing up people in relation to their astrological signs. Here are the correct signs of the celebrities named for this test: Gemini (1), Taurus (2), Aquarius (3), Scorpio (4) and Leo (5).

Find Out About It: World Campus Afloat Program

Paul Dansereau, 11 Brittainy Manor Dr., Apt. 11, Amherst, a student has been appointed a member of the Volunteer Enrollment Team for Chapman College's World Campus Afloat program. A student during the Spring '73 study voyage of the world's only shipboard college program, Mr. Dansereau is available to tell of his experiences and to show a 27-minute, color film, "Semester at Sea" to student, community, civic and social groups.

Also available is literature which describes itineraries, courses, the shipboard campus, in-port projects, student activities, admission requirements, costs and financial aids available for upcoming voyages.

Since its inception in 1965, World Campus Afloat has taken approximately 8000 college students on its unique undergraduate liberal arts voyages of discovery where in-port field research projects are an integral part of shipboard classes. Students transfer credits earned with WCA back to their home institutions.

World Campus Afloat began its ninth academic year September 3, 1973, when it embarked from Los Angeles for ports in Asia, Indonesia, Australia and the South Pacific, returning to Los Angeles Dec. 21.

World Campus Afloat now also offers summer programs for credit or audit for teachers in service, businessmen and other adults interested in combining the pleasures of shipboard travel with seminars and discussions about the cultures to be visited.

Undergraduates and graduates also may earn three units of credit during a one-month Interterm voyage during January. These courses may be audited by persons not regularly enrolled in college work.

Free Poetry Reading Tonight In Union

Poets James Tate and William B. Hunt, and fiction writer, Wayne Ude, will read from their work tonight at 8 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

James Tate, who teaches Creative Writing here, has published numerous books of poetry, including The Lost Pilot, for which he won the 1966 Yale Series of Younger Poets prize. Abscences, his most recent book, was published last year by Atlantic-Little Brown. After receiving his M.F.A. in Creative Writing from the University of Iowa, Tate taught at Berkeley and at Emerson College. He has given poetry readings throughout the United States and Western Europe.

William B. Hunt, who received his B.A. from Macalister College in St. Paul Minnesota, is a resident of Amherst. He has published in countless literary magazines, including Prairie Schooner and The Minnesota Review. Audit, recently devoted half its issue to his poems.

Wayne Ude is a graduate student in Creative Writing here. He grew up in Montana where he spent several years working on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation. He received his B.A. from the University of Montana.

Everyone is invited and encouraged to attend. The reading is free. Refreshments will be served.

DVP Lecture Series Wants New Students

The Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) is now open for applications from freshman and transfer students. Application forms are available at the Student Affairs and DVP offices, second floor of the Student Union. Deadline for filing applications is Nov. 12.

DVP is the major student lecture organization on campus and each year brings to the university community a schedule of well-known speakers. The program is aimed at providing a diverse, balanced series covering many interests and major viewpoints. So far this semester, DVP has presented journalist Tom Wolfe, lesbian feminist Jill Johnston, Black historian Robert Hill, and escape artist Norman Bigelow.

Each spring the committee is the principal sponsor of the Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Lecture Series.

DVP is entirely student run and student funded. The committee seeks members with diverse backgrounds, interests and academic fields.

Membership on the committee involves deciding which speakers will be invited to speak here, working with lecture bureaus and working with other members of the committee and the University in setting up the speaker's schedule for his engagement at UMass.

Skis, Sleds, Bikes, Trikes...

Do you need to buy or sell skis or skates? Then keep in mind the Sports Equipment Exchange on Nov. 9th and 10th at the Amherst College Cage (near Orr Rink). Friday night Nov. 9, 6-8 p.m., is the time to bring over your outgrown or no longer needed skis, skates, sleds, bikes, trikes, and any related items. Come back the next morning, Saturday Nov. 10, from 10 to 1 and find what you need at a reasonable price.

The event is a benefit for the Amherst ABC program since a small percentage of every transaction goes to the organization. It is being sponsored by the Amherst College Women and is open to all interested people. There will also be a bake sale. For details call 256-6103 or 253-2148.

Teaching English as a foreign language; working in tuberculosis control programs, smallpox, and malaria eradication projects; acting as agricultural extension agents; developing alternative schools; counseling in drug crisis centers and many more. Demand for these assignments is, of course, great. It's extremely important for you to apply before December. To underscore this, VISTA & Peace Corps representatives will be here during this semester only; on Nov. 5-9 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., go to the Placement Office and sign up for an interview.

Women Harriers Finish As New England Runners-up

By MDC STAFF

UMass women scored 32 spoints to the Cambridge Sports Union's low 26 to take second place at the New England Championships held in Falmouth, Mass. this weekend.

Charlotte Lettis won the race over a poorly marked, makeshift course in 14:12 to lead the Sugarloaf-UMass team. Jenny Taylor of the Cambridge Sports Union placed second in 14:38 while UMass senior Phyllis Olrich in 14:42 took third. Olrich attends UMass but runs for her home town club, the Cambridge Sports Union.

The course was supposed to be 3 miles long but was incorrectly measured and poorly marked so that the runners often didn't know where to turn. The race was originally planned for a golf course but at the last minute the golfers decided to play golf and told the women to go elsewhere. Elsewhere happened to be a small flat field that necessitated the construction of many intricate loops, cross-overs and figure eights that proved too complicated for tired runners to evaluate and pass judgement upon during the heat of an all-out championship race.

After the race Charlotte Lettis said, "I couldn't get any momentum going because I was worried that I'd get it going in the wrong direction."

Sue Gillis, running her first cross-country race, showed great promise running to a dead heat with her more experienced teammate Lynda Laakso. They covered the very short 3 miles in 16:52.

Freshman Judy Kline ran well and perhaps a bit too well over the first half of the course then paid for her exuberance and faded back to 9th place.

Linda Radwanski, also running her first cross-country race, still managed to place 10th, in spite of 100 yards wasted by a wrong turn.

Karen Fiske rounded out the Sugarloaf-UMass scoring with 12th place.

The next race for this rapidly improving group will be the Regional championships which will be held at UMass on November 10. In that race the team expects to be bolstered by the addition of several runners who couldn't make the trip to Falmouth, gymnast Marion Kulick, who won the 440 intermediate hurdles in the New England track championships last year and Merry Cushing who just recently ran 26 miles in 3 hours and 16 minutes to qualify for the Boston Marathon.

Region No. 1 includes women runners from New England, New York and New Jersey.

Inspired Ruggers Drop Pair

By WADIE BAHOU

The UMass Rugby team, facing their toughest competition of the season, dropped two heartbreakers this past Saturday to Charles River, at Medford, 7-4 and 9-6. The Charles River Rugby Club, a team composed of alumni from Tufts University and other colleges in the Boston area, gave UMass a display of what good rugby is, and the ruggers inspired, responded inspiringly, as they lost both games by a total of only six points, or two penalty kicks.

UMass Capt. Jim Tkacik scored the only try in the first game, as the UMass offense was completely stifled by a very tough Charles River defense. The UMass defense should also be given a pat on the back for stopping a very well-run Charles River offense, which was limited to only one try and a winning penalty kick in 80 minutes of action.

The "B" team came out like sailors going after a red light district, as they tried to avenge the loss suffered by the "A" team. Keeping the play in Charles River territory for the entire first half, the "B" team looked like it would not be denied, as it scored very early in the game and had the ball very close to paydirt on numerous other occasions, continually mounting pressure on a very rugged defense. But the experience of the Charles River team kept UMass from scoring again and UMass left the field at half-time with a very misleading 6-0 advantage. In the second half, Charles River showed that they could not be kept down for long as they forced a weary UMass team into many mistakes.

UMass hosts its rivals from UConn this Saturday at the fields behind Boyden. Game time is 1 p.m.

Women's Volleyball Team Has Disappointing Evening

By LINDA MACKLER

The UMass women's volleyball team hosted Bridgewater State and Southern Connecticut in an unsuccessful round robin series. They lost the first two games of a three game match against both opposing teams, with scores of 15-2, 15-8 against Southern Connecticut and 15-9, 15-4 against Bridgewater State. Although the junior varsity fell to Southern Connecticut 15-5 and 15-8, they defeated Bridgewater State 15-5 and 16-4 for one bright moment in the evening.

The starting varsity line-up - Karen Fruzzetti, Jan Perkins, Diane Boucher, Jane McNamara, Nancy Caruso, and Donna Pivaro, played a very disappointing game, in contrast to last week's exceptional defensive performance at Springfield College. They did not play with the same vigor and hustle that they did in their last match. Their sets were failing, their spikes were hitting the nets, and their serves lacked power and speed. They did not anticipate plays and their ambitious spirit was missing. At Springfield College they had beautiful control, made good blocks, and were consistent in their spikes and sets. Last night they seemed to forget what they knew.

Both the team and the coach seemed baffled by the match. Coach Jensen stated, "They could not set. They could not get back in an offensive manner. I just don't know what happened."

The next match will be held on Tuesday, November 6th in the WOPE gym at 4:30 p.m.

Finley To Appeal Fines

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — The other shoe finally fell Monday for Charles O. Finley in the form of $7,000 in fines, but the head-strong, maverick owner of the Oakland Athletics vowed he wouldn't take the punishment lying down.

"I will appeal two of the fines," the Chicago insurance executive said from his home in LaPorte, Ind. "It is grossly unfair."

Thus baseball is headed for another confrontation between the head man of Oakland's World Series champions and the game's commissioner, Bowie Kuhn.

Finley said he is appealing to baseball's six-man Executive Council, consisting of the two league presidents, Joe Cronin of the American League and Charles Feeney of the National League, plus four club executives — Walter O'Malley, Los Angeles Dodgers; John McHale, Montreal Expos; Calvin Griffith, Minnesota Twins, and Bob Reynolds, California Angels.

Kuhn said Finley must appeal to the commissioner, that the commissioner is the final authority. The Executive Council would be unlikely to go against the commissioner.

Kuhn announced the fines in a formal one sentence statement from his office, verifying what had been anticipated for days and what became common knowledge a day in advance through leaks.

The commissioner's statement merely said the fines were for conduct during the World Series and it remained for Finley to disclose the specifics of his set-down.

He was fined $5,000 for his conduct in the Mike Andrews case, Finley said, $1,000 for an "embarrassing" announcement made over the loud speaker at the Oakland Coliseum during the series, and another $1,000 for arbitrarily turning on the stadium lights when his team was at bat. The latter is the prerogative of series umpires.

The UMass Daily Collegian kept its undefeated season in tact by defeating the UConn Daily Campus 18-12 in Storrs, Conn. Saturday.

Quarterback Steve Crowe threw touchdown passes to wide receivers Mike Kneeland and Fred Weiss in the first half. The game winning touchdown came in the third quarter when Fred Weiss found Bill Ballou open in the end-zone on a halfback option play.

The game ended with a few anxious moments for the Collegian. With the score 18-12, the UConn Daily Campus took possession on their 20-yard line and quickly passed its way to the Collegian 10-yard line with 20 seconds remaining.

The UConn quarterback called an option and chose to run the ball when his receivers were tightly covered. Steve Crowe, playing in his defensive position as cornerback, stopped the play on the 3-yard line as the gun ended the game.

The Daily Collegian's record is now 4-0-1, having tied the Student Senate 20-20 last week.

Oarsmen Dominate Scrimmage

By MARK DLUGOSZ

The crew team braved cold weather and a brisk wind to win a tri-scrimmage last Sunday. The meet was held on the Connecticut River against originally scheduled Dartmouth, and Boston University, who replaced Yale due to a late postponement. The race was a mile and three quarters in length, and was run in two heats.

In the first heat UMass raced two eight boats against the BU boat. One UMass eight won by a couple lengths, while the other UMass eight finished one-third of a length behind the BU boat.

In the second heat the first place UMass eight rowed along with a third UMass eight boat against the Dartmouth boat. The UMass eight boat that won the first heat also won the second heat. The Dartmouth boat was second and the other UMass boat third.

It was a very loose scrimmage with no pressure on any of the teams. The UMass eight boats were assigned at random. This scrimmage may aid Coach Vespoli in the long evolutionary process of putting together his best boats for the spring.

UMass winds up its fall crew season with the annual Hadley-Henley Meet on Sunday. This is an intersquad meet involving competition among the men's crew, woman's crew, and the freshmen squad. A number of varied races will be held. The meet will take place on the Connecticut River.

Espo On Top

Phil Esposito is off to his best start ever, with 13 goals and nine assists in the Bruins' first nine games for a league-leading 22 points.

Esposito's teammate, Ken Hodge, was second with 17 points while another Bruin, Bobby Orr, was tied for third with Rick Martin of Buffalo with 16 points each. Orr was the assist leader with 12.

Booters Won't Quit Despite UConn Loss

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Where do they go from here?

That is the question that is foremost in the minds of UMass soccer fans following this weekend's disappointment in Storrs, when the booters suffered a 2-0 blanking at the hands of the UConn Huskies.

The quest for the Yankee Conference championship has come to an early halt. UConn, with their win on Saturday, has clinched at least a tie for the conference crown, and only Maine has a chance deadlock the Huskies. The Minutemen can finish no higher than third.

Al Rufe has promised that "we're not gonna quit. We've got a lot of pride and we're gonna win our next three." But what could you expect from a dejected coach who had just seen his highest hopes shattered.

Now that the conference outcome has been decided, some of the incentive that drove the UMass booters is obviously gone. Pride is important, as it can propel athletes to great heights, but something else must be present to sustain desire.

One motivating factor left for the Minutemen is the hope, slim as it may be, of being invited to participate in the NCAA regional tournament. The booters could conceivably wind up with a record of 7-3-1, a mark that would be difficualt to overlook at invitation time.

But that would assume that the Minutemen would win their remaining three contests, which will not be, by any means, an easy task.

Remaining to be played are games against Vermont, New Hampshire, and Springfield.

The toughest of these challenges will undoubtedly be at Springfield, one week from Wednesday, Springfield College has the distinction of being fourth in the last New England poll and has to their credit a tie with top-rated Brown.

It's a long and sometimes dismal road that the booters have travelled, but, in some ways, the toughest part of the journey is yet to come.

KICKING IT AROUND-Although extremely pleased with his team's performance to date, UConn coach Joe Morrone is not about to rest on his laurels. Having defeated top-ranked Brown and YanCon challenger UMass in the same week, Morrone was not yet ready to declare his team's right to their spot as the dominant team in New England soccer.

"We have a lot of tough games left. I'm just concerned with playing one game at a time and building a good program here at Connecticut. If you can believe it, I'm not concerned about ratings. At this point, I'm not even worried about the tournament."

Well, coach, you're right about one thing. That is a pretty tough line to swallow.

Harriers Savor Victory

Thomas was the eleventh individual winner for UMass, and Coach Ken O'Brien garnered his fifth Cross-Country title in his eight year UMass coaching career. It was also the fourteenth conference title for O'Brien, a three-sport coach overall. Finally, by winning on Saturday, the Cross-Country team became the first UMass varsity team to capture four straight YanCon championships outright.

But these records didn't impress O'Brien as much as the manner in which his distancemen won.

"I felt we'd win it, but only by twelve points." said O'Brien. "UConn sat out their no. 2 runner and came within seven points of us in an earlier dual meet, and until Saturday we had been unable to put together a strong, consistent team effort. Saturday all seven runners ran well, and we won going away."

The race was a marked reversal from last year's championships, when a tired squad of Minutemen just squeaked by URI. That team went on to finish second in the New Englands, and tenth in the IC4A's, but "Obie" thinks that this year's team is stronger.

"We're younger, stronger, and our frontrunners are more experienced. Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, and Tom Maguire can run with the best in New England and our freshmen showed exceptional poise in their first big meet," he said. O'Brien credited Maguire with the best race of his career and singled out freshman John McGrail for his eighth-place finish.

"The comparisons between the careers of McGrail and Randy Thomas are frightening," said O'Brien. "Both ran only a year of high school Cross-Country, both were relatively unknown and like Thomas, McGrail has improved steadily. McGrail's showing gives incentive to a lot of our strong freshmen runners who weren't spectacular in high school."

With his fourth straight conference championship behind him, O'Brien is looking forward to next week's New England championships, and maybe, just maybe, another four conference championships.

Taking The Bad With The Good

By BILL BALLOU

A crushing loss at Connecticut has ended what was left of hopes that 1973 would be another banner year for the UMass football program.

What happened?

Simply, the talent has not played up to its abilities.

"Yes, with the talent we have we should have a better record," says head coach Dick MacPherson, and "Yes, I guess I have done a lot of soul-searching about it" he adds.

After all, isn't it the coaches' job to get the best out of their athletes? And, by that token, can't the blame for this season's mediocre record be laid upon MacPherson?

He accepts the responsibility.

He refuses to make excuses. What about all your injuries, coach? "Injuries are no excuse. They happen to all teams and have to be considered as part of the game."

They are no excuse, but key injuries to Gary Mika, Jerry Mondalto, Kevin Moran and John Healy have been murder.

And of course, the running game has existed only in the dreams of UMass fans.

"The offensive line has not come along like we expected," offers MacPherson. "We have especially had problems at the guards." Certainly the injury to Mika, which has forced him to play while hurt, has been important. He had become an excellent blocker. Bill Wolfe is on his way to becoming an excellent blocker also, but while he learns, something is lost.

"We've also been hurt by the running game 'psyche'. That's why I hate NCAA statistics," he says. NCAA stats include yards lost trying to pass in with yards gained rushing to produce a net yards total. Connecticut gained 158 yards rushing in 55 carries Saturday, for an average of 2.8 yards per carry. Their quarterback was dropped just once. UMass, not counting the 89 yards lost on nine quarterbacking sackings, gained 91 yards in 31 carries, an average of 2.8. Yet the offense looks at the figures and believes they can't run the football at all.

It may all have started, though, in the Holy Cross game. "Our confidence is shaken," says MacPherson, "Holy Cross got those 30 points against us and it happened there." The Minutemen have not played 60 minutes of good football this season, though they almost did at Rutgers.

"I look for little things," he says, "the little things that set the tone of the game." The little things, by and large this season, have not been that pleasant to watch. Little things like Eric Torkelson carrying Mike McNiff an extra yard for a key first down. Like UMass runners fumbling without really getting stuck by anyone on the defensive team. Like receivers breaking patterns and causing interceptions.

There has been some good.

"I don't think there is anyone," MacPherson says, "except for the coaches and a few of the players, who realize that Peil Pennington is a better quarterback this year than he was last."

"And Timmy Berra has performed tremendously, and above our expectations."

And MacPherson adds that David Yushinsky and Kevin Moran, the two best offensive linemen, have played better football than they were expected to.

Yet the name of the game is winning, and UMass has not won the games they should have. On paper they were a better team than either Rhode Island or Connecticut. On the field — uh-uh.

It's been suggested that UMass played itself out against non-conference opponents. MacPherson doesn't buy it. "We love playing those teams. We point for them and I think it serves to sharpen us. It should make us a better team against conference opponents."

You beat Rutgers, you lose to Rhode Island.

And you search your soul.

This Isn't The Way To Do It

By STEVE CROWE, BILL BALLOU, GERRY BROOKS, AND EARLE BARROLL

(Note: This commentary was not written with the intent to denounce Yogi Berra or the idea that he should be honored at Alumni Stadium this Saturday. Rather, we feel that the salute is being done in the wrong manner.)

"We want to salute Yogi Berra," said UMass athletic director Frank McInerney in a news release to the Springfield Sunday Republican, "not only for his role as manager of the National League pennant-winning Mets, but also for his loyalty as a father and football fan of UMass over the past four years while his son Tim has been representing our school on the gridiron."

All of this is fine, but...Why are we, the University of Massachusetts, saluting Yogi Berra, the manager of the National League pennant-winning New York Mets? And is Yogi Berra any more loyal as a father and UMass football fan than any other senior's father?

When Charlie Peters played center on the basketball team for the past four years, his father attended just about every UMass game: home and away. Why wasn't he saluted?

We do not intend this commentary to be a criticism of Yogi Berra. Yogi Berra is a fine gentleman, a loyal UMass football supporter, and as the Athletic Department brass say, "sort of a folk hero of the American culture." He proved what a fantastic person he was when he reluctantly agreed to go through with this salute. In fact, he was quite concerned about taking the limelight away from his son and the rest of the UMass team.

But the University made a mistake when they planned this special ceremony. Sure, it's going to bring more people into Alumni Stadium for the game, and it will give UMass national recognition, but it could have been done in a more ethical manner.

"Yogi Berra will be representing all the fathers of the UMass seniors out there," insisted Vic Fusia, athletic department promotional director, in an interview.

True, but this fact is only secondary to the fact that Yogi Berra is a celebrity.

A salute to the UMass seniors and the UMass parents is a good idea. Honoring Yogi Berra as a parent along with all the others is an equally fine idea. But the fact that he manages the New York Mets doesn't matter. We are sure that he has done a lot for the UMass program, but we are equally sure that the UMass program has done alot for his son Tim, and thus for Yogi.

But the point we are making here is that the contributions of other parents need not be cheapened by singling out one, no matter whom he is.

Yogi Berra, the American Institution, has made his contribution as Yogi Berra the father. And neither he nor his son have ever asked to be recognized in any other way. Nor should they be.

We totally agree with the idea of thanking Yogi Berra for what he has done. We also agree with the idea of thanking Mr. and Mrs. Pennington, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Hansen, Mr. and Mrs. Kiernan, and so on.

It seems more appropriate to us, that this Saturday should have been reserved for the seniors. Yogi Berra could have helped honor them. And Yogi could have more properly helped honor than be honored.

We are not against saluting Yogi Berra: we are against saluting him alone. There will be many people worth saluting at this Saturday's final home football game of the season: parents and seniors. And Yogi Berra is one of the parents.

Harriers Savor Record Win

By WALT POWERS

When Ron Wayne led an experienced UMass Cross-Country squad to the 1970 Yankee Conference championship, it marked the end of three years of frustration. In the three years previous, a total of 18 points had separated Coach Ken O'Brien's harriers from four straight championships. since then, O'Brien's determined distance runners have literally run away from the rest of the conference and never looked back.

Never, that is, until yesterday, when extremely satisfied Coach Ken O'Brien allowed himself to briefly savor his teams record setting fourth consecutive conference championship.

"Saturday's victory was one of our biggest," admitted O'Brien. "In the past few years, we've geared our training to the more prestigious championship meets such as the New Englands and IC4A's, and de-emphasized the importance of the conference. Nobody had ever won the conference four years in a row, though, so this year the conference championships meant more to us, and winning it was much more gratifying."

For the record, Saturday's runaway at Durham, New Hampshire earned the Minutemen their eleventh title in the 25-year history of the Yankee Conference. Randy

For Love Or Money

From the Depth of Sin - Vic Fusia is doing his job. Thank God for that. At least someone in the football program is getting results. But in the context of what college football is all about, Vic Fusia is a kingpin. He works for a product in the field of promotion. And right about now his particular product couldn't draw flies to feeces...

Victor Fusia sells University of Massachusetts football. Right about now he'd rather transfer to Fuller Brushes. He can sell a coffin to a dead horse. But his assignment this Saturday is even more critical than that. He's got to sell the University of Massachusetts-University of Vermont football game. It's a shame that Vic is bald. He'd certainly lose his hair with that task. Right now I would say that UMass-Vermont at that Stadium doesn't have the right to outdraw a Gay Dance at Farley Lodge. But it will. . . Vic Fusia will see to that...

It'll be "Western Mass, salutes Yogi Berra Day" at the Stadium this Saturday. Like man, I'm really into it. I could care whether Yogi ever flushes a toilet at Alumni Stadium again. If he goes I'm sure he will for more reasons than one. But using Yogi's well-read name and apparent esteem with jock sniffers throughout the country is a brilliant idea by Fusia. But the stunt fits right into the sinful superstructure and apparent bind that college football falls into....MONEY. And to dollars and cents we sacrifice pride.....

Yogi Berra means nothing to UMass football. He's just another parent. But he's different from the Penningtons', the Hadjuseks', or the Morans'. Different from those loyal UMass football families (taking nothing away from them), Yogi has appeal and charisma to the potential ticket buyers in Western Mass. whereas the Penningtons (God Love Them As Mac Would Say) don't....That's why we'll steal Yogi's name to promote this pitiful football game. Some say it's the name...I say it's the game.

This fiasco is a university decision. Dan Melley at the Public Affairs Office will ultimately handle it with the emphasis placed on the planning of Fusia in Marketing and Management for Frank McInerney's staff. I don't know where Dan Melley stands here. I don't care either. For I could care about a Yogi Berra Day. And I don't believe Frank McInerney when he says that this "isn't a promotional stunt" to make money. He says that "the Berras' represent a loveable middle American family and I don't want to see Yogi hurt by this". I hope he isn't. But we're dealing in dirt. And that's what the dog-eat-dog, money-crazed syndrome of promoting college football is all about. You can get a clean bill of health...But have a hidden tumor.

We won't ever realize the ramifications of this "Yogi thing". It happened too fast. We'll make money off it. We have to. Is Yogi exploited for money? On the surface the University isn't openly admitting that they're using one of middle America's most beloved folk heroes..But they are. It's dirty. But so is the business of gimmicking your way through a college football season. The money won't hurt. We're forced to take it with a smile on our faces. And with a once in a lifetime opportunity with Yogi, a stadium to fill, a program to sustain, and the Vermont yawn and the slapstick, revolting Yankee Conference confines to work within...Why the hell not?...

Someday I'll be promoting used toilet seats. When we leave the facade of our insulated college confines we'll find that around every corner someone wants to make a buck off an elder Berra....Although the motive will never really surface, I guess the University of Massachusetts is no exception.....

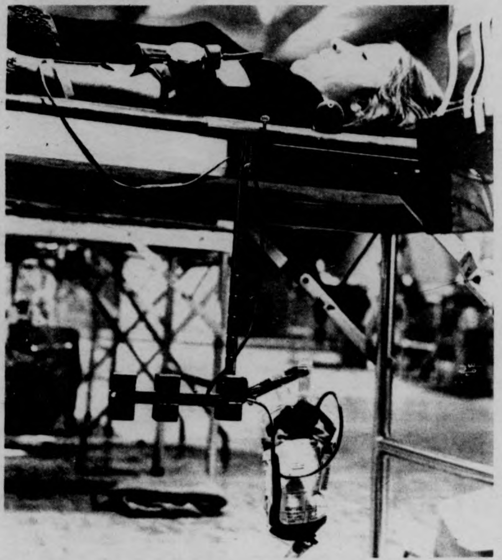
Donate Blood For Donald Duck!



Staff Photo/Steve Smith

Denise Wolfe thinks of anything but blood at this point.

By DAVID SPARLING

The world's greatest Walt Disney comic book collection (Donald Duck division) will be available for perusal today and tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium.

It'll only cost you a pint of blood to see them.

That's right, the Hampshire County Chapter of the American Red Cross in conjunction with University Women (wives of faculty, professionals and administrators) and two Greek service organizations...stop...take a breath...Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega, are all running a blood drive through Thursday.

About 600 people have already given blood (most of them signed up in advance although you can just walk in and give) and between 1,100 and 1,300 are expected.

Prof. Arnold D. Rhodes from the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management will have to figure out if his comics, featuring Donald Duck, Daffy Duck, Uncle Scrooge, Huey, Dewey, Louie, the Roadrunner and more, can take the handling of all the doners.

It's my guess that most of the UMass student body is not still leery of giving blood. You have heard all your life what a simple, painless, civic minded thing giving blood is. Well it's all true. Aided by the brisk Red Cross women and other volunteers it is a simple, painless task, and this one has the added incentive of Donald Duck.

If the American Red Cross had a more hedonistic outlook on life, I can see them putting together a great party. When they go into action, they run a well supplied, well staffed, there's plenty-for-everyone blood drive.

As the doner registers, has his/her temperature taken, blood pressure taken, hemoglobin content checked, blood type verified, and other pertinant data and checks taken care of, you cannot help but notice the rustle of blue smocks of the Red Cross workers.

You're gently led through the actual donation, and afterward are led, half sheepish, half spacey, to the "recovery" area.

Fifteen minutes later, after cookies, sandwiches, Coke, milk or coffee-and the comics-you're done.

So if you would like to donate blood, go to the Campus Center Auditorium today. Mrs. Martha Livingston of the University Women and all the others would really enjoy having you. And finally, please be careful of Prof. Rhodes' comics.

Students To Have Voice In Collective Bargaining

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

"Students do not influence collective bargaining directly, but rather teachers reflect the attitudes of their students," according to Dr. William Hebert, Executive Secretary of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA).

Dr. Hebert and the faculty leaders of the Massachusetts Society of Professors-American Association of University Professors (MSP-AAUP), were present to answer questions pertaining to the coalition union's campaign for faculty representation, at an informal gathering and cocktail hour sponsored by MSP-AAUP last night in the Campus Center.

Elections to decide on faculty unionization will be held November 15 and 16.

MSP-AAUP supports the guidelines on student participation in university governance as specified in the 1970 AAUP statement on university governance. These guidelines provide for consultation with students in matters concerning admissions, academic programs, academic courses and staff, grading system, and other academic and non-academic affairs.

The MSP-AAUP is affiliated with the MTA. Although the MTA is a statewide organization decisions affecting individual schools or campuses are reached by the locals.

Representation, although the main issue of the campaign, now in its eighteenth month, is not the only concern of the union.

"The MTA offers legal services and new developments in curriculum and instruction," said Dr. Hebert. He referred to the union's role in the abolishment of the anti-nepotism rule. Until recently, a husband and wife could not both have tenure.

Frank Fata, MSP-AAUP Campaign Manager and a member of the French and Italian Departments believes that the campaign is successful, and describes its pace for the final two weeks as "very high".

The MSP-AAUP plans to hold a meeting to discuss legislative representation in the Commonwealth on November 8.

Representative David Bartley, a graduate of UMass and presently speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives: Senator John Olver of Amherst, a UMass faculty member on leave: Representative Jim Collins of Amherst, a former staff member at UMass: and Rep. Edward McColgan of Northampton will speak and answer questions on the faculty's direct input into government.

Waging a campaign against collective bargaining, the Committee of Concerned Faculty cites the high degree of uncertainty associated with collective bargaining. In a flyer date September 28, they opposed the MSP-AAUP's claim that the faculty has only an advisory role in university governance.

"Under present governance arrangements faculty voices can decide departmental affairs, faculty voices do dominate in the Senate, faculty members dominate search committees for administratros, faculty recommendations already dominate personnel, salary and tenure decisions, and faculty machinery hears complaints that justice has not been done."

The Administration seeks to provide the faculty with the information necessary to make their vote a wise one. They have set up several mini-libraries on campus containing material on collective bargaining.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery feels that collective bargaining is an important issue, although "a backward move for faculty participation in campus governance and in contrast to the best interest of the faculty and the whole University community."

In order for the union to be voted in, they must have fifty-one percent of the votes. Based on elections at other campuses, Professor Howard Brogan of the English Department and chairman of the unions' executive board, expects an eighty percent or better turnout.

"There are 500 members of the union at present," said Brogan, "and about 1300 or 1400 faculty members."

Department chairmen and Librarians IV and V will be allowed to vote. These votes, however, will only be counted if they are vital to the outcome of the election, as their status as part of the bargaining unit is disputed. The union claims that they are faculty, therefore they are members of the unit. The administration attributes managerial status to them and argues that they be excluded from the bargaining unit.

Guards Will Stay In Parking Lots In Central Area Security Issue

By KATHY SHEEHAN

In a meeting with the Central Area Council Monday night, David Johnston, Chief of Campus Police, reaffirmed his decision to keep security guards patrolling the parking lots during the day rather than roving the dorm perimeters at night.

Johnston received a memo from the Parking & Transportation Committee before this semester which read, "the success of the parking program absolutely depends on stringent and consistent enforcement." After receiving this memo, he decided that enforcement of the parking program was of first importance in security at UMass and promptly got the rules and regulations changed so that security officers were assigned to parking lots and given the authority to issue towing orders to Amherst Towing.

The Central Area Council invited Johnston to their meeting because they were "concerned about the security in the dorms since there is none". Members of the Council and residents of the Central Area want the reinstitution of roving security guards around the unlit pathways in the Central area, especially those areas which are inaccessible by car. Council members cited unreported incidents of rape occurring near the Infirmary and the Observatory this semester.

However, to the incredulity of those present, Johnston stated that there have been no reported attacks of rape on campus since last January, and that he did not believe that women generally don't report sexual attacks. He denied that there was a need for more security around the Central area. In his opinion, the demand for roving patrols is based on fervor rather than fact.

Southwest is the only dorm area with foot patrolmen because that area has proven to be where the highest incidence of crime is located.

Johnston declared very seriously that there should be no doubt in anybody's mind over the priorities in parking control.

Since his first priority is in parking control, it won't be until the parking situation is under control that the force of approximately 20 parking officers would be cut and put back in the dorms. There are only X number of security people to work with and the majority of these are enforcing parking rules. According to Johnston, the only way to have more security guards on duty at night is with overtime. He estimated that the parking problems should be resolved within a month. Since September 1, 955 cards have been towed.

In their argument to have roving security guards reinstituted, Council members expressed their feelings that a man in uniform is a deterrent to crime. Johnston, who has a 15 year background in police work, denied that uniforms deterred crime. He reminded the Council that a security guard is unarmed and has no authority to arrest. Furthermore, he said that cruisers do patrol the area 24 hours a day and can be summoned to an area within 3 minutes.

Although Johnston seemed to be adamant in his refusal for foot patrolmen in the Central Area, when questioned, he stated that he will not be inflexible in the matter, but will continue to look at the statistical data along with the demand and do as much as possible with the people he has.

OH Gets Acting Director

By DAVID SPARLING

This week Professor Michael Wolff, of the UMass Dept. of English, begins office hours as Orchard Hill's Acting Director, and therein lies a story.

The story has everything from disillusionment to optomism, hard work to idle dreams, student antagonism with administration to administrative exasperation with students and, in the end, the story is not over.

A historical sketch is needed:

Last winter as the second semester began, then Orchard Hill Master Christopher Hurn resigned. In his letter of resignation he voiced concern for the academic program offered on the Hill as part of their residencial college make-up.

This prompted two actions. The first was that the remaining staff on the Hill worked very hard to come up with an academic program of worth for the semester.

The second was that Assoc. Provost Robert Woodbury and Vice Chancellor Robert Gage announced, last Feb. 5, that a Residential College Review Committee was formed and would find out (1.) what is wrong with Orchard Hill and (2.) what structural problems can be recommended to eliminate those problems.

The Review Committee (RC) worked throughout the spring semester and in the spring issued its report. The major problems on the Hill, according to the RC's report were the following:

1. Conflict between the Master (Christopher Hurn) and the Area Director (Jim West)

2. "Lack of quality control mechanisms...for...academic programs and courses offered on the Hill."

3. Lack of success by the Hill "in clearly communicating its academic goals to the larger university community."

4. Some confusion concerning the definition of Community

Clearly, the RC found defects in Orchard Hill, defects that stemmed not only from the Hill itself, but also from the relationship the Hill had with the administration and the rest of the university.

The RC also made many structural differences. One of the major ideas that met with opposition with Orchard Hill students was the idea that the Hill ought to make as fresh a start as possible ie. get rid of the current administrators and appoint new people.

To reach these ends, university administrators last spring notified two heads of residence and two Hill administrators that they would be relocated. In effect the Hill personel was being canned.

Space limitations here limit recounting the many events that followed, however in skeleton form here they are-

1. Orchard Hill students protested vigorously

2. UMass administrators retreated, reinstating in effect the "relocated" personnel

3. The Orchard Hill Summer Committee (most importantly made up of students) was formed to submit a report to the administrators, name an acting director (the aforementioned Mr. Wolff) and in general put down on paper all the issues that students had been talking about since the whole crisis (and it was that to many people) began.

This Summer Committee (SC) had, in effect, been given the responsibility to come up with specific recommendations for the future make-up, role, and goals of Orchard Hill. Six Hill students and one School of Education advisor worked for most of the summer (for $1,125 salary), and this fall submitted the completed work (over 50 pages, not counting extensive appendixes) to Gage and Woodbury.

The SC's report basically recognized the faults of the Hill ("dedication, followed by mounting frustration and ending in apathy and even antipathy toward the Hill: this has been a characteristic progression of feeling among many of those who have worked for a quality educational program at Orchard Hill") in the past.

More importantly for the future of the Hill, the SC came up with specific recommendations:

1. appoint an acting director immediately from the university community (Mr. Wolff)

2. get more specific channels of communication between OH staff members (Assistant to the Director, Scheduling Officer, and an administrative assistant were also proposed)

3. The OH Advisory Board should be mainly concerned with the recruitment of faculty to work on OH.

4. A Personnel Committee should evaluate OH faculty and staff

5. the OH Curriculum Committee should be the major body within the community for the formulation and development of long and short range academic programs

6. the Hill will need "community people" outside the University to serve as faculty members

7. an "absolute necessity" for increased physical facilities available to the Hill-especially the building of a large all purpose building on the Hill

8. made several recommendations to Orchard Hill Area Government to make it more effective

These recommendations, as given above, offer only the minimum of coverage to the report. As Orchard Hill begins a transitional period it bears watching. Competition for funds by special projects all over the university is great.

Besides the specific problems of adequate funding, people firmly committed to the Hill and its ideals face a long tough road before they recognize any of the ideals that they aspire to. The Summer Committee's report is only the first step.

Sign Girls Become Minor Campus Celebrities

By MIKE KNEELAND

Rumor has it that if Henry Kissinger were to stand on an Amherst street corner with Karen Polansky and Sandi Beren, people would ask who the guy was with the sign girls.

Since beginning their job as sign girls this year, the girls have become minor campus celebrities. At first, Sandi says, she was surprised that people recognized her without signs.

"I was getting a complex when people didn't recognize me without the signs," chuckles Karen. Now, she says, people seem to recognize her all around the University.

A Sigma Delta Tau sister, Karen says she was the "shame of the house" when she first began advertising. "Now they love it because they always know what's going on, where the sales are."

Both agree that the signs are more clumsy than heavy. The wind is a prime foe because it sometimes blows the signs over their heads, which become embarrassingly "stuck".

The girls each work 13 hours per week. They decline to reveal their fees. Their earnings are being set aside for a California trip during intersession.

The girls inherited the business from a mutual friend who is now an exchange student in Oregon. Since they frequently advertise in town, they had to get a permit from Amherst authorities.

Sandi and Karen, both 20-year-old juniors majoring in human development, say they like the business aspects of their job. Students are constantly asking them store schedules and the current sales. "Our stores hold us responsible to know what's going on," notes Sandi.

The stores design and paint their own signs. Most of them change their signs at least once a month, say the girls.

"I can't believe how I ever got myself into this," laughs Karen.

Sandi, who says she always wanted to be an actress, is more candid. "We're crazy and it's a crazy job...a lot of fun."

NE Women's Center

Debunking The Myths

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"We want to change the myths connected with Women's Centers," said Gail Kaplan, coordinator of the North East Area Women's Center, in a Collegian interview last night.

"The idea of women's centers, promoted largely by the press, is the myth that the centers are only for radical women libers, or those who are oppressed housewives," said Ms. Kaplan. "We have nothing against housewives. There is professional dignity in everything you do. Our purpose is simply to present alternatives," she continued.

Ms. Kaplan explained that one half of the women involved in the center have never been involved in the Women's Movement. "This is their first step and we don't want to scare them away," she said.

The main goal of the Northeast Women's Center is first, to establish a place where women or men can come and relax; and second, to be an educational vehicle through which people can learn, said Ms. Kaplan.

The Center is an outgrowth of the Northeast Women's Weekend held last February 23-25. Because of the success of the weekend, some felt there was a need for women's services in the area.

This September, the Center was established in the basement of Lewis House and is organized as a co-op. Ms. Kaplan organizes activities for the Center, and finds volunteers to open and staff the Center. Ms. Kaplan stressed the fact that the Center is run largely on a volunteer basis.

The Center is asking the area government for a budget of $1300.00 for the coming year. The money would be used for the purchase of office supplies, program speakers, films and books for the Center's expanding library.

One of the activities planned for this year is a Women's Weekend, tentatively scheduled for December 1-2. The weekend will include speakers and films on subjects ranging from politics to sexuality. The weekend will also include workshops on subjects such as: prostitution; child birth; and alternate life styles.

This semester the Center has already had one speaker, Robyn German, who spoke on migrant workers and exploitation of women in the fields. There is also a colloquia called "Interpersonal Relations and Counseling" being offered. Next semester, a 3 credit English course entitled "Women in Folklore", is being offered in the Center.

Other activities of the Center include a weekly bulletin and a monthly newsletter. Weekly meetings are held every Monday at 9:30 p.m.

When comparing the Northeast Women's Center with other centers on campus, Ms. Kaplan said, "The various Women's Centers on campus are as different as the areas in which they are located." Ms. Kaplan also said that she is in touch with the other centers, but each Center tends to serve the needs of its area.

In conclusion, Ms. Kaplan said, "It's nice to have a job you enjoy working at. It's great to see the program blossom; the changes are so exciting."

Study Abroad Night Tonight

There will be a Study Abroad Night held tonight in room 101 of the Campus Center from 7:30-9:30 p.m. Students who have participated in University programs will be giving informal talks about their experiences while studying in a foreign country. Everyone interested is welcome. There is no admission charge. The program is sponsored by Alpha Lambda Delta and the International Programs Office.

U Puked: History's Worst Intramural Football Team

By SHARON HUGHES

Losing is not so bad if you have beer afterwards...and before...and at halftime—that was Joe O'Brien's philosophy.

He should know. For two years he instilled the losing tradition in the worst team in the history of intramural football at UMass.

Made up of the seventh floor of Grayson the team ended four years together this fall with an overall record of 0-27. They didn't even score until the third year.

Their name is as unorthodox as their play--the "U Puked's." They got it from their "spiritual leader," Johnny Walker, who chanted the words in reference to a player's response to being hit in the stomach after a game.

Although winning didn't come naturally (or any other way), the U Puked's hold the campus record for going out for passes. Star end, Peter Arvanites said, "I get right out there; only the other team always intercepts the hike."

Arvanites once caught what could have been a 47 yard touchdown pass, only to discover the ball came from an adjacent field, where it had been kicked out of bounds.

In retrospect, free safety, Karl Piculin pointed out the key reasons of the team's failure.

"For one thing the average size is about 5'2", and the average weight 113 lbs. Also we never practiced, we just played. Why we were lucky if enough guys showed up at games to make a full team," he said.

Plagued with misfortune for three years, the team got a break at the end of the '72 season-their first touchdown.

They recounted the game something like this:

"The temperature was 31 degrees.....there were 12 seconds remaining in the last quarter. The opposing quarterback l-a-z-i-l-y rolled back and threw a gentle pass into the air.

It bounced off lineman Bruce Williams' head and into his arms. He quickly shook off his surprise and ran it 20 yards for a touchdown.

The team went insane with joy!! They had waited a long time for the momentous T.D. The opposing team stared in disbelief at our antics (they had just won the game 56-6.)"

How does a team maintain morale during long stretches of failure...in between moments of success?

The U Puked's claim "all credit" goes to a Grayson man, coach, Mark "The Spark" Vogler.

"The Spark would corral us all into the lounge before a game and really chew us out. Bedecked in a sweatshirt, a whistle around his neck, and a cap over his eyes he'd scribble plays on a blackboard" they said.

"We never forgot his motto (although we tried) - tenacity, spontaneity and spunk make a victory. He's in Washington this semester so we've been without a coach. We used to say, let's win this one for the Spark--but of course we never did. Eventually it became, let's lose this one for the Spark," according to the team.

Once, and most appropriately timed-the last game of the last season - the U Puked's had a slight chance of winning a game. If they had won it would have been the biggest upset of the season.

A fraternity team going for the No. 1 spot in the independent league was losing 0-13 to them at the end of the third quarter. The 13 points were an event in itself - the second and third touchdowns in U Puked's career.

"Before the game started we figured we'd be in trouble. Only seven guys showed up. Then their team came; about 40 of them with helmets and shoulder pads walked toward us," said Karl.

"Being our last game we were really pysched. Still, we had so little organization compared to them. Like in the huddle when they were calling out plays we were drawing pictures in the dirt. Finally our seven guys playing both offense and defense got tired, so the Greeks won," he continued.

As all good things must end, so must the bad.

But the U Puked's have a special kind of "team consciousness" that sustained them through their losses. In '70, as freshmen they were assigned to live on the seventh floor of Grayson...and they pretty much stayed together for the rest of their stint up here.

They've been notorious for things other than football. Like incredible amounts of noise, waterfights, and an illegal hide-a-way bar in the ironing closet.

When they graduate this spring, about half of them will go on to medical school. Many of the them to law school and a few to grad school. They said it's kinda sad that the 'ole team will finally break up. And that an era will end for intramural football.

Which way did they go? Staff Photo/David Less

Southwest Has New Social Advisor

By STEVE TETREAULT

Bob Antil sees many possibilities in his new job.

Bob Antil's new job is to serve as Southwest social and cultural advisor. His duties include helping groups, including dorms, in organizing social events, serving as an intermediary between students and RSO, coordinating Southwest centers in the planning of programs, and serving as a member of the Hampden Advisory Board.

"A great deal can be done with the job if one approaches it in a flexible way," he stated. "First of all, one has to be open to what the students want."

Antil, who has been in Southwest for only two weeks, admits that he is still in the learning stages of the job. He is, however, filled with many ideas.

He would strive to unite the Southwest social, cultural, and academic factions by sponsoring some sort of program, possibly a jazz festival. This festival would solicit the assistance of music colloques, cultural centers, and students.

"I would also like to see something which I would call "The Contest," he said. "In 'The Contest', I would hand out, say, several $50 gift certificates to the people who come up with the best ideas for an activity or program."

One of Antil's major interests is the use of the Hampden Dining Commons as a Student Center. He is in favor of establishing a theatre operation in conjunction with the Southwest Instructional Center and the Theatre Department of the University. He can also picture an arts and craft center in the building, as well as a listening room somewhat akin to that in the Campus Center.

In order to further educate himself in the role of social advisor, Antil will be meeting with the social coordinators of Orchard Hill and Central. "Hopefully, some sort of multi-area programs can be discussed," he said.

Antil is enthusiastic, and is willing to help anyone in need of assistance in planning a party. His office is in JQA, and his number is 5-1552. His hours are Monday, 3-5; Tuesday and Wednesday, 9:30-11:30; Thursday, 4-6:30; and Friday, 9:30-11:30. His home phone number is available through the Master's Office at Southwest.

Antil reminds Southwest residents that, since he is there to help them, he would like some ideas of what they would like to see. "I can't sit here and force activities down throats," he said. "All the suggestions I've made so far are just ideas, and any reactions at all would be welcome. I'm throwing balloons up and seeing which ones stay up."

State Department Criticizes U.S. Allies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department again criticized the U.S. allies in Europe for not lending more public support during last week's Middle East developments.

Press spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said at a news briefing the administration was not only annoyed that the European allies refused to help resupply Israel with military hardware but was upset over a lack of support.

"We would have appreciated more public support," McCloskey said. "While the locale of the conflict is admittedly outside the NATO area, there was an issue between the United States and the Soviet Union and for that reason alone we would have welcomed more public support."

The administration has been critical of the allies since last week, when all U.S. forces were placed on an alert in connection with the Middle East situation.

"What we had to say here last week in response to published comment in Europe was not done lightly or casually," McCloskey said, referring to criticism last Friday be President Nixon, Defense Secretary James Schlesinger, and himself.

He said that the United States takes its relations with the allies "most seriously......our record of performance demonstrated that clearly."

One official said it was inexcusable that several European allies publicly expressed their resentment over U.S. actions.

The officail criticized the West German foreign ministry, which announced that it had protested the shipping of American arms to Israel from U.S. bases in West Germany.

POW's To Be Exchanged

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Egypt and Israel agreed yesterday on an exchange of wounded prisoners of war but failed to work out an over-all prisoner release agreement.

The United Nations tightened surveillance of the Suez front cease-fire by establishing new observation posts.

The exchange of wounded prisoners, first break in the POW stalemate, was announced to the Israeli parliament by Defense Minister Moshe Dayan.

"We asked them for a full prisoner exchange, but we have no promise on this," Dayan said. "But once the wounded are back and once the visits of the International Red Cross are taking place and the lists have been exchanged, I believe the full exchange would follow."

Dayan said the Egyptians had agreed to supply the names of all Israeli prisoners in three days. He reported no success on the prisoner issue with Syria. Dayan said Egypt had supplied a list of 82 POW names, including 45 injured.

As a first step toward their return, he said, Israel would permit 70 wounded Egyptians to go home.

The Egyptian government in Cairo said it has complied with an Israeli request for a list of war prisoners and agreed to a POW exchange-once the Israelis return to the cease-fire line of Oct. 22.

In other developments, the Syrian government stuck to its refusal to negotiate with Israel, and Israel complained Egypt had fired missiles at its reconnaissance planes. But Tel Aviv allowed more emergency food, water and medicine across the Suez Canal to the 20,000 men of the isolated Egyptian 3rd Army.

Egypt continued to maintain its troops were in control of Suez City. U.N. officials also reported that Egyptians were in Suez and that Finnish peace-keeping troops had established two observation posts between them and the Israelis.

Israel says Egypt and Syria together hold about 450 Israeli POWs and that it has captured some 7,150 Arab soldiers, including 6,800 Egyptians. It has announced it will exchange all prisoners in Israeli hands for the return of Israeli POWs.

Word on initial prisoner exchange agreements came as Washington announced Israeli Premier Golda Meir would come to the White House tomorrow to confer with President Nixon. The President was scheduled to meet before then with Egyptian and Soviet envoys in continued effort to reach a Mideast settlement.

A U.N. spokesman in Cairo reported that Swedish troops had set up six observation posts along the Suez cease-fire line and were trying to link with the Finns in Suez City to the south. He said 53 more Finns and Swedes were due yesterday night to swell the special U.N. emergency force to 660. It is scheduled to reach about 7,000.

Golda Meir To Visit U.S.

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel will call on President Nixon tomorrow amid indications that the United States is trying to bring about Israeli withdrawal from Egyptian territory seized after the initial cease-fire agreement.

Mrs. Meir's hastily arranged visit was announced by the White House yesterday as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger began a second round of exploratory talks with Ismail Fahmy, Egypt's acting foreign minister. At the same time, Nixon invited Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin to his Camp David retreat.

U.S. officials said Fahmy's first session with Kissinger at the State Department on Monday was "a considerable step forward" that may accelerate the peacemaking process. Fahmy delivered a message from Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, said a knowledgeable informant, and is reported to have stressed that a number of states, including Egypt and Syria, are prepared to accept Israel's sovereignty as a hard fact of life.

Kissinger and Fahmy met again yesterday morning and continued their discussions through lunch. They plan to see Nixon at the White House today.

The two key issues are becoming entwined in the quickened diplomacy. The first is Arab insistence on Israeli withdrawal from territory seized on the west bank of the Suez Canal between the United Nations cease-fire agreements of Oct. 22 and Oct. 23. The second is Israel's demand for an immediate exchange of prisoners.

Dobrynin has been a go-between in the parallel efforts by the United States and the Soviet Union to provide "good offices" to both enforce the cease-fire resolutions and to lay the groundwork for negotiations between Israel and Egypt for a permanent settlement.

The Egyptians provided Israel with the names of 82 prisoners, including a pilot held since 1969, and would exchange the men once Israel agreed to return to the positions it held on Oct. 22.

Moshe Dayan, Israeli defense minister, said Israel is holding 6,995 Egyptians, 368 Syrians, 13 Iraqi and six Moroccans.

At the U.S. Capitol, Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., introduced legislation to deny funds for any U.S. combat activity in the Middle East without the approval of Congress.

U.S. Economy

"We Saw It Coming"

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — What follows is a compilation of items that, reflected upon, may provide some insight into the condition of the American economy:

—The fuel shortage didn't erupt in the faces of unsuspecting officials, although it might appear that way. Government and industry researchers saw the problem developing a decade ago, but almost no coordinate effort was made to face it.

Same with food. Officials knew that while population was increasing, and that people the world over were improving their diets, the supply of food was not rising sufficiently to take care of demand.

Speaking at the Columbia Graduate School of Business a few days ago, C. W. Cook, chairman of General Foods Corp., observed:

"In 1965, President Johnson appointed a 30-man panel, called the National Commission on Food and Fiber, to make a thorough 18-month study of the subject in its broadest aspects.

"I was privileged to be a member along with topflight agribusiness economists from the academic world, farm leaders, other food processors, food retailers, and consumer representatives.

"Among other findings, our commission concluded that the trend of world demand was outpacing supply and would continue to do so unless massive steps were taken to achieve more of a balance.

"What happened as a result? In effect, nothing!"

—True or false: The United States is a have-not nation in regard to energy resources. False. The just-published "U.S. Industrial Outlook 1974," a Commerce Department publication, might bolster your confidence:

"It is reassuring that this country has almost unlimited energy potential in the form of coal and oil shale. More than half of the world's total reserves of coal are within the United States, and recoverable resources of oil shale are of roughly equal magnitude."

It adds that "large-scale" additions to the energy supply will come from solar and geothermal sources in the 1990s, and that nuclear fusion "could possibly supply energy indefinitely for a substantial part of the world's population."

—Many corporations are enjoying the most profitable year in their history, but that doesn't mean they're happy.

One after another they've boasted to stockholders and brokers about record high profits and then, lest the government was listening, added that price relief was necessary if profitability was to continue.

Union Carbide, for example, "expects the best year in the corporation's history," its chief financial officer, William Pardoe, told San Francisco security analysts this week.

That was half the story. Another officer then cautioned that rising costs of hydrocarbon feedstock and energy would require relief from price restrictions on its products now imposed by Phase 4.

—Pay raises to organized labor in this year of government controls contributed less to corporate stress, although they may have contributed a good deal to strained relations between labor and the administration.

The Labor Department reported that wage-benefit increases in major contract settlements for the first nine months dropped to 6.3 percent over the life of contract from 7.4 percent for the entire year 1972.

Richardson: "Cox Involved Nixon In ITT Scandal"

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson said before he resigned that special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox had copies of five secret memoranda a White House aide said would "directly involve the President" in the ITT scandal.

The documents are among those described in a March 30, 1972 memo from then-special presidential counsel Charles W. Colson to then-White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman.

The White House, meanwhile, acknowledged that President Nixon intervened in the Justice Department's handing of an antitrust suit against the giant conglomerate, saying he "had every right" to do so. And Cox, who was fired by Nixon, acknowledged he may have been the indirect source of the news leak that brought the President's involvement in the case to light.

Four members of the Senate Judiciary Committee had asked Richardson in August for a status report on a number of documents, including those described in the Colson memo.

In his reply Sept. 6, Richardson said, "There are five documents mentioned in the Colson memorandum which may have been in the Department of Justice." Searches of the department's files turned up two of them, Richardson said, and they were turned over to the special prosecutor's office.

"The other three documents," he said, "were not discovered in the department, either in connection with the Richard G. Kleindienst confirmation hearings or the subsequent hearings or the subsequent perjury investigation.

"I am informed by the special prosecutor's office, however, that he now has copies of all three documents."

The Colson memo was written to convince Haldeman that Kleindienst's nomination to be attorney general should be withdrawn. Colson said there was a serious risk that the Senate confirmation hearings would unearth documentary evidence of White House intervention in the Justice Department's antitrust suit against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., which pledged $400,000 to help the city of San Diego underwrite the Republican National Convention.

The five documents mentioned by Richardson are among the most important cited by Colson.

Cox On ITT: "An Error Of Carelessness"

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ousted special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox testified yesterday he may have been the indirect source of a story that President Nixon ordered the Justice Department not to appeal one phase of the ITT anti-trust case.

The White House, acknowledging Nixon once told former Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst not to make the appeal, said Cox's testimony illustrates "the partisan attitude that characterized his activities in recent months."

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren also defended Nixon's action, saying: "He had every right as President of the United States to discuss antitrust policy with the Justice Department."

The story, in yesterday's New York Times, said Nixon had telephoned Kleindienst and, after calling him a vulgar name, said, "Don't you understand the English language" and ordered the appeal stopped.

Warren said the President withdrew his objection to the appeal when it "was explained in more specific detail." The case subsequently was settled out-of-court.

Cox told a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing into his ouster that he had broken a confidence in the ITT matter and said it was "an error of carelessness" but nonetheless inexcusable. As for the out-of-court settlement of ITT case itself, Cox testified he always has thought it was "a perfectly good bargain from the point of view of the government."

In other testimony before the committee, Cox suggested a possible route of inquiry for the House Judiciary Committee which is investigating possible grounds for impeaching Nixon. Cox said the House committee may want to inquire into "the extent to which the President on an over-all basis has cooperated or not cooperated with attempts to get the truth about Watergate."

Cox testified he had broken Kleindienst's confidence by telling Sens. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and two of their aides about Nixon's telephoned instructions in the ITT case.

"During the stress and strain of the last two weeks I spoke more freely than I intended with a few friends," Cox said.

Cox, fired on Nixon's instructions on Oct. 20 after opposing the President on court action to obtain Watergate tapes and other White House evidence, said he hoped the committee would be — as he put it — "charitable enough" to believe he had not intended the information Kleindienst had given him to be leaked to the press.

Fuel Shortage May Cause Cooler Classrooms, Longer Vacations

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

School children in scattered areas of the country may find themselves with extra time off this winter because of the fuel shortage. They'll pay for the holiday with added class hours when the weather gets warmer.

An Associated Press spot check showed officials in a number of school districts were considering extending winter vacations and lowering classroom temperatures as a way of saving fuel.

A bill has been introduced in the Michigan legislature to permit schools to close because of heating problems without forfeiting state aid payments.

John W. Porter, Michigan superintendent of public instruction, said some schools might have to close for a short time this winter and added, "On a long-range basis, we may be forced close schools for several months in the winter and keep them open during the summer if the energy crisis worsens in the years ahead."

The Maryland department of education set up a committee of school superintendents to draw up plans in case of a fuel shortage. Some school systems already have ordered temperatures lowered from 70 to 65 degrees during the day and from 60 to 55 degrees at night.

The nagging fuel shortage that struck motorists this summer has been compounded by a cutback in Arab production due to the Mideast war. Some Arab countries have banned exports to the United States in an effort to pressure Washington to cut off support of Israel. The shortage also has pushed up prices, straining school budgets.

Some states said they didn't expect any problems. In Utah, where the first snow of the season fell on Monday, there was no talk at all of longer vacations or cooler classrooms. "We have enough fuel to take care of the needs of our present customers," said one of the major suppliers.

U.S. And Soviets Open Talks

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Blocs led by the United States and the Soviet Union clashed yesterday at the opening session of the conference on reducing troops and weapons in Central Europe.

East and West Germany, side by side around the green negotiating table, were the main speakers. Both were represented by ambassadors.

Wolfgang Behrends of West Germany told the delegates they should take account of the "disparities and disequilibriums" between Eastern and Western forces. The Soviet Union and its allies have more men and tanks in the area than the Western powers, he noted.

Moreover, he added, it is easier to bring reinforcements from the Soviet Union than from the United States should circumstances demand it.

"These negotiations," he said, "should therefore aim to ultimately bring about, at a lower level, an approximate parity in the form of a common ceiling for ground forces of each side in Central Europe."

The opposite view came from Ingo Oeser of East Germany. For him, and for the Soviets, the aim is to keep the present relationship in troops and weapons between the two sides.

"This could be done," he said, "by reducing forces and armaments at an equal percentage or an equal quantitative rate."

The United States and its allies want movement toward numerical parity but diplomats saw room for bargaining between the two views.

Over a million troops are in the area immediately concerned: Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the western part of the Soviet Union.

Sargent Promotes Richardson As Presidential Contender

By LAWRENCE SPIEGEL
Associtaed Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts sidestepped talk that Elliot Richardson might oppose his 1974 renomination bid yesterday by promoting the former Attorney General of the United States as a presidential contender.

Sargent said he doubted there would be a "family fight" with his second cousin when he was asked at a news conference about a published report that Richardson is being urged by supporters to consider a run for the GOP gubernatorial nomination next year.

Richardson resigned as Attorney General earlier this month rather than obey a presidential order to fire Special Watergate Prosecutor Archibald Cox.

"I have no idea whether he, Richardson, would plan to run for governor. I don't think he would. He's indicated that he's going to keep his options open," Sargent said.

"I think he might well be and should be considering the highest office in this land. I think there would be support for him today."

"I think it took great courage on his part to say no to the President of the United States and to resign on a matter of principal," Sargent said.

"I think he deserves the plaudits of the people across the coutnry."

Sargent said America is "thirsting today for a person with backbone...who can restore confidence and respect in this country."

Speculation over Richardson's political future was fueled by a Springfield Union report yesterday that Richardson met over the weekend with supporters in the Boston area.

Quoting GOP sources, the Union said Richardson is being urged to consider opposing Sargent while supporters generate a petition drive to draft the former attorney general for the nomination.

Richardson reportedly did not rule out running for governor, the newspaper said.

"A family fight? I think a confrontation is never bad but I don't anticipate it," Sargent said when asked about the report.

"You know, I haven't announced myself. Nobody's certain including me as to what I will do but I anticipate that I will be running," Sargent said.

Richardson served as lieutenant governor of Massachusetts and state attorney general before being named assistant secretary of state in the Nixon administration.

Kissinger To Visit Cairo

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger plans to visit Cairo and possibly Jerusalem and other Mideast capitals in a bid to speed negotiations between Israel and its Arab foes, officials said yesterday night.

Kissinger probably will go on from the Mideast to China, where he is scheduled to meet with Chinese leaders in Peking beginning Nov. 10.

The Kissinger mission to the Egyptian capital was to have been announced at the White House today after Ismail Fahmy, the acting Egyptian foreign minister, met with President Nixon.

Kissinger originally was due in Peking this month, but the conflict in the Mideast caused him to postpone the trip. Instead, he flew to Moscow Oct. 20 at the behest of Soviet Communist Party Leader Leonid I. Brezhnev to help develop a joint U.S.-Soviet cease-fire position at the United Nations.

The fact that Kissinger had plans in motion to visit Cairo even before Mrs. Meir saw the President added new evidence that the United States will press Israel to yield Egyptian territory captured after the initial U.N. cease-fire agreement of Oct. 22.

Chicago 7 Contempt Charges Asked To Be Dropped

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - Chicago 7 defense lawyers argued yesterday that contempt charges stemming from the conspiracy trial four years ago should be dismissed unless the judge and prosecutors of that trial also are tried for contempt.

The Chicago 7 were originally brought to trial on charges of conspiring to disrupt the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago. The seven defendants and two defense lawyers are being tried for contempt before Judge Edward T. Gignoux of U.s. District Court.

The nine were cited for contempt by Judge Julius J. Hoffman after the conspiracy trial, but the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the citations and returned the cases to the lower court for trial.

The government rested its case after presenting the transcript of the original trial and after five court reporters attested to its authenticity.

Leonard I. Weinglass of Newark, N.J., one of the two defense lawyers cited for contempt, argued before Judge Gignoux that unless Judge Hoffman and the two government prosecutors are chaged with contempt, the trial would violate the fairness doctrine of the equal protection clause of the Constitution.

Weinglass said the three men already have been judged guilty of contempt by the appeals court. The appeals court, in sending the case to the District Court, was highly critical of the conduct of Judge Hoffman and the prosecutors, Thomas A. Foran, former U.S. attorney, and Richard Schultz, an assistant to Foran.

Another defense lawyer, Morton Stavis, argued for dismissal of all 52 charges of contempt because the government provided no evidence other than the 23,000 pages of transcript from the conspiracy trial.

Stavis said the appeals court sent the case to the lower court to "give the government an opportunity to present proof of contempt...but the government deliberately chose not to come forward with any proof...and has chosen to rest on the same record...."

Stavis also tried to establish that the disorders during the conspiracy trial stemmed from Judge Hoffman's conduct at the outset of the trial. Judge Hoffman ordered four defense lawyers jailed the first day of the trial.

The conspiracy trial resulted in five defendants being convicted of crossing state lines to incite rioting at the time of the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago. All seven were acquitted of conspiracy to incite rioting.

The riot convictions later were reversed by an appeals court and the government dropped its prosecution of the charges.

Besides Weinglass, lawyer William M. Kunstler of New York City was cited for contempt, as were the original Chicago 7 defendants: David T. Dellinger, Rennie Davis, Jerry Rubin, Tom Hayden, Lee Weiner, Abbie Hoffman and John Froines.

Congress Castigates CIA

By JIM DAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress' first official Watergate report concludes that the CIA and its two top chiefs were "unwitting dupes" in supplying disguises for such improper acts as the burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

Rep. Lucien N. Nedzi, D-Mich., said "it is a little more difficult" to assess the CIA's resistance to being used to cover up the Watergate in the first weeks after the June 17, 1972, break-in at Democratic party headquarters.

Nedzi is chairman of the House intelligence subcommittee which issued the report yesterday.

Nedzi said "I'm personally troubled by the inconsistencies" in testimony by Vernon A. Walters, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, on whether he suggested a Cuban rather than CIA involvement could be used to cover up the break-in.

"But by and large there was resistance on the part of the CIA to becoming involved," Nedzi said at a news conference. "There is no objective evidence that there was a willingness to cooperate."

The 23-page report quotes Walters as first testifying to the subcommittee last May 16 that when former White House counsel John W. Dean III first pressed him for ideas he said: "Perhaps the Cubans who were anti-Castro might have had a hand in it but the CIA did not."

Watergate Aftermath Continues

WASHINGTON (AP) - Here at a glance are yesterday's Watergate-related developments:

TAPES-The White House and U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica reached agreement whereby the judge will hear in closed session presidential claims of privilege on portions of disputed Watergate tapes. White House lawyers want parts of the presidential tapes kept from the Watergate grand jury.

WATERGATE COMMITTEE-the Senate Watergate Committee agreed to try and renew an agreement cancelled by the White House that would have given the committee access to the presidential tapes. The agreement was withdrawn after Nixon decided to obey a court order and give the tapes to Sirica.

IMPEACHMENT-The House Judiciary Committee voted its chairman, Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., broad subpoena powers to aid in the ommittee's investigation of possible rounds for impeaching the President. In a Senate speech, Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., said Nixon should resign "for the common good."

SAXBE-The Cleveland Plain Dealer, quoting authoritive sources, said Sen. William P. Saxbe, R-Ohio, was about to be named to succeed Elliot L. Richardson as attorney general. A spokesman for Saxbe said the senator had discussed a possible appointment with White House aides but not with Nixon and quoted Saxbe as saying, "Until I do, that's where the matter stands."

Italian Marxists Warn Against Sex

By HILMI TOROS
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) - The Italian Marxist-Leninist party, a radical group left of the Communists, has issued strict sex directives that are causing frustration among cell members.

A party official acknowledged that only 30 per cent of the revolutionary party members have been able to live up to the official sex guidelines.

"One reason they fail," said Angelo Arvati, 30-year-old editor of the party publication, "is because of political differences between husbands and wives."

In a manual presented by Secretary-General Aldo Brandirali, the party made sexual harmony one of its chief dictums.

"Only in that way," Brandirali said, "can one be serene the day after and begin a new day of struggle for the ultimate victory - edification of socialism."

Besides sexual harmony, the party program had warned against sexual intercourse more than once a day, claiming:

"All that about virility and making love more than once in one night is a bourgeois myth and reflects the theory that women are sex objects."

Academic Hassles? Whitmore Has The Answers

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN

You are in the middle of the semester and things aren't going too smoothly for you, academically, that is. Maybe you should know the right procedure for taking care of your problems and therefore, avoid alot of hassles and running around. Here are some Whitmore HOW TO'S:

If for one reason or another you decide that UMass is not the place you want to be right now you can withdraw from the University. On Campus residents should see their Area Director who has the proper forms to be filled out. No money will be refunded for tuition, fees, room, etc. except if you have a meal ticket. In that case, refund for the remaining meals will be given.

Off Campus residents should go to 229 Whitmore which is the Resource Center for Non-Residents and see Randy Dahl or Helen Hill.

If you do withdraw and are wondering what your record for this semester will look like, according to the Registrar's Office, grades of WP or WF will be entered. The grade depends on your performance in class up to the time of withdrawal. This is the only time WP and WF are used.

If you have withdrawn from the University and decide you want to re-enter, readmission applications are available at the Registrar's Office. Spring semester applications should be in by November 1 and Fall semester applications by June 1. Readmission for students in good standing is in most cases automatic.

Students who voluntarily decide to move off campus, at this time in the semester, lose their room rent and security deposit. Students who decide to live off campus for next semester should notify the Housing Office of their decision during room choosing time in November in order to assure their security deposit refund.

If you want to drop a course you should see the Academic Dean of your school. Each school (ie. P.E., Psych, French, etc.) has a Dean. The list can be found in the Student Handbook. The Dean will have the necessary forms and tell you whose signatures you need. In many cases the Dean's Office will forward the forms to Whitmore and therefore, save you a trip. Your grade for a dropped course is F, unless the Academic Dean will retroactively backdate your form to October 5.

If an instructor will allow you to pick up a course now, the procedure for adding is the same as for dropping.

The matter of changing a pass-fail to a grade or a grade to pass-fail at this late date is usually not easy. But if you do decide to attempt the change, pick up the proper form at the Registrar's Office. Then go see your Academic Dean or Faculty Advisor prepared with a good reason for the change. The fact that you are doing poorer or better than you had expected will not justify the change. Examples of reasons that may be considered valid are illness or change of major, but this has to be discussed with your Dean or Advisor.

Q. The 'what's new' rotating sign that displays girls as objects, ie. without clothes, offends me. Could you please place it so if I desired my attention wouldn't be caught so much by it? Or else remove the Playboy, Penthouse, or recent Lampoon covers.

A. The sign in question is a rotating display in the front of the Campus Center Store. I went down to the store to check the display out and found the following magazines and items being advertised; MS, Penthouse, Viva, Rogets Thesaurus, two issues of National Lampoon, Warner Paperback Library, Personalized Calling Card, Pocket Calculators, and a Remington Hair Dryer.

I then talked to Bill Simpson, Assistant Manager of the Campus Center Store to find out how the display items are chosen. He explained to me that magazines such as Penthouse, Ms, etc. hire promotional agencies to push their product by methods as the rotating display unit. One particular promotional agency has rented space in the Campus Center Store for the unit that is now there. This agency sends magazine covers that they want to the store to be displayed. To the best of Bill's knowledge, the store is obligated to use these covers on the display. Some space is allowed for the store's own promotional use, therefore accounting for advertisements like the pocket calculator. The display changes about once a month. I agree that sexism in many forms does exist on this campus. The question is, should the Campus Center Store promote it? Obviously, the decision of what is and isn't sexist varies with each individual. One person might look at that display and not find it offensive at all, while another person would be offended by it. And still another person would look at the display and think only that it was a reflection of what the Campus Center Store had to offer in the line of magazines. There never seems to be one clear cut way to please everyone, and in the case of the store I think it can be looked at in two ways. The store exists to serve the University community, and that community has a wide range of interests. Yet on the other hand, the part of the community whose interests are being served that are offended by the display must also be considered.

Bill and I thoroughly discussed the alternatives in this situation. We decided that the best thing to do was to let the University community, that the store serves, decide the fate of the display. People who go into the store and look at the display and find it offensive should register a complaint at the Information Desk. If a substantial number of complaints are received the sign will be moved to a less obvious part of the store where it was before and received no complaints. If this is still not a satisfactory solution to many people, further action will be considered.

Q. What has happened to the T.V. on the bottom level of the Campus Center.

A. According to Dudley Bridges, Manager of Building Operations, the T.V. was a victim of vandalization. The control box in the front of the T.V. was ripped out of the system. The T.V. will be replaced, but probably in a different place. People watching the T.V. often turn the volume up so that it bothers people in the meeting rooms located behind the T.V. area. Because people have a right to listen to the T.V. at a fairly strong volume, and people have a right to have the conferences in the meeting rooms without being bothered by the T.V. volume, the logical answer seems to be to move the T.V. to a different location.

Besides the T.V. missing you may have also noticed missing cushions from the couches as well as no T.V. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. Two hundred cushions have been stolen (representing a loss of over $200). Many of the missing cushions are believed to be in dormitory rooms, but they cannot be retrieved without a search warrent. However, the cushions are being replaced.

The T.V. in the S.U. was being repaired and in the meantime was replaced with a brand new color set. This new color set was stolen from the S.U.

I asked Dudley what preventative measures would be taken in the future. He said that when these items are replaced, they will have to be bolted down as they should have been in the first place.

Correction: In the answer to last week's question on campus plumbers, I stated that if a crisis situation came up after 4:00 p.m. UMass would hire an outside plumber to do the work. Actually, UMass will call in their own plumbers and pay them over-time.

Confidential: Thanks to the person who put 50 cents in the "What's the Story?" box. But for those of you who don't have any spare change but plenty of problems or questions, drop them off in the box outside the Campus Center Store, send them through the campus mail to box 6, or bring them to the Ombudsman Office in room 919 Campus Center.

Culturnatives Clearinghouse Formed

If you are among the many who feel stifled by an inability to influence even the small portion of the world that you can call your own, a new group being formed may help provide an answer.

Culturnatives Clearinghouse is an experiment in information gathering and distribution. It will compile information about who has skills, abilities, knowledge, or, simply, ideas which would be useful to those who want to explore alternate lifestyles or cultural alternatives. The information will then be made available to the community in a variety of ways.

The first meeting of the Clearinghouse Task Force will be Thursday, Nov. 1, at 4:00 in 319 Hampshire House. Those who are interested in working on the task force but are unable to make this meeting are asked to call 545-2789 and leave their names.

Your Head

Father And Son Are Strangers

By DRS. ANDREW W. McCASHIN
and STEPHEN M. KEIN

Q. I am a 24 year old male graduate student with what is probably not a very unusual problem. Since I was 15 years old my relationship with my father has deteriorated gradually to a point where we are almost total strangers. Until recently this did not bother me, but during my last visit home I suddenly realized that he was growing quite old and that time for renewing our relationship was running out. I made some feeble attempts at talking with him but he really didn't respond. For the first time in almost ten years I experienced the distance between us with great sadness and even guilt. I realize that the information I have given is limited but perhaps you could offer some general suggestions on how and where one begins to re-establish a relationship with an alienated parent.

A. It is certainly true, as you suggest, that the problem you are struggling with is not an unusual one. The fact of it's common occurrence, however, does not detract from the hurt and guilt one experiences when he or she realizes that in many ways the close parent-child relationship no longer exists. The process of growing up requires that, to at least some extent, we push our parents away. It is a very difficult thing indeed, especially in a close family, to give up the sense of safety and warmth which characterizes the experiencing of childhood. The achievement of a sense of autonomy and adult identity requires the belief that we can take care of ourselves in a better and more satisfying manner than our parents can.

The intensity of the "adolescent rebellion", and the form it's expression takes depends, of course, on the individual personalities involved and on the dynamics of the family. One primary factor is the way in which parents express their concerns for the safety and well being of their children. Overprotective parents can subtley undermine their children's confidence in themselves making the thought of going it alone a terrifying one. In such situations adolescents and young adults sometimes need to almost totally withdraw from their parents in order to achieve a sense of independence. On the other hand parents who find it difficult to provide even minimal emotional support for their children often find themselves similarly neglected by their now independent and resentful offspring. Other factors involved include parental dominance in the area of values; religious, political, material lifestyle etc.

Lest all of this sound depressing, we can also say, that reconciliation in later life is as common as conflict in earlier years. It is often the case that things change for the better once young adults develop confidence in themselves as adults. And conversly, when parents finally acknowledge that they have full grown children, which in itself is no easy adjustment. There are no immediate techniques for achieving this. It is to make a rare event, for example, in which one good talk in itself changes an estranged relationship overnight. Begin by spending more time with your father. Allow things to develop in a natural and unforced manner. Gradually he will sense your new and more receptive attitude towards him and hopefully he will be able to reciprocate.

Debate Team Has Impressive Start

The UMass Debate Team got off to a great start this year with victories at the first two tournaments attended.

The team of John Cross and John Adams came away from the Washington and Jefferson Tournament with five wins and only three losses. Following close behind was the duo of Paul Goslin and Howard Steinberg with a record of 3-5. Encouraged by their wins the team of John Adams and John Cross set out the following weekend to a very difficult tournament and did another fantastic job.

With the tournament season in full swing the debate team decided not to let any other school get the jump on them. On the weekend of the 19th-21st the Brandeis Tournament was attended very successfully by the teams of Ken Becker and Jill Peltin, Paul Goslin and Howard Steinberg and Dave Kowal and Dave O'Brien, and this past weekend the University of North Carolina was the setting honorably represented by two more of our teams.

With fine and dedicated talent like this the Debate Team is looking forward to more and even greater victories in the near future.

Law Students Lobby For Impeachment Investigation

WASHINGTON (AP)-Several hundred law students and lawyers began lobbying Congress yesterday for the appointment of a Watergate special prosecutor and continued investigation of possible impeachment proceedings against Nixon.

Organizers said 350 persons, primarily students, kicked off the campaign by presenting petitions and legal memoranda to congressmen.

Robert Pietrzak, a third-year Columbia University student who acted as a spokesman, said, "We're not calling for impeachment per se at this point because we believe in due process of law, which Richard Nixon does not.

The law students came from Boston University, Catholic University, New York University, University of Pennsylvania, St. John's University, Tulane, University of Pittsburgh and the University of Virginia, organizers said. Other law schools are scheduled to lobby Congress later, they said.

Central Counseling Starts Survey

The Central Area Counseling Center, conveniently located in B2 Gorman and staffed 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursday, is now circulating a survey to the dorms in Central Area to determine the needs of the people in the Area. What is the survey, and the Center, all about?

--The Center is staffed by five professionals and ten undergraduates undergoing in-service training under the supervision of Parnell Hagerman.

--The Center is operating specifically to serve the needs of the people of Central Area.

--In order to determine those needs, a survey is being distributed through the Heads of Residence. Through the Needs Survey, the Residents of Central Area can direct the content and dimensions of the Center's function in the following areas:

1) Working directly in Dormitories; i.e. team building and workshops..

2) Resource Materials, like tapes, magazines, and books.

3) Basic Human Relations work, such as personal and group counseling.

It's is very important that residents of Central Area seriously consider the Needs Survey. Other than personal counseling, the Center will not begin to structure programming and materials until resuls of the survey are in; the directions of the Center are to be determined almost entirely on the needs and concerns expressed by the people of Central Area.

The Centeral Area Counseling Center is easily accessible to the whole Area. Its Supervisor and most of its undergraduate staff are drawn from the Area. It's open forty-three hours a week, and its direction is determineed by the Residents of the Area; it is indeed our Center.

Because of the numerous requests received by the Black Cultural Center, "Emperor Jones" starring Paul Robeson and "St. Louis Blues", the only movie that Bessie Smith ever made, will be shown again tonight at 8 p.m. at Thompson 104. This historic film festival, along with the unique memorabilia from the collection of film arcivist Charles Griffin, has generated much excitement and interest from the campus community. Also, the opening of the art exhibition and film festival attracted such far away people as Neville Richen, star of "River Niger" and Sheila Scott Wilkinson, actress from London. The participants of the film festival will be joined by one of the most important contemporary filmakers on Thursday--St. Clair Bourne, whose film "Let the Church Say Amen" will be shown on Friday.

People In The News

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP)-George Gallion was elected homecoming queen at Washburn University, but was deposed by the dean.

He said he ran as a protest because homecoming is "ridiculous." He said he was told he won 141 to 106 over Ann Alice Slover in the student balloting.

However, Dean of Students Lee Dodson ruled Gallion unqualified and gave the crown to Miss Slover. The 19-year-old sophomore from Topeka was crowned at Saturday's football halftime.

Dodson said he acted because student groups wouldn't, and after he consulted four dictionaries and people in the law school.

"You cannot...call a male a queen, unless you tear every word apart in the dictionary," ruled Dodson.

NE Employment Rises

BOSTON (AP) — The total number of nonfarm jobs in New England rose in September, according to the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Eendell D. MacDonald of the regional office reported that employment increased by 10,900 workers over the past month and 109,000 over the past year. The total number of nonfarm jobs is now 4,754,000.

Back-to-school sales pushed employment in retail trade to higher levels while local governments were adding workers for the reopening of schools. Transportation firms also benefited with contracts to transport school children.

Contract construction and the tourist-related service industries laid off workers as cooler weather brought a slowdown of construction activity and an end to the summer tourist season, the report said.

Employment in finance and in federal government fell as temporary summer employes returned to school.

Halloween Hazards: Some Treat, Others Trick

A little reflecting tape and treat inspection will help parents protect their children from Halloween hazards on their "trick or treat" walks tonight, authorities say.

"Make your small spooks' costumes of bright colors. You might even sew on some strips of relective tape. In the excitement of the occasion they might dart into the street," the American Medical Association advises.

In the drivers' interests, Iowa Public Safety Commissioner Michael Sellers has issued a warning to motorists to beware of any obstructions in the roads placed there by tricksters. He also said pumpkins lighted with candles should be kept away from flammable materials and flashlights should be used whenever possible.

Police in the metropolitan Washington area are asking parents to inspect all unwrapped Halloween candy their youngsters bring home. Officers said thee were few reports of tampered candy last year, but there were some incidents of razor blades in apples and drugs hidden in malted milk balls.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission in Washington urges parents to be sure costumes, masks, beards and wigs are made of fire resistant maerial. Parents should also accompany younger children "trick or treating."

Parents should also avoid plastic bags or masks that could restrict vision or breathing. The commission recommends cosmetics or charcoal as the safest makeup tools.

In Cowan, Tenn., Halloween dangers won't have much chance to materialize. A new ordinance requires all businesses in the town to close by 6 p.m. on Halloween and all unauthorized persons to be off the streets by 7:30 p.m.

Howard G. Betty, the city attorney, said the only persons exempted from the law are the police of the town of 1,700 and medical personnel. Vice Mayor Lawrence McAbee said the ordinance was adopted because outsiders who came to town last year and went on a spree of rock and egg throwing and littering.

Talk First

By DAVID EIBEL

Another conflagration has erupted and been quelled in the Middle East. The Arabs are claiming victory when twenty to thirty Egyptians are trapped on the east bank of the Suez Canal. Some experts in logic those Arabs. They're claiming a moral victory because they showed they could attack first, even though they attacked first in 1948. Can twenty five years make such a difference? The Israelis have once again won a war but in the Middle East there are no winners just little losers and big losers. The Arabs cannot and never will defeat the State of Israel whereas every battle Israel fights depletes its population of its best blood.

And now we move to the inevitable claims and counterclaims that characterize all postwar periods. In the aftermath of the most recent Middle East war, the Arabs with the omnipresent Russians (yes my friends, contrary to the dictates of the Third Worlders and others the Russians are involved in the Middle East) leading them on have shown little in the way of progressive suggestions for peace. Once again the Sadats, Heykals, and Haffezes are demanding (it is amazing how it has become acceptable for losers to demand) that Israel withdraw back to the pre-1967 lines and then the Arabs shall talk. (How nice of them) But, shouldn't the Arabs first remember that thousands of their fellows died just recently in yet another ill-timed attempt at defeating the Israelis, or are Arab memories so short? Do they hope to kill two birds with one stone and get Israel to retreat two leaps in one bound? It sounds like a new type of all-inclusive insurance policy.

Never in the history of Mankind has so much been expected of so tiny a country. The Israelis have literally held the fort for four wars in twenty-five years with the hope of peace some impossible-to-grasp oasis in some mythical desert. And after fighting those four wars they are once again expected by the real agressors and an irrational, useless United Nations to pull back before negotiations commence. At no point in history has anything like that been asked of any nation. The United States did not withdraw from Vietnam before talking peace. The Russians refused to withdraw from Austria before exacting a brutal price out of the Austrians for their independence. To those who consider the Soviets a non-exploitive people the price was 150 million dollars, 60 percent of crude oil production and mineral rights. Yet these same countries expect Israel to pull back before negotiations commence.

What guarantees do the Israelis have that the Arabs will not attack them rather than talk after a pullback? "Big Power" guarantees you say? Their flimsiness has been repeatedly proven. In 1967 the "Big Powers" guaranteed Israel the right to exist until the hot lines had short-circuited but the guarantees couldn't deter Gamel Abdel Nasser, from his appointed tasks.

There cannot be a peace in the Middle East until the Arabs sit down at the same table with the Israelis and talk to ensure that the fruits of peace will bloom permanently in the Middle East. No nation should be expected to withdraw to previous borders — unsafe at any point of view — prior to negotiations and the signing of a peace treaty.

If the Arabs choose to continue spewing their bombast, demanding prior Israeli withdrawal they shall spew until an infinite number of Ramadans have passed.

There can be "peace with honor" — peace with a negotiated treaty or no peace at all.

Screw U.

Announcer: Welcome folks, to the University of Massachusetts' semesterly game show, "Screw the Students". For our first contestant, Ms. Susy Snowflake will air her complaints to see if she's eligible for that grand prize. Welcome, Susy.

Susy: Thank you. My complaint is as follows. I live off-campus in Belchertown. Last semester the free bus system went right by my house. The reason why I moved off in the first place is that it's cheaper than living in the dorm. Now that the buses don't run down the road to my house, I'll have to buy a car. I can't hitch because I have a lot of night classes and I've been raped three times already. I don't really have the money to buy a car, and I'll have to take out a loan just to pay the parking fee, that is, if I can get a space.

Announcer: Thank you, Susy. Our board of judges, the gracious Student Senate, has awarded you with third prize. For your efforts, Susy, you will receive a new bus system direct to Belchertown. However, the stipulations of your prize are that the bus service will be very limited. In fact, the times that the bus will run will be during the most inconvenient times so that your whole day will evolve around waiting for the goddam bus. What do you think of that, Susy?

Susy: I think it stinks, but it's better than nothing. I'll just have to get used to writing between lampposts while the buses are running. Thanks, Senate.

Announcer: And thank you Susy. Our next contestant is Mr. Joe Schmow. Joe step right up and tell us just what your complaint is.

Joe: Well, you see I'm Jewish and I was brought up in a strict Orthodox tradition. The Dining Commons serve all that goyishe drek at every meal. I tried to get out my meal ticket, but the University rules state that I have to have one. I don't like eating in large crowds either, all the confusion in the Dining Commons rushes me through my meal and I never feel well after a meal.

Announcer: Thank you, Joe. Our second distinguished panel of judges, the Food Services Dept. has awarded you second prize. You will receive, Joe Schmow, a complimentary week's supply of chits good at any Basic Foods Dining Common. Basic Foods as you know, serves no meat, so you don't have to worry about trif meals, Joe. You'll just have to worry about protein substitutes.

Joe: But I'm anemic and I need meat.

Announcer: Well, it's take it or leave it. And now let's introduce our last contestant, Willy Whizkid. Let the folks at home know what your gripe is.

Willy: Umm. I'm a graduating senior in the Honors Program and everytime I pre-register for a course the computer sends me a card saying "over-subscribed." So for the past three-and-a-half years I've been taking all electives. Now I'm supposed to graduate with a degree in microbiology and I can't get into the intro course.

Announcer: Thanks, Willy. The panel of judges, the Academic Deans, have awarded you with the Grand Prize. Congratulations, Willy. For your efforts and graciousness of appearing on our program, you have been effortlessly and graciously been thrown out of school. Good luck, Willy and good-bye.

So tune in, folks, when we return next semester to see how we Screw the Students.

Tricky Treat

"Well, folks, here's the event that everyone in Washington has been waiting for — the White House Halloween Party. This is Howard Cosell, and I'm dressed up as a mushroom today to give you a bird's eye view of behind the scenes at the nation's capitol this Halloween eve.

"Of course, the big question here tonight is what costume the President has chosen for this momentous occasion. There has been much speculation concerning this issue, and when I had lunch with Ronald Ziegler yesterday, he told me the President still hasn't come to any decision, but that he was reviewing the possibilities and would make a concrete decision by tonight."

"While we're waiting for the President to arrive, it might be interesting to circle around this gathering and speak with some of the guests. And here comes somebody dressed as a Munchkin, and I think I recognize that as being the distinguished Speaker of the House, Carl Albert. Excuse me, sir. Excuse me, are you, in truth, Speaker Carl Albert?"

"Yes, I am, but I can't seem to understand why my costume isn't fooling anyone. Is my make-up smeared or something?"

"No, Mr. Speaker, I think it must be your distinctive voice. Hold on! I think I see a familiar bunny rabbit over there. Excuse me, Mr. Rabbit, didn't I distinctly recognize you as former Vice President Spiro Agnew?"

"Yes, you're correct, Howard."

"Tell me, Mr. Agnew. How do you enjoy this party in the wake of your stunning resignation and Grand Jury indictment?"

"I'm enjoying myself, Howard, but there's a carrot over there that keeps accusing me of biting his nose, and I'm just not guilty."

"Yes, we know you're not. Wait! I think I see John Erhlichman and Bob Haldeman dressed up as Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. And over there, I can see George McGovern dressed as Don Quixote over there in the corner. And here comes Henry Kissinger dressed up as Sir Lancelot. It should only be moments before the President and Mrs. Nixon arrive."

"As the tension builds, it's my duty to remind you that all tapes and documents of this event belong solely to the White House and any publication or rebroadcast of these tapes or the events on them is first subject to the written consent of the White House."

"The Presidential limousine has just pulled up and some people appear to be getting out. Hold one moment!! I think I see Pat. Yes I do see Pat! She's wearing an old Republican cloth coat and curly hair as one might have seen back in the thirties. She's being followed out of the car by a gorilla. No wait! It's the President! It is the President!! Yes, the President has arrived and he and the First Lady are dressed as King Kong and Fay Wray. Yes folks, you're seeing it live on ABC as Richard Nixon, dressed up as the monster, King Kong, is here. Yes folks, the monster, Nixon, has arrived."

Clutzes I Have Known

By BOB ROSSMAN

Did you ever trip over the crack in a sidewalk-or how about tripping over a blade of grass? Well, don't feel bad, you've got plenty of company. As a matter of fact, you'd be surprised to realize just how many clutzes there are on this campus alone. This is not to say that UMass is a gathering place for the clumsy, but we probably have as good a percentage as anywhere else.

I did choose UMass for a specific purpose, however. This is a university geared to educating the young people and preparing them for later life. So what do we learn? To answer that question I will describe a math teacher I once had. During the course of a semester he did such brilliantly coordinated things as tripping over wastebaskets, breaking the chalk every time he wrote on the board, and (get this one, it's really good!) while in the act of trying to be cool, flipping the eraser before using it, and ending up with beautiful eraser patterns all over his traditional blue suit. Unfortunately, more students learned this type of behavior than math.

Lack of coordination is not only a physical detriment, but a mental one as well. One example is when you are in the process of being verbally torn to shreds and you formulate in your head this great retort that will absolutely make your attacker want to shrivel up and crawl into a hole for eleven years. The only problem is that by the time he's finished, your answer always comes out, "Oh, yeah?" Or how about the time you finally crack the barrier, and say something in class, something really important, and everybody cracks up?

My friend and I were going to start a school for clods. Mental classes would be included, but we'd probably concentrate on the physical aspects. The school itself is divided up into three classes. We would take people who fit the following descriptions and help them improve their technique.

Beginner:

—People who can't walk and chew gum at the same time

—People who walk into doors and walls

—People who rest their head in their hand and gracefully miss the desk with their elbow.

Intermediate:

—Guys that walk into the Ladies' room (and vice versa).

—People who put their clothes on backwards.

Advanced (some instruction needed here):

—Falling on the floor and missing.

—Falling down the up escalator all day.

There is at least a little bit of clumsiness in all of us, but it's on too much of an amateur level. Therefore, the school of the four C's (Clods, Clutzes, and Clumsy Clowns) is for you. We guarantee results.

The next person you see with bubble gum all over his face and hair and bruised shins from miscounting the number of steps on that last flight of stairs, look up to him. He is a diligent and successful student. If you can't make that claim, you must be some sort of normal person. I feel sorry for you. You must feel awfully out of place.

Letters To The Editor

Next Vietnam?

To The Editor:

Some people think that the U.S. should stay away from Israel; that it might become another Vietnam. If they don't, it might become another Auschwitz.

After World War II, there were a lot of displaced Jews. The U.N. got together to try to figure out what to do with them. Few countries, U.S. included, wanted them. They wanted to send them someplace on one else wanted, perhaps Africa — but since they wanted to go to Palestine, why not send them there? Then they would be happy, and leave everyone else alone.

So they put them there. If the U.S. hadn't put them there, they wouldn't be fighting now. But they are there, and therefore the U.S. has a duty to support them — for when their lives become worthless, no one else's is worth anything either.

In addition, that is the only country in the Mid-east that supports the U.S.'s interests, and contrary to what the Third World Students think, the U.S. can't shut itself up in a box — it must live in this world, and Russia and its satelites pose a potential threat to the U.S. and its interests.

What Menachin Rosenberger said in his letter was 100 percent true — but he left out some things. There are a few other misconceptions the Third World Students have. They condemn the U.S. for being imperialistic and capitalistic, but neglected to state that Russia, and the Egyptian countries are just as imperialistic and capitalistic —(except that there's only one company - the government.) They abhor capitalism like the plague — but that is the only system that can operate on a large scale. The communist countries are capitalist — the government makes a bundle and gives some part of it to the populace exactly like the corporations in the U.S.

The Israeli government is accused of being racist. It in fact is not. Some of the citizens do discriminate against the Oriental Jews, but they are, for the most part, uneducated and lazy, much like some of this nation's poor. Who would hire them when better is available?

The other type of discrimination is against the Palestinians, who, being Arabs, are potential enemies. It would be madness to give them all the same rights (such as holding public office) as are given to others.

There are also people that think the U.S. shouldn't send Israel equipment — to quote a sticker — "The Mideast needs peace, not phantoms". Does the Mideast need MIGs for peace? It was still getting them, and no one objected to that!

So my friends, consider BOTH sides. When only one is considered, it causes wars.

We Call For...

To The Editor:

We empathize with the Jewish peoples, understanding the historical brutality and genocide perpetrated by the fascist and imperialist machines of Nazi Germany. The struggle against anti-Semitism must today be fought. However, Zionism and support of the sub-imperialist State of Israel is not the basis upon which to fight anti-Semitism. The political theory of Zionism holds that anti-Semitism is incurable among the gentile peoples, and that the state of Israel is the one and only homeland of the Jewish populace. This divorces the Jews from the struggle against anti-Semitism in their native countries. An attack upon Zionism, or the Zionist state of Israel must not be seen as an attack upon the PEOPLE of Israel, or the Jewish people. This differentiation between the state and its population must be emphasized. We see a grave injustice occurring to the Israeli people, again fighting another war. It is not a war of the people but a war of the Zionist state acting under the influence of the U.S. imperialists. The U.S. government profits greatly from the sale of such diseased tools of destruction as Phantom jets, furthermore U.S. corporate monopolies seek to obtain oil rights to the Arab oil fields if the State of Israel overtakes these lands. Four days after the murder of the democratic forces of Allende the Zionist State recognized the Chilean Junta which had broadcast statements to the effect of hanging a Jew from every lamppost. We see again a difference between the interests of the Zionist State and the Jewish peoples. The Zionist State has denied native Palestinians legal rights, they have been removed from their homes, moved into tents or concentration camps. This racism and imperialism is not in the interest of the Jewish peoples but only in the interest of the State of Israel and U.S. imperialists. The struggle against anti-Semitism cannot be fought by racism or imperialism, those were the tactics of the oppressors of the Jews.

We call for the remittance of all lands taken by the State of Israel since the 1947 U. N. charter. We call for peace between the Arab peoples and the peoples of Israel. We call for human rights and equality of the Palestinian peoples of Israel. We call for the fight against anti-Semitism, and against the foreign policy of the Zionist State of Israel.

A Monumental Waste

By MARK VOGLER

WASHINGTON, D.C. — While Americans have their eyes and ears tuned in to the daily unravelings of Watergate, little attention is paid to the billions of dollars wasted in the national defense budget.

It may be disturbing to the average American who comes to the realization that eight times as much money is spent for defense than education, twenty-seven times as much than for national resources and the environment, 16 times as much than for agriculture and rural development and the same proportion than for community development and housing.

What — perhaps — may be even more disturbing is the approach the administration takes in justifying the 81.1 billion dollars going to defense out of the entire national budget ($271. billion).

When over 30 cents of the national tax dollar finances the area of defense, Americans certainly deserve a catergorical breakdown of where the money goes and a resonable explanation. Yet, for the administration to respond is like pulling teeth.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wisconsin and one noted for his advocated cutbacks of defense spending, once pressed Budget Director Robert Mayo on this point.

Mayo was evasive — typical of the Nixonites who have blatantly resorted to coverup tactics more so than any past administration:

"The President's flexibility is better served by not getting into a debate on what is and what is not in the defense budget."

That's not a very responsible answer. Americans are entitled for a more informative explanation. President Nixon has maintained all along that "any reduction in defense expenditures will weaken America's bargaining situation in important negotiations. The same Mr. Nixon has lambasted Congress for "busting the budget". Meanwhile social oriented programs are nonchalantly cutback along with other programs vital to the needs of the people.

It's interesting to note that the Pentagon civilian labor force is as large as that of the Agriculture, Treasury, HEW and the Postal Service combined. Yet, Mr. Nixon has made it perfectly clear that his goal of reducing federal spending does not extend to the Defense Department.

Cutting back the fat in the Pentagon would be most appropriate. One military expert has suggested that the number of generals and admirals be cut in half and that their staffs also be eliminated. That might be a good start.

Sizing up this Pentagon bureaucracy a bit further, 56 percent of the defense budget goes for personnel. The Pentagon employs about one civilian for every two servicemen.

Last November, even President Nixon conceded the Pentagon's "masses of civilian employes who are getting in each other's way...... are going to have to take a thinning down."

The argument used that we must pay the price to have a strong national defense — and that it requires beefing up our nuclear armaments annually — is not realistic.

Does it really matter if the Russians even off with us in the race for technologically advanced weapons?

Both American and the Soviet Union already have the weapons needed to destroy the world. Money is being wasted on stockpiles of nuclear weapons — which will probably never be used — except to end the world.

The abuse of military servants has been going on for a while and only has begun to surface. How can DOD justify the training of aides for the military brass to mow lawns, shine shoes, go shopping and performing other errands more related to a maid's work than military service? Certainly the Office of Management and Budget could find a better useage for the millions of dollars wasted here.

Retirement ceremonies — though very miniscule when compared to the overall waste in dollars and cents — are much too elaborate for the American taxpayer.

When a taxpaying worker retires from a company after 40 years, he is lucky if he receives the traditional $50 watch. Then the retiring Air Force general is feted with a parade; perhaps a flyby of 12 F-106's and 16 F-101's, B-57's, F-104's and T-33's flown by Air Force and Canadian pilots; not to mention the reception and gifts. Nothing's too expensive for the tastes of the retiring brass.

"There are 375 major generals in the Army, Air Force and Marines. If all the other generals and flag officers of our military are treated equally, the amount spent annually for retirement ceremonies must be staggering," suggests Sen. Proxmire.

Last year, America was spending $7 to $8 billion in Vietnam. The country is not spending that $7 to $8 billion now, yet the overall defense budget is $4.7 billion more. Maybe it's time citizens questioned the senses of a defense-minded administration. There's certainly evidence to believe DOD fosters a monumental waste.

Arabs In Flight

To The Editor:

To the Arab gentleman who so vociferously objected to my 10-30 column, specifically to the illusion to "Arab In Flight", I would like to clear my intent. I did not mean it as a racial slur. If you took it as such I apologize. I have respect for the Arab people as I do for all people. I was simply referring to those Arabs, called "courageous liberators" by their own nations, who found it heroic to attack Israel on her most holy day of the year, Yom Kippur, thus desecrating this day for Jews. To me the attack on this day when most Israelis were fasting and praying was a cowardly act, and it was this act coupled with military failure, culminating in the encirclement of the Egyptian Third Army, that I was referring to. Furthermore I see this struggle not as a struggle between an imperialistic white group and a poor Third World group, but as a struggle between National groups, devoid of racial and Marxist ideology which the radical left is so fond of. Therefore I do not consider myself a racist, and my remarks to the subject were not made with a racist intent. It is a pernicious attitude, moreover, that you have in refusing not only to rationally discuss the subject but even to submit a Letter to the Editor. It is typical of the narrow mindedness self-righteousness that pervades the Arab movement, that refuses to recognize Israel's right to live, the Jews' right to existence and basic human needs. And so it is in a spirit of condescension that I reply. My gut reaction to your objective was to ignore it, feeling that it was invalid, but upon pondering the subject, it seems a sinister and dangerous perspective to view the Middle East conflict as a racial Third World struggle because we Jews have suffered too long as a result of racial connotations.

Halloween Story

To The Editor:

The tradition of goblins and witches and other supernatural paraphernalia has always accompanied the celebration of Halloween. Today is that hallowed day and I find myself reflecting on experiences involving my encounters with these beings. To the best of my remembrance the following is true and can be verified by many witnesses.

In the summer of 1968, my family along with another family of friends rented an old whaling captain's home on Nantucket Island. We quickly discovered that the house was very unique; it was haunted. The first to discover this was the mother of the family of friends. She awoke in the middle of the night and saw the mattress of the empty bed next to hers ascend and descend as if someone were jumping up and down. She did not reveal this the next morning for fear of alarming the rest of us. Her thoughtfulness was shortly overriden as we all became personally affected by similar circumstances.

My usually lethargic, ancient Basset Hound would spend hours chasing what we thought was nothing up and down the stairs, barking ferociously. We'd shake our heads, not wanting to believe the situation, and laugh at the dog's obvious senility.

The strange fear all the children had of being caught alone in the house. One day my brother was, and when we returned he was nearly speechless in his expressed fear of events that happened. There was a cupola on the roof of the house which all of the kids had made into a "pad." There were stairs leading to it from the third floor. My brother up there alone when he heard distinct footsteps come up the stairs and stop outside the door. He waited until he got the nerve up and heaved open the door, darted down the three flights of stairs, and into the street. He saw nothing (probably because his eyes were closed.)

-the night no one slept on the third floor (which was locked and violent banging and loud crashes erupted. The next morning when we crept up the stairs we found the furniture completely rearranged from the night before. Following this, we all were believers.

-People would talk on the telephone and time and time again, the only extension (which was in a room that hadn't been opened in years) would be picked up and heavy breathing and mumbling would be heard.

-Clergymen visited the house and were convinced that demons existed within. They warned us for our safety.

All these events, along with too many others to mention, convicted everyone to the belief in ghosts. However, one event took place that turned our conviction to fanaticism. We had guests for the weekend and due to the lack of beds, I was forced to sleep in the room that had been shut off for years. In the middle of the night I was awakened abruptly. I peered over to filing cabinet across the room only to see an irradiant skull illuminating the room. As calmly as I could , I got up, walked to the bathroom, locked its door, and slept on the floor the rest of the night.

What happened the next night is the tour de force. When I told the others of the preceding night, they insisted on investigation. We all went into that room and cooly sat down. I started speaking to the air of the room, "If there is a force here, give us a sign, show us your power. Convince us for good. Take the books on the radiator and drop them to the floor."

At that moment, as those words left my mouth, the books on the radiator ascended in mid air, went horizontally away and fell on the floor. Never have I seen such fear as in all of as we screamed and leaped down whole flights of stairs, panicking to get away.

So concluding this story, I warn all of to beware of big, old houses as you're trick or treating tonight, you might get more than you expect.

Palestinian-Arab Struggle

To The Editor:

There will be a rally in support of the Palestinian-Arab struggle, Wed., Oct. 31, at 12:00 noon in front of S.U. (in case of rain, inside the S.U.).

The Committee in Defense of the Palestinian-Arab Struggle was formed on October 25, as the audience, after attending a forum on the roots of the Middle East Conflict, expressed the necessity for further action. This is an ad hoc committee formed by members of the Arab Students' Organization, the Third World Students, the Young Socialist Alliance, the African Student Association, the Union of Black American Students, and the Young Workers Liberation League. It welcomes the participation of any group or individuals who share with the Committee the belief in the necessity of a just solution in the Middle East.

The aim of the Committee is both to inform the American people as to the nature of the Middle East conflict and to organize concrete action. We attempt to get concerned people to participate in making America realize that the Palestinians and Arabs are fighting a just cause in the face of Zionist aggression, a cause that essentially favors the concept to a democratic secular state, where all people can live as equals regardless of race or religion.

Once again the true nature of American involvement is obscured by lies from the U.S. government. It says that the U.S. is protecting a state from outside aggression. In reality it is supplying arms for Israel to fight a war on Arab lands. It says that the U.S. is protecting freedom and democracy. In reality it is propping up a state that denies citizenship to those born inside its borders and confiscate their lands. And it says that the U.S. is protecting the Jews. The Jews can never be safe under the expansionist-Zionist State of Israel whose very existence depends upon its ability to take over land from surrounding Arab countries.

Constant Israeli expansionism subjects the Jewish masses to the antagonism of the Arab masses, an antogonism which was never present before Zionist growing presence in the area. The Arab-Jewish friendship is a purely Western phenomenon.

Therefore, we urge the American people to demand that their government stop fueling the Middle East Crisis by pouring arms and money into the State of Israel. The oppression of one people cannot be ended by the oppression of another, and the freedom for all peoples in the Middle East rests on the American people preventing their involvement in another war in which they don't belong and which can only lead to eventual super-power confrontation and nuclear war. For these reasons we believe it is in the interests of all people concerned to join us in defending the Palestinian-Arab struggle in restoring peace, and that to the American people, peace abroad is equitable with peace at home.

U.S. OUT OF THE MIDDLE EAST! SUPPORT THE PALESTINIAN-ARAB STRUGGLE!

The Committee In Defense of the Palestinian-Arab Struggle

Cable TV Workshop To Be Held

The regulatory framework as it applies to franchised and unfranchised communities.

Local characteristics which affect the economic viability of planned or existing systems.

Tradeoffs involved in planning a new system or extending the capabilities of an old one.

Problems and possibilities inherent in the recertification process.

Techniques of utilization, such as local origination and public access programming.

Health Education

Nurse Practitioner Explained

What is a College Health Nurse Practitioner?

The nurse practitioner at the University of Massachusetts Health Services is a Registered Nurse who has been especially educated to give primary health care to college students. A nurse practitioner's education includes formal classwork presented by University of Massachusetts Health Services' doctors, as well as several months of on-the-job training under the direct supervision of a physician.

This course enables the nurse practitioner to refine basic knowledge and skills and to acquire some new skills of physical assessment. Thus, with the skills of physical assessment, the nurse practitioner can perform the initial evaluation and screening of many types of health problems and is able to diagnose and treat certain predetermined problems of minor illnesses according to established protocol. Health teaching and preventive care are other important aspects of the role of the nurse practitioner.

The nurse practitioner works closely with the Health Services' physicians and consults with them anytime there is a need for more expertise or advice on a more complex problem. A physician is always available to the nurse practitioner for this purpose. Quality of care is insured through frequent evaluations by the physician. Preference for care by a physician is respected if specifically requested by the student.

The nurse practitioner program has stimulated and challenged our nurses by expanding their scope of nursing practice, has facilitated the handling of out-patients in a manner to provide optimum treatment within reasonable waiting time, and has given our physicians more time to devote to more complicated diagnostic problems.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

This is National Magic Day, a time when magicians the worold over honor the memory of Harry Houdini. He was an Aries who, during his lifetime, was the greatest name in show business. Houdini was a pioneer, a master escape artist, magician and the kind of showman who packed theaters in capitals around the globe. Houdini was fascinated not only with illusions, escapes and sleight-of-hand but with psychic phenomena, spiritualism and the mantic arts and sciences. Houdini reportedly investigated astrology and his findings were favorable. His birthdate was April 6, 1874. He died Oct. 31, 1926.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Progress may be slow. There are obstacles to overcome. Many delays are due to those who fear to change direction, method. Capricorn could play significant role. Deal gingerly with older individuals. Don't bypass those in authority.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Taurus message. Avoid rushing. Finish what you start. Relative may appear supersensitive. Ride with tide. Look beyond the immediate. Perceive potential. If this you do, you create atmosphere for ultimate achievement.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New approach is necessary. Sticking to same groove proves wasteful. Move with the times. Be aware of trends, cycles. Mate, close associate has money question, problem. Be open-minded enought to discuss and explore alternatives.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Aries message. Maintain low profile. Listen and learn. Put off direct action. Instead, take ring roads. Being too specific would create unnecessary tension. Know it and act in disciplined, mature manner. You'll be happier as result.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get what you want through "light touch." Means don't insist, bully or throw weight around. Sense of humor proves valuable ally. Gemini, Sagittarius persons could figure prominently. Highlight versatility. There is more than one way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be spending too much for too iittle. Know it; do something about it. Taurus, Libra persons could be in picture. Domestic situation needs adjusting. In making purchase of household or luxury item, be selective.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be perceptive. Accept need for change. Be ready for variety of experiences which could invovle Gemini, Virgo persons. Accent is on revising, tearing down for purpose of reconstruction. Member of opposite sex is impressed and says so.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Low key dominates. Means you may feel as if you are moving in circles rather than via direct path. Relative might be in mood to argue. Draw line. Don't respond in manner which later requires apology. You will understand.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money question is resolved if you are realistic. Don't expect something for nothing. Know difference between actuality and wishful thinking. Discern motives. All may not be what appears on surface. Dig.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You make headway despite obstacles. Sense of timing becomes wonderful ally. You sense what to do and when to do it. New contact will be more important than might be imagined. Older person, perhaps of your own sign, plays significant role.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You reach beyond current limitations. Much that was hidden is likely to come to light. Check behind the scenes. Finish task that has been "hanging on." Be thorough. Breakthrough indicated in your favor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some friends fall out. Don't become inextricably involved. Strive to maintain neutral stance. Leo, Aquarius, Taurus persons could be involved. Emotions tend to dominate. Think before committing yourself to action.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are frank, direct, capable of overcoming obstacles to achieve goal. In December, you have chance for new start, valuable contacts, outlet for creative abilities. You attract persons born under scorpio and Aquarius. Very few persons know the real you. You have lust for life. You also have innate ability to heal.

Do Guinea Pigs Smoke?

By TONY GRANITE

HOW TO KICK THE SMOKING HABIT FOREVER is the subject of a doctoral study at Indiana U., where a grad student is experimenting with alternatives to write about in a dissertation.

The Indiana Daily Student tells about it in a piece titled, "Can habit be kicked?".

Researcher David Richter is convinced that if he can discover the things that smoking expresses, he may be able to offer alternative ways of expressing those feelings "if they are feelings".

Richter is doing his dissertation in counseling. He is advertising for smokers as guinea pigs.

FREEDOM FOR PETS has been declared at UCal-Davis, which is now called "the most doggedly liberal school in the University of California system."

According to an AP dispatch, "A student can bring his dog to the university, provided that other residents of his dormitory floor vote to accept him and his roommate is also willing."

The dog has to dine alone in his room, but he can go to class, if the professor approves.

UCD also offers a class called "Companion Animals."

Weaver Finally Named Manager Of The Year

By GORDON BEARD
Associated Press Sports Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — Earl Weaver of the Baltimore Orioles, somewhat miffed in the past at being overlooked, humbly accepted his award Tuesday as American League Manager of the Year.

"It's nice to have," Weaver said, "but I wish it would have come in a year when we were at least American League champions. I don't feel we were losers, though. We did win the division.

The Orioles have won four divison titles in Weaver's first five full seasons as manager, and have played at a .617 pace, 543 victories against 337 defeats, since he replaced Hank Bauer on July 11, 1968.

The Orioles won more than 100 games three consecutive years while capturing pennants in 1969-70-71, but Weaver was bypassed by sports writers and broadcasters participating in the annual Associated Press poll.

Weaver eventually said the award didn't mean that much to him, and that he didn't think about if often. But he said it frequently enough to indicate otherwise.

After the Orioles bounced back from a third-place finish in 1972, however, and won by eight games this season, the pollsters made Weaver a landslide winner.

The 43-year-old skipper was given 170 votes, easily outdistancing the 91 compiled by runner-up Jack McKeon of the Kansas City Royals.

Dick Williams, who quit after directing the Oakland A's to a second straight World Series title, finished third at 41, followed by Del Crandall of the Milwaukee Brewers with 12.

Chuck Tanner of the Chicago White Sox, last year's winner, received one vote-as did Frank Quilici of the Minnesota Twins, Ralph Houk of the New York Yankees, Bobby Winkles of the California Angels and Billy Martin, who managed both the Detroit Tigers and Texas Rangers.

They look like they're in love, but then, some people will do anything to win. Here Bruce Bannon of the Dolphins stops Patriot Mack Herron after a 25-yard kickoff return.

Barred From Locker Room

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots of the National Football League said Tuesday they will continue to bar woman sportscaster Barbara Borin from the team's locker room at Schaefer Stadium.

Ms. Borin, who covers weekend sports for television station WNAC, has attempted unsuccessfully to get into the Patriots' locker room after all five of the teams home games this year.

Mel Bernstein, news director for the TV station, said WNAC is not interested in getting her into the locker room "from a purient standpoint."

"We want her to have a crack at talking to the coach and the players. Because she is barred from the locker room, we believe she is placed at a competitive disadvantage," he said.

Bernstein said that WNAC has not insisted that Ms. Borin enter the dressing room but that a room adjacent to the locker room be set aside for her.

Bernstein said a similar arrangement has been worked out for Ms. Borin with the Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association and the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League.

A spokesman for the Patriots said no such room is available at Schaefer Stadium.

He said Ms. Borin is welcomed in another room where New England Coach Chuck Fairbanks holds post-game news conference.

The spokesman said Fairbanks "does not want a woman in the locker room when 47 to 50 men are undressing and taking showers."

He said Fairbanks has taken the action "for the protection of the players."

Viking Boss In NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — "We're the only unbeaten team around, but we're only half finished," Minnesota's Carl Eller said succinctly.

The first half of the National Football League season has been perfect for the Vikings. The pressure in the second half will build unbearably as they try to maintain their perfect record — but it's the kind of pressure a team likes to look forward to.

The Los Angeles Rams, Miami Dolphins, Pittsburgh Steelers and the rest of the NFL's divisional leaders all have something to look forward to as well, namely the inside track on the playoff route.

For some others — the surprise teams of the year like the New Orleans Saints and Buffalo Bills — the season is grinding along with hopes of "wild-card playoff berth" still glimmering.

And for still others, like the San Diego Chargers, New York Giants and Houston Oilers, the long season is already shot.

All the Vikings need is three more victories in their remaining seven games to clinch their divisional title. "But nobody's going to stand up and say, 'Hell, we've got this thing clinched already,'" says Coach Bud Grant. "Granted, we're thinking about the playoffs, but the way we're thinking about it is that we've got to keep on improving so that we'll be at the top of our game by then."

Seaver Cops Second Cy Young Award

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Seaver of the New York Mets became the first non-20-game winner to capture the Cy Young Award Tuesday when he was voted the outstanding National League pitcher of 1973 by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Seaver, who posted a 19-10 record in anchoring the National League champions' pitching staff, received 10 first-place votes and 71 points in beating out reliever Mike Marshall of Montreal, who got nine first-place ballots and 54 points.

Ron Bryant of San Francisco, 42-12 and the league's only 20-game winner this past season, was third with three first-place votes and 50 points.

The other two first place votes from a committee of two writers from each of the league's two cities went to Cincinnati's Jack Billingham, who got 30 points. He was followed by Don Sutton of Los Angeles, Fred Norman of Cincinnati and Dave Giusti of Pittsburgh.

No candidate was named on all 24 ballots. Seaver was picked on 21, Bryant on 18 and Marshall and Billingham on 14 each.

Five points were awarded for a first-place vote, three for a second and one for a third. "I really didn't think I'd win it," said Seaver, who became the fourth pitcher to win more than one Cy Young Award. "It really was a surprise because so much importance is placed on 20 victories. But all the other numbers were there and I am glad the voters noticed them."

The 28-year-old right-hander, who also won the award in 1969, led the league with 251 strike-outs and a 2.08 earned-run average. He pitched 290 innings, had 18 complete games in 36 starts, posted three shutouts and gave up 219 hits and 64 walks.

Marshall's finish was the highest ever for a relief pitcher in Cy Young voting, Marshall appeared in 92 games for Montreal, had a 14-11 record and saved 31 games. He had a hand in 45 of the 7 games won by the Expos.

The Cy Young Award was established in 1956, when Don Newcombe of the Brooklyn Dodgers won it, and there was only one winner for both leagues through 1966. It was split in 1967, with Mike McCormick of San Francisco winning in the National League and Jim Lonborg of Boston in the American.

The American League Cy Young winner will be announced Nov. 7.

The "Hawk" Takes A Walk

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday acquired star forward Connie Hawkins, hampered so far this season by injuries, from the Phoenix Suns for holdout forward Keith Erickson and the Lakers' second-round choice in the 1974 National Basketball Association draft.

Erickson, who was played in the league eight years with San Francisco, Chicago and Los Angeles, refused to report to the Lakers this fall unless paid more money, but the club said the trade was not contingent upon his playing for Phoenix.

Hawkins, 31, 6-foot-8 and 219 pounds, has been in the NBA four years following two in the American Basketball Association. His NBA statistics include a scoring average of 20.7 per game. His entry into pro ball was delayed because in 1960 his name was mentioned in the collegiate basketball betting scandals while he was a freshman at Iowa.

Erickson stands 6-5, weighs 195 and played college ball at UCLA. As a pro he has played both forward and guard, and was used as a reserve at both positions by the Lakers. He has averaged 8.7 points per game.

AP College Poll

The University of Delaware suffered its second straight setback last weekend and skidded to 10th place in the weekly Associated Press college division football rankings Tuesday.

The Blue Hens, No. 1 in the final AP poll the last two seasons and No. 1 in the 1973 weekly ratings until their 20-game winning streak was halted two weeks ago by Rutgers, fell prey to Temple, another major college team, last Saturday and plunged eight places in the poll.

The Trying Life Of A Freshman Football Manager

By STEVE SARACENO

Generally, a team manager gets as much respect as Rodney Dangerfield. A freshman team manager gets less. John Hendry is the freshman equipment manager for the football team. He is the only portable tackling dummy on the field that also distributes shoelaces. During practice, whenever the kicker can't find a ball, John either finds one for him, or is used as the substitute. Masochism is the prerequisite for the job.

John, who is built similar to a football (he is widest in the middle), does not really mind those "mild" indignities as much as he does the players and coaches mispronouncing his name. "No one ever remembers to say the "d" in "'Hendry'," he complains. "They call me John Henry. It irks me."

"Team Manager" is not an apt name. It sounds too administrative. John is not "manager" in the same sense that Dick Williams is "manager". John manages equipment, not players.

"I do all the little things that have to be done", he says. He is an all-around "Go-fer". He goes for cleats, socks, shirts, helmets, belts, left ankle-pads, water, coffee, tea, and milk. "I sometimes also get to tape a player's ankles, a job that the trainer usually does", he adds. That is the high point of his day. The low point sometimes comes immediately after he's finished taping and observes that the two ankles are securely wrapped — to each other.

Barring further taping problems, John will someday advance to the position of trainer. he plans to take courses in such things as physical therapy to become fully prepared. Then, he will leave his equipment manager days behind forever.

Why did he ever want to become a manager in the first place? "I was always a sports fan, but I lacked the physical discipline to be a player, so manager was the next best thing". A manager gets to sit in at team meetings, learn before any fans the game plan for the next contest, and whether the team is "up" for the game or not (a decided advantage if he wants to wager a little money on the game). He even gets to stand on the sidelines during the games, right next to the coach if he wants to. He might even suggest a play and, if it results in a TD for the other team, be the recipient of a left hook to the jaw.

"One of my favorite fantasies", says John "is going out on that field and scoring a touchdown". It is the standard dream for every manager, and many years ago that dream came true for a Yale manager. John currently has no plans of transferring to Yale.

John gets his enjoyment out of team achievement. "I was the manager of an undefeated basketball team at St. John's (no relation) in Danvers", he proudly points out. "I was also manager when our football team broke Swampscott's long undefeated streak".

Consideration of team success over personal recognition, stardom, and fame is the mark of a truly selfless person. Coaches call people like this "team players". Even though the only time John Hendry ever crosses the goal line is to set up the red flags, he is, without a doubt, a "team player".

Impeach Marty Kelley!

To the Sports Editor:

In reply to "This Isn't The Way To Do It" and "For Love or Money" of October 30, 1973.

Upon reading these two pieces, I find it hard to keep from laughing. Here are Kelley and Barroll blasting the University and the Athletic Department for having a Yogi Day. They are asking 'What has Yogi done for the University?' When only a few weeks ago they thought that live coverage of the Julius Erving Day in Springfield was most important to the UMass fan than the UMass football game versus Villa-Nova. What had Erving done for Springfield? Evidently, they thought that it was more important because they promoted it as an exclusive for WUMV-TV in the name of UMass fans (my foot!).

They neglected their true duty to the UMass fans because as anyone who went to the Bluewall that Sunday night saw what a laughter they made of the football game by seeing how many players they could rank out, showing no respect for their talent and bathing in their own frustrated athletic ego.

When I look at the sports section, I expect to read something about our teams. Instead I read some hog wash about "the Great North Country with its Carribou and Pat's Bar etc."

I can only say that I thank God that certain sports writers don't have the command of mass persuasion that Hitler had and that the UMass fans can see his way through this rhetoric to make up his own mind.

Finally, I wonder since the word IMPEACH!!!!! is being thrown around so much today, what UMass fans would think of impeaching a few sportswriters...

College Football In Canada

On a warm September afternoon in Amherst, 18,000 screaming faithful cheer the UMass Minutemen against arch-rival Holy Cross, while 280 miles north McGill University travels west to the campus of Loyola College, fifteen minutes up Sherbrooke Street, for a key Quebec Universities Athletic Association game before an overflow "crowd" of 2,500 Montrealers.

The comparison is repeated weekly as hordes of Americans venture to their nearest stadium to watch Joe College in action while their poor cousins up north can hardly fill a ten thousand seat stadium.

In the fifties and forties, it was not unusual to get twenty or twenty-five thousand to watch college football in Canada. Today the emphasis is off the college game and on the pros.

It would surprise you, I'm sure, to know that the football budget at McGill University in Montreal is less than one-tenth that of UMass. It would surprise you even more to know that the stadium in which the McGill Redmen play holds 8,000 more fans than our own Alumni Stadium, yet the stadium rarely holds more than two or at most three thousand for a football game.

In the United States, universities have used athletics and football in particular to create prestige for the rest of the university. If you can fill a stadium holding forty or fifty thousand fans every week and get into a bowl game to boot, it follows that the esteem held by others of your particular school will grow and grow. If your school gets its holy name in the papers, just imagine how many great high school players will flock to your college to keep up the good work, imagine how the coffers of your school will overflow with funds accumulated through ticket sales and, if the team gets nationally ranked, funds from television revenues.

In Canada college football is an extension of university life and is not expected to reap any glories for the school. If you win, fine; if you lose fine. Few Canadian football players who play in college have any desire to end up as professional jocks with teams like the British Columbia Lions or the Toronto Argonauts, but I doubt that the same could be said for their American counterparts.

Universities like McGill and the University of Toronto have based their reputations on academic and not athletic excellence whereas I am sure that many American schools who suffer from academic mediocrity have attempted to create a reputation based on jockular success. This, in my mind, is faulty thinking.

We in Canada-although our rules are a little perverted, have been playing the game as long as you have, but I think that although our football teams have budgets that would approximate a John Mackay's salary, and our "Rose Bowl" draws fifteen thousand fans, we approach college football the right way. We have only one pro league in Canada, in your country you have one major one and a large number of offshoots.

I.Q. of 145 and Can't Remember?

A noted publisher in Chicago reports there is a simple technique for acquiring a powerful memory which can pay you real dividends in both business and social advancement and works like magic to give you added poise, necessary self-confidence and greater popularity.

According to this publisher, many people do not realize how much they could influence others simply by remembering accurately everything they see, hear, or read. Whether in business, at social functions, or even in casual conversations with new acquaintances, there are ways in which you can dominate each situation by your ability to remember.

To acquaint the readers of this paper with the easy-to-follow rules for developing skill in remembering anything you choose to remember, the publishers have printed full details of their self-training method in a new booklet, "Adventures in Memory," which will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Send your name, address, and zip code to: Memory Studies, 555 E. Lange St., Dept. 940-41, Mundelein, Ill. 60060.

Captains Point To UM Demise

By STEVE CROWE AND DAVE EIBEL

Peil Pennington and Johnny Jones sat in a coaches' conference room yesterday afternoon just before practice and reflected on the disappointing 1973 UMass football season. They came up with three basic reasons for the performance of their team: injuries, lack of experience, and most importantly lack of desire.

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
Minutemen
SPORTS

"We have the speed and the talent," said Pennington, "but we don't have the morale and desire, it seems, that we had last year."

Last year, the UMass Minutemen went 9-2, won all of their Yankee Conference games easily, beat highly-touted Boston College, and ran over Cal Davis 35-14 in the nationally televised Boardwalk Bowl.

This year, they are 4-4 with three games left to play, knocked out of the conference race and forgotten as far as a bowl bid is concerned.

Closely related to the lack of desire is the idea of playing together as a team. Both captains agreed that togetherness is indeed a very important part of the game.

Is UMass a "together" team?

"When you have as many people on a football team as we do," said Jones, "it is hard for the whole team to feel together. But most of the individual units are together."

Experience is a key factor in a team's ability to play together. Peil Pennington pointed out that the people he played alongside last year had played together since he was a freshman. This year's team has a lot of inexperienced players on the offensive team. "The guard doesn't know what the tacke is going to do. On a tightly knit team a player will know what the others are going to do."

And Pennington added, "It's very important that you can count on each other to know that everyone is going to do their job."

Lack of experience, to some critics of the team, doesn't seem logical. Most of the players on the UMass team got a lot of playing time last year because UMass won all of their Yankee Conference games by an average of over 30 points and most of the final half and all of the final quarter were usually played by the reserves. So, the critics argue, this year's players actually did have the experience of playing last year.

But, Pennington and Jones stressed the idea that the players got experience as individual players, but no experience in playing as a unit. They were substituted one by one into the lineup, and not as a team.

When questioned about Coach Dick MacPherson's intended use of freshmen this Saturday, neither Jones nor Pennington expressed any dismay or prejudices at the prospect. The fact that they had to go through playing freshman football while these guys are coming right into the varsity lineup does not bother them. "It doesn't matter whether a guy is a freshman, junior, senior or whatever," responded Johnny Jones, 'you've got to think of a guy as a football player."

It has been a disasterous season for Peil Pennington, Johnny Jones, and the rest of the UMass Minutemen, but they still have three more games to play. With the loss of the YanCon crown already assured, it could be very difficult to get up for their remaining games against Vermont, New Hampshire, and what should be their toughest game, Boston College. As Pennington says, "You've got to pick yourself up" for every game.

According to Jones and Pennington even a win against Boston College "wouldn't make up for anything." To them it's the Yankee Conference that's the most important thing. "It would be great to beat B.C.," said Pennington "but that could never make up for the fact that we lost the Yankee Conference."

NHL Update

By BILL BALLOU

I strongly doubt whether my avid reader(s) out there in newspaper land could fall asleep tonight if I didn't share with them my thoughts on the NHL season as it has thus far progressed. So.....

The Bruins, as usual, have proven that they can have the best record in hockey while seeming to play the worst hockey in hockey.

Their goaltending has been lousy, their defense at times shoddy, at times spectacular, their rookies surprising yet disappointing, their overall play inconsistent.

But they have more points than anyone else in the league.

Phil Esposito has been phenomenal, Ken Hodge better than could be expected. They have carried the B's offensively.

Johnny Bucyk looks awfully old, and Andre Savard isn't what the Bruins management would like poeple to think he is. In fact, the Bruins really only have two real good rookies---those being Al Sims and Chris Oddliefson.

Still, for all their faults the Bruins have two good points that should be enough to carry them at their current winning pace. One wears number four and the other number seven.

The three surprise teams in the league have to rate as the Rangers, the Canucks, and the Black Hawks.

I thought the Rangers were overrated by most people at the beginning of the season, but not by this much. They really shouldn't be under .500, and their recent trade for Jack Egers, a good but not that good, forward indicates they think they have personnel problems. There's also talk that coach Larry Popein is on the way out, which would go a long way toward solving their problems.

The Canucks, on the other hand, have no business being over .500. Evidently the "vastly improved defense" they said they had is for real. It had better be because it's going to have to make up for the small forwards in front of it. I can't help remember, though, the Canucks' first year in the league when they were fighting for a playoff berth until Christmas and then wound up fighting for the right to take the ice against the other team.

Chicago has been the perennial choice for first in the NHL west since they were put there three season ago. They've lost heavily to the WHA, but still have enough talent so the worst they should finish is second. They are an old team, and old teams traditionally take longer to get off the mark at the start of the season. I would wager that by December they'll be second to Philadelphia.

Philly, Montreal, and Toronto have done just as I expected.

The Flyers could be this season. They are definitely the class of the West and could quite possibly have the best goals for-goals against record in the entire league.

Montreal misses Dryden, of course, but more importantly he may have taken with him the Canadiens mystique. He may also have, by leaving, made the Bruins believe that they can win it all again--even if they have to play the Canadiens.

Toronto is the most improved team in the league, and the rejuvenation of their fans may produce a snowball effect that will be hard to stop. It may also, (hopefully) make it difficult for the new WHA team to get off to a good financial start.

While the season has produced some surprises, I'm confident that by March my predictions will bear me out. I just hope Clarence Campbell doesn't hear about it. It'll ruin his fun.

The Great Pumpkin made his appearance last night in the Student Union in an attempt to rally new believers. So far his fan club consists of one small zeolot commonly refered to as Linas. Orange power, anyone?

Oh Great Pumpkin...

By SHARON HUGHES

Speaking only in pumpkinese, the "Great Pumpkin" and his translator descended upon the COLLEGIAN office yesterday in search of believers.

"shjdkdkdirfytwpqoldmcnjh", the Great Pumpkin said. Translation: "We have only one bliever so far; that's Linus, and he will soon be greatly rewarded for his faith."

A twin, flat, no-iron Percot sheet (74 by 104 was draped from the Great Pumpkin's shoulders to the top of his ankles. Ragged edged jeans and beat up sneakers stuck out from the bottom of his "no iron's". And of course, a cut out pumpkin sat on his shoulders.

On one sheet covered arm laid a small brown paper bag from which he took pumpkin seeds and liberally tossed them about the office. An off white gourd was balanced over his other arm.

The translator identified himself as the "Grand Puma" - spiritual leader of the Great Pumpkin. He was attired in a blue police jacket with "city of Lynn" inscribed on the buttons. His headgear was a red, blue and gold "Himalayan sherpa" hat with brown fur peeking out of the visor onto his forehead.

"We come forth every Halloween to bring tidings of joy and peace," said the Grand Puma. His master bobbed his pumpkin in agreement.

The Puma said the visit to the COLLEGIAN was a sidestop in their annual vacation from the Himalayas (their permanent residence.) However, it is rumored they are actually part of a conspiracy on the 14th floor of Kennedy to have a little fun on Halloween.

Meir To Clarify U.S. Position

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir arrived here Wednesday in an effort to clarify the United States position in the Middle East. At the same time, President Nixon met with Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy on the same subject.

Mrs. Meir told reporters that relations between her country and the United States are very friendly, but she noted that problems arise frequently between friends.

"There are problems that have to be clarified," Mrs. Meir said. However, she said it was "an oversimplification" to suggest that the United States has exerted undue pressure on her country concerning a settlement with the Arabs.

Mrs. Meir will meet Thursday with President Nixon and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. She initiated the visit to the United States after learning that Kissinger was planning a trip next week to several Arab capitals and after Fahmy asked to see Nixon in Washington.

Kissinger told reporters Wednesday morning after a private meeting with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "we believe we are making progress" on both implementing the cease-fire and on arranging the beginning of peace talks.

And as the White House meeting with Fahmy began Wednesday, Kissinger told Nixon of his own sessions with the Egyptian emissary, reporting "we have had some very good talks."

As photographers recorded the start of the meeting, Nixon referred to a trip he had made many years ago to Egypt and said, "I'm going to go back."

"Your're welcome," responded Fahmy."

Mrs. Meir turned back nearly all questions at the airport, saying she would hold a news conference Thursday after her meetings with Nixon and Kissinger.

She was effusive in her praise of the American support of Israel during the recent fighting and of President Nixon personally. "I've come to Washington, come to a friendly country, a friendly government and a friendly President," the Prime Minister said.

She added that her country would never forget the backing it received during the fighting and she indicated there are no doubts about the continued good relations between the two nations.

However, Mrs. Meir went on "naturally from time to time there are problems and questions to which we

Gov't Ends Military Alert

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Pentagon ended Wednesday its worldwide military alert called last week as 350,000 servicemen returned to normal duties.

Nearly all the 2.2-million-member U.S. military force was placed on some degree of increased combat readiness early last Thursday because of fears the Soviet Union was sending troops to Egypt.

Defense Department spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said troops of the U.S. European Command and sailors of the Atlantic Fleet returned to normal status at midnight Tuesday.

Some 30,000 enlisted men and officers of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean Sea, however, remain on a heightened alert status because of continuing tensions in the Middle East.

Meanwhile, Friedheim said it appears that 50,000 Soviet paratroopers in Russia and Eastern Europe are also resuming their normal duties.

Reports that some of those troops were about to board Soviet transports leaving for Cairo were one of the principal reasons for the U.S. military alert and the reported near confrontation with the Soviet Union.

In the Mediterreanean, Friedheim said, there are still more than 90 Russian ships, an all-time record.

The U.S. 6th Fleet has increased in size, too, now standing at about 60 vessels, including three aircraft carriers and two helicopter carriers with about 3,600 Marines aboard.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon said the Soviet and American airlifts of supplies and equipment to their respective allies in the Middle East continued at about 20 flights daily.

The U.S. flights are expected to continue for at least another week until Israeli vessels carrying U.S. supplies from American ports begin arriving in sufficient numbers in Israel.

Arab Rally Attracts Crowd

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

A noontime rally sponsored by the Committee in Defense of the Palestiniam-Arab Struggle attracted 150-200 persons to the steps of the Student Union yesterday.

The crowd gathered to hear speeches by Radwa Ahour and Said Khouri of the Arab Student Organization, Mike Thelwell of the Afro-American Studies Department, John L. Fisher, an American Jew who lived in Israel for 11 years, and others.

The hour-long rally was peaceful, and at no time did the crowd's reaction indicate either enthusiastic support or opposition.

Radwa Ashour began by reading a statement of the Committee's purposes and goals. She said:

"We urge the American people to demand that their government stop fueling the Middle East Crisis by pouring arms and money into the State of Israel. We believe it is in the interests of all people concerned to join us in defending the Palestinian-Arab struggle in restoring peace, and that to the American people, peace abroad is equitable with peace at home."

John L. Fisher, whose statement at a Middle East teach-in Thursday helped prompt the rally, attacked media "distortion of facts" concerning the Mid-East situation. Fisher read exerpts

CC Board Of Governors

CC Involvement: It's Your Choice

By MARSHA VENUTI

Do you pay a Campus Center Fee?

If so, then you are a stockholder in the building and you have a Board of Directors working for you.

Up in 817 in the Campus Center is the office of the Board of Governors of the Campus Center and Student Union Complex. It is an all-student body that exists specifically to serve the students, and it has jurisdiction over everything that happens in the Campus Center.

"I have heard the Board called the UN of the Campus Center," Jim Lindsey, chairman of the Board, said in a Collegian interview. "This is because of the pivotal role it plays in the life of every student who uses the Campus Center."

Lindsey has been with the Board since November and has been chairman since April. He sees the Board of Governors as the Board of Directors of a large company, serving the CC fee-paying students who are the stockholders.

"The Board has an obligation to see that the students get their $52.50 worth out of the building by giving some combination of services and products that they need and want," Lindsey said. "The Board has to identify where the students aren't getting their money's worth and try to correct that situation."

The Board was created by a joint act of the Undergraduate and Graduate Senates. A constitution was approved by both senates and by-laws were set up to form a 21-member student board with the responsibility of setting up the policy for the Campus Center and Student Union. It is the director and managers of the CC who administrate the policy.

The present Board was established last November to replace the previous Student Union Governing Board. The SUG Board was mainly advisery and according to members of the pesent Board, they were not making much progress. So an interim board was set up on the spring of 1972 while organization and preparation for the present charter was taking place.

Under the present charter, the Board has jurisdiction over the four areas of the Campus Center-the University Store, Food Services, Retail Services, and Accomodation Services. Each area submits an itemized budget to the Board of approval, and gives monthly reports on how they are doing. Major capital expenditures by any area are also subject to the approval of the Board.

"This budget we have now is the best one the Campus Center has ever had," Lindsey told the Collegian. "And we hope the next one will be better."

He said the improvement was a result of demands made by the Board. For example, the CC departments have broken their budgets down into profit centers - instead of having one figure for food services, for example, this is broken down further into separate figures for the Hatch, the Coffee Shop, the Bluewall, and the Top of the Campus; these are broken down still further into food sales and liquor sales.

"The budget is important because it sets up the whole year," Lindsey said. "When the budget is done a major part of our work is done, but it becomes insignificant if it isn't acted on." He said that once the budget is completed the Board keeps a close check to make sure it is adequate and working well.

According to its constitution, the Board has 21 members appointed by different areas on campus. There are four from the Graduate Senate, nine from the Undergraduate Senate, one from each of the seven residential area governments, and one CC student employee.

Right now there are only 16 members on the Board. The openings for the other five are from the Undergraduate Senate, Sylvan. and the Commuter Assembly.

"I'd like to see more women and some minorities on the Board," Lindsey said. He explained that there are very few women and no minorities represented on the present Board.

The Board is divided into five committees, each having a chairman who receives $20 a week. Any interested student can be on the committees; it is not necessary to be a member of the Board. Management may also be members of the committees.

The Services Committee has jurisdiction over all the retail areas of the Campus Center and Student Union except food.

The Building Committee takes care of space allocation and other building policy such as signs and billboards throughout the the two buildings.

The Food Services Committee has jurisdiction over the food services, which include the Hatch, Coffeeshop, Top of the Campus, Bluewall, concessions at the stadium,and liquor sales.

The Program Council takes care of all the programming in the buildings, including bands for concerts, art shows, and movies.

The Finance Committee has jurisdiction over the financial transactions at the CC, for example capital expenditures that involve a purchase such as furniture.

The committees meet weekly to discuss their investigation of subjects that will be brought before the Board. Management may make suggestions to the committee, which will then investigate the prospects before making a recommendation to the Board. The Board then acts on the issue as a total body.

The actions of the Board are considered by the Student Senates, and if there is disagreement a compromise committee will be set up to discuss and investigate the matter. This committee is usually made up of the executive officers of the Graduate and Undergraduate Senates and the Board of Governors. If no settlement is reached, a decision may be made by the Chancellor.

The actions of the Board are subject to veto by the University Chancellor and Board of Trustees only.

The Board members elect a chairman, vice-chairman, and secretary treasurer for one year terms.

The chairman occupies a particularly powerful position. He deals directly with the director of the Campus Center, John Corker, and the Vice Chancellor of Administrative Affairs, Thomas Campion. He is also involved with the Chancellor, the Board of Trustees, and the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, playing an informational role from the inside to the outside of the Board. He appoints the committee chairmen. He serves as an administrator to the Board to keep things in order. He is elected by and thus represents the Board, which ultimately represents the students.

"I am in a powerful position yet a subservient position," Lindsey said. "So I can't run away with it and if I do, then, the system isn't working right."

Lindsey said that he feels a lot of pressure in his job as chairman because he must create the delicate balance of policy between what the students need and want and should have, and the differing feeling of the administration.

"I sit in the middle of all that," Lindsey said. "And try to strike a balance, considering the needs of everyone involved."

Although there are not many complaints, Lindsey said that many of the ones that do come in are a result of misinformation. He said that the lack of complaints may be because many people here are apathetic.

"Maybe I ought to take one of my eight hour days and sit at a table on the concourse," Lindsey said. "I'm seriously considering it." This would be for informational purposes, not for complaints, he said.

Lindsey explained how the Campus Center fee works. The amount is determined by the difference between what it costs to operate the building and what the building produces in revenue.

"Right now we are paying interest on what it costs to build the building," Lindsey said. "But next year we are scheduled to go on permanent financing, which is paying the interest plus the principal." Thus although the CC fee went down this year, it may go up next year, Lindsey said.

He said that President Wood is now working on a legislative act to change the date on which paying permanent financing begins. Lindsey said he has discussed this with Chancellor Bromery and Vice Chancellor Campion and they agree that it would be better to delay the date. Now it is up to the Board of Trustees and the State Legislature, he said.

The CC fee decreased by $10 this year. Undergraduates are paying $2.50 less overall. The other $7.50 is absorbed in the Student Activities fee. This was done as a result of an agreement between the Undergraduate Senate and the Board of Governors. The Senate has jurisdiction over the activities fee.

Lindsey said that there has been an attitude change in the Campus Center with the new Board. The same view is reflected by many of the managers.

Bud Wilkes, Campus Center Retail Services Manager, said that he thinks the Board is really working for the students.

"This Board is a policy board," Wilkes told the Collegian. "Their attitude is to let management manage and they set up the policy. We think this is important."

He said because the managers work with the Board, they become aware of what the students' problems are, and they have input.

"These people really put a lot of research into what they are talking about," Wilkes said. "They do their homework and we do our homework."

One member of the Board, Bob McDonnell, pointed out how much power the Board has.

"We told the management that they would have to buy nothing but UFW lettuce," McDonnell said, "And they have to comply."

"If we told them to paint the walls purple and pink they'd be doing it tomorrow," he said. "They can't turn us down. We determine everything that affects the students' lives through the Campus Center."

The best place for students to go with complaints or suggestions is to the committee that has jurisdiction over the area, Lindsey said. Minutes and agenda are available in CC 817. The Board has an open meeting every other Thursday night at 6:30 p.m. Notice of room scheduling can be found in the CC daily schedule by the elevators.

Webster Student Arrested

By FRITS GEURTSEN

A student was arrested Tuesday night in Webster dormitory for sale of alcoholic beverages. The arrest, which took place at 10:30, involved the confiscation of seventeen cases of beer.

A police spokesman described the sequence of events. "We received an anonymous tip over the phone on Tuesday morning and spent the afternoon and evening of that day following the lead. As soon as we had made verification of sale, we moved in and made the arrest. The student actually had signs advertising his wares posted throughout his dorm".

The actual charges against the student were "illegal sale of alcoholic beverages" and "keeping alcohol with intent to sell". The penalties for such actions are a fine of not less than a hundred dollars and not more than a thousand or imprisonment of not more than one year or both.

The spokesman went on to say "I would like to emphasize that what transpired was an investigation and a resultant arrest. It was not a raid. I want students to realize that such sales are illegal and that we will make arrests. Hopefully students will look at this incident and stop such sales voluntarily."

In Defense Of Arab Struggle

from two articles from last week's New York Times, including one advertisement calling for aid to Israel. "To this we say boo!" Fisher ended his emotional speech by stressing that the campus movement in support of Palestinian-Arabs is not preaching anti-semitism. "We are not anti-Jewish," he said. "We are anti-imperialist. Down with oppression!"

Several speakers at the rally said the movement was not anti-Jewish, but rather against Israeli foreign policy.

Mike Thelwell said that the American mass media and "the propaganda of the Zionist State of Israel" has made it almost impossible for people to make that distinction. "The implication by the press that if you are against Israeli foreign policy, you are therefore anti-Semitic, is very dangerous," he said.

Said Khouri of the Arab Student Organization, called upon Israel to return Arab land and to allow Palestinians to return to their homeland. At the same time, he said, Arabs must allow the Israelis to exist in peace as a nation.

The question in the Middle East is a question of whether or not the Palestinian refugees will be allowed to exist "as human beings," he said. Khouri drew the most favorable response from the otherwise unemotional crowd when he said, "I am not ready to go into a war of genocide in order to please even one bigot in the world."

The rally ended as the Committee in Defense of the Palestinian Arab Struggle announced plans for a number of teach-ins similar to the one held last Thursday, in the Five-College area.

UMass Vets Receive Grant

By MARK CITRON

The UMass Office of Veterans Affairs (OVA) received a $96,000 grant from the Veterans Administration to set up new veterans' programs. Frank Cotter, director of OVA, said the focus of the money will be to set up an "outreach" office.

Under the terms of the grant, 50% of the money ($46,000) must go towards services directly affecting veterans. This includes the OVA office, the veterans job bank and the new outreach program. The remaining money, called the supplemental portion, can be spent on approved programs at the University's discretion.

Cotter said, "While the law requires only 50% to be used for vets, the university has decided to give 80% to OVA services. The other 20% is being used indirectly for vets."

Cotter cited financial aid and a new office to help handicapped students as two areas where the indirect aid will go.

Cotter described the grant as an inducement to get universities to set up veteran affairs offices and accept more vets. "Here at UMass," Cotter said, "we've always accepted vets and had a veteran affairs office." Cotter felt the extra money will allow OVA to expand services.

The expanded services will be reflected in a larger OVA staff. Cotter said the larger staff will help determine veterans needs and investigate federal programs to see if the university can take advantage of them.

The outreach program is presently the most important development in the OVA office according to Cotter. Cotter said, "The purpose of the new outreach office is going into areas and finding vets who want to go to school. If these guys can't get into school, (we) bring them up to the level where they can get into college. But the biggest problem is to find these guys."

A new and experimental outreach program of the Veterans Administration to advise and counsel veterans will reach UMass next Tuesday when a mobile van visits the campus between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

The purpose of the VA outreach van, according to Edmund O'Brien, assistant director of the Veterans Administration Regional Office, Boston is to "bring the services of the home office to the individual."

The van will be manned by VA advisors and is intended to help vets with housing, educational benefits, job placement, employment and individual and family counseling.

The mobile will be at the north end of Hagis Mall outside of Whitmore Administration Building.

Senate Votes Salaries For Chairpersons

By FRITS GEURTSEN

The Student Senate in their meeting last night voted to pay their various chairpersons twenty dollars a week. This payment involves eight weeks of the fall semester and fourteen weeks of the spring semester, which comes to a yearly sum of $3,360. At present the positions are unpaid.

After an emotional debate, the Senate voted down a motion which proposed that a referendum be established on the lettuce boycott issue. The outcome of the vote underlined the fact that the Senate is a representative body, and that their votes should stand. The Senate had twice previously decided in favor of the lettuce boycott.

SGA President Nick Apostola voiced his thoughts concerning the coming year, asking everyone to look at the great strides forward that the Senate had taken in the last five years. He cited the Senate's continuing role as "moving from a toy to a real government".

Paul Hamel, Senate Treasurer, said Senate spending to date had been a bit exuberant but that funds left over from last year would help to alleviate the present low resources.

The appointments of Cathy Cole as chairperson of the Governmental Affairs Committee and Martha Crawford as Communications Coordinator also received affirmative votes from the Senate.

Power Authority Seeks Help

The Power Authority of Maine (PAM) is looking for help in a campaign to pass a Maine referendum to turn the private power corporations over to public control. While the measure has a fair chance of passing, the utilities are fighting the bill. PAM needs people, money, or any help that can be offered. Press Status Up Since Watergate

By MARK VOGLER

WASHINGTON, D.C.---Watergate has turned the nation's capitol upside-down--placing the press on a pedestal never before enjoyed while casting suspicious doubts on the political system as a "whole new pandora's box" opens up.

That's how Edward M. Fouhy, CBS evening news producer for Walter Cronkite explains the impact the scandal has had on American life.

Fouhy, a 1956 UMass graduate, recently lectured to a group of UMass interns placed here through the Outreach Program.

During his discussion, Fouhy emphasized how the press' persistent handling of the Watergate affair was a turning point for the American Press and may prove to have far reaching effects on society.

"Up until a few years ago, we didn't do our job very well...Richard Nixon used to kick us around," Fouhy said.

"But then two young guys demonstrated to the rest of us that we weren't working hard enough...Karl Bernstein and Bob Woodward showed us the way to the mountain...we saw the view...it was really good and we began to kick back."

While Fouhy said "we are living with a president who a member of the walking wounded," he would not speculate Richard Nixon's political future.

"We are having our day and we are loving it--trying to put a lot of men in jail. Sometimes we win and sometimes we lose," Fouhy said.

"We had an attorney general up until a few days ago who used to like to put men in jail. I don't know enough about the man we have there now."

Fouhy referred to the civil servants as "the fourth level of government" and said they had an equal if not greater impact on Watergate compared to the press.

"We all come and go, but they stay and don't do what the President tells them. The middle echelon civil servant was really the key," he said.

"When Bernstein and Woodward went out and proved to us that what Mr. Zeigler called a 'third rate burglary' wasn't so, people in the civil service began to drop tips.

"There are a lot of civil servants who have a conscience. And after shredding confidential papers all day, there were some who couldn't go home and face their kids."

And the Xerox machine? "That's the greatest thing that ever happened to free press."

Commenting on the change of attitude in the civil servants because of Watergate, he added: "You know, Halderman ran this town like a drill instructor runs a platoon...but the people aren't scared anymore."

According to Fouhy, the tapes issue will be placed "in paragraph 49 of the history book on Watergate."

He said that two judge's voices were on the tapes which he argued to be a good enough reason not to leave the case to the courts to decide.

"The judical system failed us in Watergate: the people who run the courts proved that they are just as fallable as we are," he said.

"The judicial process sometimes becomes prison of its own rules...as in the case when Jeb Magruder purged himself. So, we had to show he purged himself."

When a student pressed him on the subject of objectivity, Fouhy admitted that the press is not perfect, but when all other institutions failed--as in Magruder's case--it was "a matter of public interest to know that the man was a liar."

"If Frankenstein was running for President, according to FCC rules--we'd have to get somebody to say he's good. Now that's a perversion of objectivity, but that's how our system works."

On Agnew's resignation, he said it seemed like a year ago, adding the story was easy to get, "just mechanical."

"It was totally unexpected when taken in the context of a whole series of events. But based on leaks, we knew Agnew was in very deep, serious trouble. We knew he was the bag man," he said.

"Since one of our reporters was being subpoenaed we were in Baltimore that day. One of our men said something was about to happen. Agnew was seen with some secret service guys. It was very easy from there."

As far as politics, Fouhy said the rules of the game "are such that they can be changed by patient people."

"While it may seem slow, ponderous and archaic--if you are really interested in making an impact on public policy, the system works fairly well."

Loaded Israeli Ship

NORFOLK, Va.--The Israeli cargo ship Madarincore sits at the Navy piers here after being loaded with military supplies bound for the Middle East. seek answers and clarifications."

In spite of this statement she would not tell reporters what those problems might be. In fact, she joked that her statement was only a repeat of words she gave reporters when she left Tel Aviv for Washington.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, meanwhile, insisted that Israeli forces in Egypt must pull back as a first step toward Middle East peace. He told a Cairo news conference there will be no exchange of war prisoners until the Israelis return to the Oct. 22 cease-fire line.

Sada responded with an emphatic "no" to the idea of direct peace negotiations with Israel, but said once disengagement starts, an international peace conference on the Middle East could begin under U.N. auspices.

Israel announced that Egypt's surrounded 3rd Army on the eastern bank of the Suez was resupplied again Wednesday by a truck convoy driven by U.N. forces. The Israelis had disputed Sadat's contention that Egyptian forces could easily defeat Israeli units on the west bank of the Suez. Sadat said his officers were pressing him to let them wipe out the west bank Israeli forces but that he was holding back to give Nixon time to prevail upon the Israelis to withdraw.

The U.S. State Department denied charges by Moshe Dyan, the Israeli defense minister, that Washington threatened a cutoff of military supplies if Israel did not give up positions taken after the initial U.N. cease-fire agreement of Oct. 22.

Sadat indicated Nixon and Kissinger, in their talks with Fahmy, agreed that the Israelis should withdraw, saying that the United States "up to this moment..has taken a constructive stand for peace."

Kissinger, who will travel to Cairo and three other Arab capitals next week, emerged from a meeting with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and said "we believe we are making progress" in efforts to settle the latest in the Middle East crises.

He listed two problems-firmly establishing a cease-fire, and then moving to a durable peace. "I believe we are under way with both efforts.'"

In addition to Cairo, Kissinger will stop in Rabat, Morocco· Amman, Jordan, and Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. Then, he will fly to Teheran with talks with Iranian leaders, stop in Pakistan, and head on to Peking on Nov. 10 to fulfill a commitment postponed because of the Mid-East war. He will visit Tokyo before returning to the United States.

Nurse Faces Death

ALTON, Ill. (AP) — As a nurse, she has frequently ministered to terminally ill patients, trying to ease the anguish of dying. Last June she learned she was dying herself. A doctor told her she had incurable lymphoma, cancer of the lymph nodes.

"I still hope there was a mistake on the tests and try to deny the fact that I'm sick at all," she says. But she knows it isn't true. "I keep telling myself that I must be strong, but I still catch myself holding back the tears quite often."

The nurse, who asked not to be identified, recalls the day she was told. She was waiting in her hospital room to break the news to her family and her 15-year-old daughter was her first visitor. "Before I had a chance to tell my daughter the bad news a group of doctors walked in and started talking," she said.

"All I heard was 'five years' ....Everything else was blocked out. My daughter turned white."

Her training as a nurse made her feel she had to face the situation dispassionately. But later that day, as she sat in a waiting room another nurse came to her. "I couldn't say anything for fear of shattering my strong image," she said. Then the nurse touched her hand and shed a tear. "That meant so much to me at that time," she said. "It showed me she really cared."

Death has changed her perspective. She recalls one day this summer when she helped her son in the garden. "I was sitting on the ground with my son's back to me as he planted tomato plants," she says. "I looked at the sunny blue skies, clouds, trees and grass and began thinking how I hated to leave this beautiful earth."

Before she does, she wants to see as much of it as she can. "Not long after I learned I was dying I took off work and traveled to Mexico, California and Las Vegas," she says. "The idea entered my head that I'd like to do as much as I can in the time I have left.

"I find it hard to sit and watch television because I think I'm wasting time." This winter she plans to travel to the Caribbean.

Her feelings about religion are unsettled. "Once I believed in heaven and hell," she said. "But not now. That's something I have to work out."

She still works. At the Alton Mental Clinic she tries to help other people deal with their emotional problems.

"What really makes me sad," she says, "is the pretty young girl who is one of my patients. She keeps trying to commit suicide."

Thieu: No Lasting Peace

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — President Nguyen Van Thieu said Wednesday the Vietnam cease-fire has been a "bitter disappointment" and that prospects for a lasting peace have all but disappeared.

In the same vein, North Vietnam accused South Vietnam of executing a new military plan with the help of the United States.

Thieu accused the Western world of shutting its eyes to South Vietnam's continuing plight and sacrificing the country to the Communists.

"In fact, there has been no cease-fire at all and, in fact, a full-scale war may soon be rekindled," Thieu said during a televised speech on the eve of South Vietnam's national day.

He charged North Vietnam and the Viet Cong with taking advantage of continuing talks in Paris between the two sides to prepare for another offensive in early 1974.

Nixon Lawyers: Two Tapes Never Existed

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of the White House tapes never existed, President Nixon's lawyers said Wednesday.

The White House said Nixon had been unaware of that situation until last weekend.

Missing are recordings of what former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell told Nixon in their first reported conversation following the Watergate break-in and of what passed between Nixon and John W. Dean III in a meeting in which Dean says Nixon admitted discussing clemency as part of the Watergate cover-up.

The Mitchell conversation of June 20, 1972 took place on a telephone without a recording device attached, and the Dean meeting of April 15, 1973 wasn't recorded due to an extremely rare malfunction of the automatic recording gear in the presidential offices, Nixon's lawyers told U. S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said that in the months of controversy over the Watergate tapes Nixon never asked to listen personally to the two nonexistent tapes.

Warren said extensive conversations and discussions in Nixon's office on April 14 and 15 — prior to the Dean meeting — had been recorded. But, he said, "when this conversation took place the first recorder had run out, filled up, and the alternate recorder was not activated until the next day, the 16th."

Warren said, "we've never said — he's never said — he listened to all the tapes."

The presidential spokesman had reported several months ago that Nixon listened to a number of tapes on June 4

Warren said the tapes had been stored in the White House "under lock and key."

In court, White House lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt told Sirica of the missing tapes in a private session Tuesday, and Sirica broached the matter in open court Wednesday.

It was the first time the White House had said any of the controversial tape recordings don't exist.

The two missing recordings are among nine tapes which had been sought by federal prosecutors and which Nixon had agreed to turn over to Sirica in accordance with an order from the federal appeals court in Washington.

Sirica heard open-court testimony Wednesday from a Secret Service technician who said the White House records had been checked daily on weekdays, and that the April 15 malfunction was the only recorder failure he knew of.

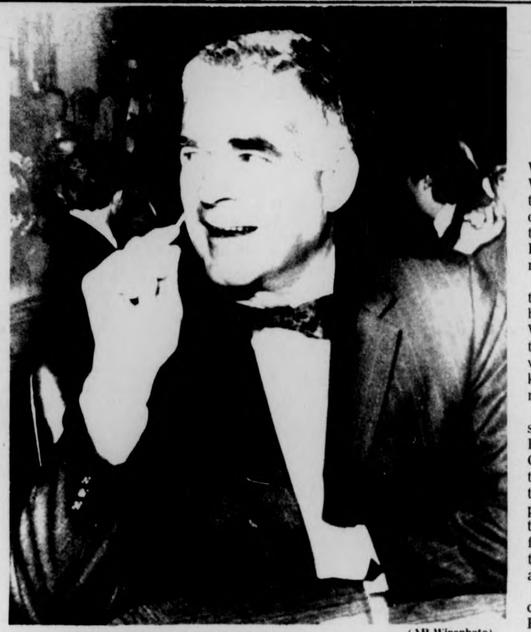
He said hidden microphones in presidential offices had been extremely sensitive, capable of picking up all but whispered conversations.

The technician, Raymond C. Zumwalt, said he knew of no other instance in which the automatic machines had failed to record. He said he hadn't remembered the April 15 malfunction until Buzhardt reminded him of it.

Federal prosecutors said Zumwalt told them earlier Wednesday that he couldn't recall any malfunctions at all.

Archibald Cox, whom Nixon fired as special Watergate prosecutor after Cox spurned on the tapes, said Wednesday that the White House never told him any of the tapes might not exist.

Cox had sought a total of nine recordings and associated documents.



(AP Wirephoto)

MAY HAVE LEAKED NEWS--Archibald Cox tells the Senate Judiciary Committee in Washington that he may have been the source of a news leak about a telephone call from President Nixon instructing former Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst not to appeal one phase of the ITT antitrust case. The former special Watergate prosecutor said he was greatly upset by the leak.

Committee Seeks Nixon Bank Records

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House acknowledged Wednesday it was negotiating with the Senate Watergate committee on the panel's effort to gain access to President Nixon's Key Biscayne, Fla., bank account records.

Committee sources confirmed that they were seeking the Nixon bank records, but one source said White House lawyers "had dug in their heels" and indicated they would claim executive privilege to keep the records from the committee.

"We are in contact with the staff" of the committee, White House Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said. He added that the White House is "not certain what is being sought" and that presidential aides were "attempting to work out ways so information can be provided...and that confidentiality can be assured."

The bank's president is Nixon's closest friend, Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

At a news conference Friday night, Nixon defended Rebozo's handling of a $100,000 contribution from billionaire Howard Hughes — a contribution Rebozo kept in a safety deposit box for three years before returning earlier this year.

Sen. Saxbe Is Potential Attorney General Nominee

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William B. Saxbe, R-Ohio, came out of an hour and a half meeting with President Nixon Wednesday feeling "relatively sure" he will be nominated to be the next attorney general.

"I don't want to be presumptive and say I've got it in the bag," the 57-year-old senator told reporters on the driveway just outside the White House. He said he expected a final decision in a week or so.

The White House withheld an announcement on whether Saxbe would be Nixon's nominee to succeed Elliot L. Richardson.

"The offer was implied when I walked in there," Saxbe said. "We had an understanding I was there to talk about being attorney general."

Saxbe, a first-term senator who recently announced he would not seek another term in 1974, was formerly state attorney general in Ohio. In the Senate, he at times has criticized Nixon although his voting record generally has supported the President.

Saxbe said he and Nixon candidly talked about their differences during their lengthy discussion. He said he told Nixon that "you'd have to take me warts and all."

He added that his occasional opposition to the President will not reduce his ability to work and cooperate with Nixon.

At the same time, Saxbe said he wanted to satisfy himself about questions he had about Watergate. "I'm satisfied that the President has acted honorably in the situations that have risen since Watergate. This is the thing I wanted to know," he said.

The senator said he and Nixon went over a number of instances where he had questions, adding "I think I have a pretty good feel for such things, and I believe him."

Saxbe said it was obvious that a new special Watergate prosecutor would be named long before his confirmation.

Saxbe said he was satisfied that the new special prosecutor would receive any necessary information from White House tapes and documents dealing with the Watergate case. He said he volunteered that he had no candidate in mind for the prosecutor's job and did not want to be consulted until the White House has settled on somebody.

Bernhard-Political Sabotage Hurt Muskie Campaign

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political sabotage directed by President Nixon's re-election committee took a toll on Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's unsuccessful battle to win the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination, Muskie's campaign manager testified Wednesday.

Berl I. Bernhard told the Senate Watergate committee that the Nixon committee's "unceasing efforts to unhorse" the Maine senator "took a toll in the form of diverting our resources, changing our schedules, altering our political approaches and being thrown on the defensive."

Bernhard testified that Muskie's most vital political strategy document and polls of two key Democratic primary states were apparently stolen from campaign headquarters.

The committee is winding up the so-called dirty tricks phase of its probe. Before Bernhard testified the panel heard one of its investigators report that $110,000 in Nixon campaign funds were used to hire more than a score of spies and saboteurs to infiltrate and disrupt campaigns of Democratic presidential contenders.

The investigator, Mark Lackritz, described details of the Nixon committtee's intelligence operations that bore the names Gemstone, Sedan Chair and Chapman's Friends and he listed the names of agents recruited by political saboteur Donald H. Segretti.

On another committee front, panel sources and the White House confirmed that the committee is trying to gain access to Nixon's Key Biscayne, Fla., bank records.

Committee sources said White House lawyers indicated they would claim executive privilege to keep the records from the panel. But the White House spokesman said presidential aides were "attempting to work out ways so information can be provided..."

In another development related to the committee, the Miami Herald reported Wednesday that a panel member, Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla., and top advisers established a secret fund in 1971 to handle $300,000 in unreported contributions and cash payoffs from contractors. The money was used for travel and office expenses and other, unknown purposes, the newspaper said.

Gurney issued a statement saying the Justice Department is conducting an ongoing investigation "in these matters" and asked Gurney not to comment until the investigation is concluded.

Fuel-Saving Measures

Administration Cracks Down

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration is preparing legislative proposals for nationwide fuel-saving measures, but it wants presidential discretion to impose them, rather than the automatic triggering proposed by Sen. Henry M. Jackson.

John Sawhill, an associate director of the Office of Management and Budget, told a newsman Wednesday the administration believes that the president should have some "flexibility" to order fuel-saving steps, rather than be required automatically to impose them when a given fuel-shortage level is reached as Jackson has proposed.

In another energy development, the distribution of petroleum fuels comes under government regulation Thursday for the first time since World War II, as a move to ease the pain of expected winter fuel shortages.

Mandatory allocation applies, so far, only to heating oil diesel and jet fuel and other "middle distillates," plus propane gas, and only at the wholesale level.

But the cut-off of Arab oil could force the extension of mandatory wholesale allocation to crude oil and gasoline, and both Congress and the administration appeared ready to set up a standby system for direct fuel rationing to the consumer.

Standby rationing was part of Jackson's proposal and was expected to appear in the Aministration's parallel proposals, due late this week or early next week.

Sawhill said the administration is still working out the new fuel-saving measures.

He said it might propose them in the form of a separate bill, or it might seek instead to work with Congress for modifications of a proposal of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash.

Jackson, chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, has proposed legislation which would require a series of fuel-saving actions whenever the nation suffers a five per cent shortage of petroleum fuels, compared with demand.

Sawhill said the administration agrees with Jackson's basic idea, but believes the emergency actions should not be required automatically.

Fixing a specific shortage level as a "trigger" for mandatory fuel conservation might lead to trouble, Sawhill said, because of the difficulty of defining "demand" and "available supply."

Actions based on such a "trigger" might be quickly challenged in court, hampering the very efforts the "trigger" is meant to begin, Sawhill said. He confirmed that the administration is considering the proposals by Jackson, plus a few more.

Jackson's proposals included:

-A requirement for new power plants, plus existing plants capable of switching from gas or oil, to burn coal.

-Authorization of local variances from nationwide clean air standards, also to permit the burning of coal.

-Requirement of petroleum production increases, above the "maximum efficiency" levels now used to set production levels.

-Require preparation of fuel emergency contingency plans by state and local governments.

-And establishment of a standby fuel-rationing program by the federal government.

Bilingual Education Nears Reality

By JOHN B. LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Leaders of several Puerto Rican organizations endorsed on Wednesday legislation which would create far-reaching bilingual education programs across the nation.

The focus of a news conference was on bills drawn by Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., Joseph Montoya, D-N.M., and Alan Cranston, D-Calif., which would authorize up to $1 billion over five years for bilingual program support.

However Luis Alvarez, executive director of Aspira America, said he feared that whatever Congress eventually approved, President Nixon would veto.

Essentially, the bills would provide for a program bureau in the Office of Education, an advisory council to develop policy, training and recruiting of bilingual teachers and money for the programs, varying from $700 million for three years to $1 billion for five years.

As it is, some $40 million was appropriated this year by Congress for bilingual education, and this is nowhere near enough, said Dr. Francisco Trilla, chairman of the Puerto Rican Association of National Affairs.

All of the officials stressed the need for bilingual education as the main wav to promote cultural awareness, learning, and cooperation among whites and minorities.

The legislation would also include programs for children of Indians, French-and Portuguese-Americans, as well as the Spanish-speaking Chicano, Puerto Rican and Cuban minorities.

The legislation in its final form should include mandatory allocation formulas, the spokesman said, to avoid local disputes among minorities,

LA Brush Fire Under Control

By DAN BERGER
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A fierce brush fire that forced evacuation of hundreds of homes in suburban canyons was reported 80 per cent contained Wednesday. Firemen said the blaze apparently was set.

"It occurred in an area where there could not have been an accident," said Capt. Dave Brown of the Los Angeles County Fire Department. "The fire was set."

The fire was burning westward through Topanga and Tuna canyons. Some persons were returning to homes they had evacuated earlier.

Although 700 homes were ordered evacuated in the fashionable Topanga Canyon area 20 miles west of downtown, none was reported damaged by the fire that broke out Tuesday afternoon. More than 1,700 acres of thick, dry brush were blackened. Cause of the fire was unknown.

The Santa Ana "devil winds" that had gusted up to 50 miles an hour Tuesday died down during the night, then began to pick up during the day. The forecast was for 15 to 20 m.p.h. winds.

Traffic was tied up on the nearby San Diego and Golden State freeways and the Pacific Coast Highway was closed to all but area residents and emergency vehicles. Billowing clouds of smoke and some flames were visible in much of metropolitan Los Angeles.

The eastern flank of the fire, which for a time threatened the rustic community of Fernwood, was checked during the night and residents began returning to their homes. Flames raged unchecked on the western front, burning into Tuna Canyon and heading toward the seaside community of Malibu.

Impeachment Group Mobilizes

A group of Pioneer Valley residents has begun to mobilize citizen support for impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon.

Formation of the citizens' group--the Committee to Impeach Nixon--was sparked more than a week ago by President Nixon's firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, after Cox refused to halt his legal efforts to obtain the President's controversial Watergate tapes and documents.

Committee leaders have assured the press that they will continue the impeachment drive "regardless of whatever clever tricks Nixon performs with the tapes." Members of the group cited a number of reasons besides the Watergate scandal for impeaching the President: usurpation of Congressional authority, as shown by the invasion of Cambodia; impoundment of Federal funds in defiance of the courts; manipulation of Federal agencies for personal political gain; criminal campaign financing; criminal tax violation; and others.

In a letter sent out this week to some 150 area activists, Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst, a member of the impeachment committee, listed four "priority actions" for success in the impeachment effort:

1. FUND-RAISING--For newspaper, radio, and television ads urging people to flood Congress with demands for impeachment. Contributions may be sent to: Committee to Impeach Nixon, P.O. Box 373, Hadley, Mass. 01035. More information is available from finance chairwoman Nadine Gallo, 584-4972.

2. IMPEACHMENT PETITIONS--Going door-to-door to collect signatures on petitions which will be presented to Congressmen Silvio Conte and Edward Boland. Those who can help may contact either Frank Dorman, 253-5055, or Barbara McGarrah, 253-9494, in Amherst; Lisa Baskin, 584-6125, in Northampton; Frances Gagnon, 781-0333, in Springfield; or Betty Harris, 568-9359, in Westfield.

3. LOBBYING THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE--This is the House committee where impeachment resolutions submitted by Congressman Drinan and others will first be considered. Persons interested in working in this area may contact Ted Byrne, 536-7379.

4. MEETING WITH CONTE AND BOLAND--Anyone who would like to help organize a delegation to meet with either Congressman to press the impeachment issue may contact either Russ Carrier, 584-2168; or Frances Gagnon, 781-0333.

A Chance To Express Your Opinion

The Common Cause will have a table set up in the Campus Center Thursday, November 2nd from 1-6 p.m., and in the Student Center Friday from 10 a.m. - 6 p.m.

Any persons who are registered voters in Massachusetts will have the opportunity to sign two petitions.

The first petition briefly summarizes a proposed act that would add a new chapter 268B to the General Laws to require that elected and appointed officials file statements of economic interests. Such statements would be public records. The statements would be filed with the State Secretary.

The second initiative petition is a proposed act for the establishment of the position of a Director of Campaign and Political Finance who would serve for a term of six years and have primary responsibility for administering the laws relating to campaign contributions and expenditures.

Barbara Stewart
on THE LONG OF IT

Today's news is that LONG is back. You never knew it went away? Well, it did ... for a while. Fashions tend to run in cycles, and it looks as though there's a move afoot toward a more feminine look. This is especially so with long dresses. I'm finding tremendous customer interest in old fashioned floral designs, velvets — on their own or mixed with prints, lace trim, and gross grain and velvet ribbons. I sometimes feel as though I've walked into an elegant party when two or more gals are parading in front of our mirrors in their long, romantic finery. For some, I am certain it's the first time they have ever worn a long dress. You can't imagine how excited they get.

We've had the same reaction to long skirts, too. The skirt excitement is in styling and fabrics. The romantic look is catching on, and the gals seem to be loving it. The party's just beginning. Why don't you come in and have a ball at...

Attorney For Students:

Legalities Of Consumer Protection

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

A year ago, an enterprising salesperson came to our idyllic and naive sanctuary and promised, yea verily the world which he lay at the feet of some of our sisters. And it came to pass, when our sisters set forth to take possession of their pots of gold in Las Vegas or Miami Beach (all expenses paid, he said!) that they paid the transportation, little did they know.

And what of the pots of gold, you ask? Last year they were struck in the shape of fine linen (12 twin size, 6 double size, 18 pillow cases, 20 towels of every description all in a fine cedar chest) and this year pots are pots (large, small sauce and fry, roast, bake, broil and stew,) plus stainless settings for 12. Now we all can appreciate the need for newly weds to be properly acquitted when they entertain. Some may ponder whether these prospective families are likely to be opening a hotel, however, since the supply of linen and cookware greatly exceeds the forseeable needs of a mother and father and ten fully grown children!

However, the horizons were established and, in detail, they were described in hues of glamor and romance and the very, very perfect home. All was possible for only $5.00 per month until graduation and then $25.00 per month until retirement. For a $500 purchase the aspiring student would pay, in fact, something like $860.00 over three or four years. Please do not for one minute believe that this didn't happen this year, last year and the year before. Last year I arranged to rescind 200 contracts for violation of our laws. The year before the number was 562 and this year 35 to date.

The statute which permits citizens to protect themselves from these "best of all possible" deals is section 48 of chapter 93 which is printed below. Keep in mind the following requirements:

1. The transaction must occur someplace not in the company's store;

2. It must be for goods or service or a personal, family or household character in value more than $25; and

3. It must be cancelled by notice not later than three business days later.

It is also helpful to keep in mind that no reputable salesman of quality goods or services can only offer a good deal once. If the offer is one of quality you may certainly take the time to consider it and talk to family, friends or counsellors about it. If it's a "once in a lifetime offer," I suggest that you opt for a lifetime free of the problems it is likely to bring you. The odds are very great that the winner will be you.

The statute is a very effective consumer protection device and you may benefit from reading it over quite closely. Whether or not you think it applies to you, if you find yourself in a situation where you believe that you have a valid consumer conplaint you can always contact the Attorney General's Office in Boston or Springfield for help.

Chapter 93 Section 48:

CANCELLATION OF AGREEMENTS

Section 48: Buyer's right to cancel agreement consummated at place other than seller's place of business for personal, family or household goods or services in excess of $25; form of agreement; notice of cancellation; restoration of parties; penalties.

A. An agreement providing for the sale or lease of goods, or the rendering of services, or both, primarily for personal, family or household purposes in excess of twenty-five dollars in value and which is consummated by a party thereto at a place other than the address of the seller or lessor, which may be his main office or branch thereof, may be cancelled by the buyer for other than the seller's of lessor's branch, whether or not such agreement contains a provision for periodic payments or an extension or credit, provided by the buyer, not later than midnight of the third business day following execution of the agreement, notifies the seller or lessor that he is canceling, and such cancellation shall be effective thereupon.

B. Each such agreement shall be in writing, signed by the seller or lessor, contain his address and all the terms agreed upon by the parties or required by law. The failure to include a required or an agreed term or to deliver a copy of the agreement signed by the seller or lessor shall give the buyer the right to cancel said agreement until the omitted term is provided or the copy of the agreement delivered. In either case, the time period during which the buyer may cancel under subsection A shall not commence until the failure to include terms or deliver a copy has been corrected.

Each such agreement shall contain the following statement, appearing conspicuously on the front page thereof:-

You may cancel this agreement if it has been consummated by a party thereto at a place other than an address of the seller, which may be his main office or branch thereof, provided you notify the seller in writing at his main office or branch by ordinary mail posted, by telegram sent or by delivery, not later than midnight of the third business day following the signing of this agreement.

C. Notice of cancellation under this section shall be given in writing to the seller at the place of business as set forth in the agreement by ordinary mail posted, by telegram sent or by delivery, not later than midnight of the third business day following execution of the agreement.

D. In the event of cancellation pursuant to this section the seller or lessor shall refund to the buyer, within ten days after such cancellation, all deposits, including any down payment made under the agreement, and redeliver any goods traded in to the seller on account of or in contemplation of the agreement, less any reasonable costs actually incurred in making the goods ready for sale, and shall return any copies of the agreement signed by the buyer with a notation indicating that it has been canceled. The seller or lessor shall be entitled to reclaim and the buyer shall return whenever possible or hold at the seller's disposal any goods received by the buyer under the agreement. The buyer shall incur no additional liability for cancellation pursuant to this section.

E. Whoever violates any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or both.

F. A violation of this section shall constitute a violation of chapter ninety-three A.

Added by St. 1970, c. 272. Amended by St. 1970, c. 660.

TM Grows In Popularity

"It was completely different from what I expected. When I went to the indroductory lecture, I was hoping to see a guru with white robes, a long beard, and foreign speech. Instead a guy with suit and tie came out and gave some very impressive scientific research on Transcendental Meditation." This was Robbie Brazil's first reaction to TM, and it's not unlike most peoples.

Continuing, he said, "I've been meditating for six months now and I've never felt more together. Meditation makes me feel relaxed, refreshed, and alert. My friends thought I was really being sucked in, paying $45.00 - -now most of them are meditating too."

Research from Harvard Medical School clearly indicates that one achieves a deeper level of rest in the twenty minute period of TM than at any point in a full night's sleep (see Scientific American, Feb., 1972). Research has been continuing at colleges and universities, psychiatric institutes, hospitals, and prisons throughout the Western world. TM involves no belief, faith, devotion, special diet - in fact, there are strong agruments to the effect that the state experienced in TM is as natural as being awake, asleep, or dreaming.

There will be a thorough discussion analyzing the technique of TM with special reference to Maharishi's concepts of "consciousness" and "transcending" in a talk by Bill Lazarus tonight at 8:30 p.m. in the Engineering East Auditorium.

Conspiracy Charged In Turner Trial

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP)-F. Lee Bailey charged Wednesday the federal government was withholding vital evidence in the mail fraud trial of the Boston lawyer, Orlando businessman Glenn W. Turner and seven others.

Bailey, who is conducting his own defense, told U.S. District Judge Gerald B. Tjoflat that the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities Exchange Commission, the U.S. Postal Service and the Justice Department acted in collusion to obtain the 28-count indictment.

The defendants are accused of using the mails to defraud people though the sale of distributorships in Turner's firms, Koscot Interplanetary Inc., a cosmetics company, and Dare To Be Great, a motivational program.

Koscot, Dare To Be Great and parent company Glenn W. Turner Enterprises were also named in the indictment returned in Orlando last May.

FTC lawyer James R. Timoney asked Tjoflat to quash subpoenas issued by Bailey seeking all correspondence between the FTC and the three other federal agencies in connection with the operations of Turner firms.

Timoney said some of the documents Bailey was seeking were covered by executive privilege and others the agency did not have.

He handed the court an envelope containing documents he said were letters to the FTC from state attorney generals around the country.

Bailey contended the federal agencies began working with the state attorney generals on orders of President Nixon in 1972 just as he was negotiating with the state officials to enter consent judgments to settle cases against Turner.

"If this jury knows what went on they'll throw this case out the window in 20 minutes," said Bailey. The hearing was held outside the presence of the jury.

Bailey contended the papers he was seeking would prove there was a conspiracy against the defendants.

Tjoflat took the matter under advisement.

MASSACHUSETTS ROUNDUP

Furlough System In Danger

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) - A Norfolk County Superior Court Justice has dismissed escape charges against two convicts and his decision may end the state's controversial furlough program.

In two separate escape trials, Judge Corneilus Mounihan ruled that the defendants were innocent because there is no penalty for escape under statutes governing the furlough program. The judge also said the statute governing the program is vague.

District Attorney George Burke of Norfolk County said he has asked the legislature for emergency legislation to correct the law. He also said he asked the Commissioner of Correction to suspend the furlough program until new safeguards are enacted.

The furlough program was established as part of the state's omnibus prison reform bill in 1972. Since then a number of prisoners have failed to return from furloughs including a convicted murderer. The escapes have prompted considerable criticism from the public and the legislature.

A spokesman for the district attorney identified the two defendants as Howard O. Baxter, 39, and Francis A. Cox, 39. Both were held at Norfolk prison colony. Cox's trial was held Tuesday and Baxter's was Oct. 18.

The district attorney said his office still has 36 escape cases pending trial and presumed they would all be judged innocent unless the statute is changed.

Burke said the furlough program would have to be suspended because there was nothing stopping a convict from not returning.

"We would also like to see the lifers situation clarified," he said. The state attorney general and the correction department have been at odds over whether men convicted of first degree murder are eligible for furloughs, Burke said.

Justice Tauro Rules On Flaschner

BOSTON (AP) - Chief Justice G. Joseph Tauro of the State Supreme Court told Gov. Francis W. Sargent Wednesday that it would be inappropriate to consider the temporary suspension of District Court Chief Justice Franklin N. Flaschner pending completion of an investigation of charges against Flaschner.

Sargent, in a letter to Tauro Tuesday, said Exeuctive Councillor Edward M. O'Brien, D-Easthampton, had suggested that the governor request Flaschner to temporarily suspend himself from all judicial duties.

The charges against Flaschner were leveled by Atty. lawrence O'Donnell and special Justice Margaret C. Scott of Dorchester District court during proceedings sparked by the effort to remove Dorchester District Court Judge Jerome P. Troy from the bench.

Mrs. Scott and O'Donnell said Flaschner had intervened on behalf of Kevin Cummins, a spokesman for a Dorchester citizens group and one of Troy's major detractors, prior to a probation surrender hearing before Mrs. Scott.

Flaschner has denied that he acted improperly.

Tauro, in a letter to Sargent Wednesday, said he had been informed by Frederick G. Fisher, Jr., president of the Massachusetts Bar Association that the committee on judicial complaints planned an investigation.

Trucker Holds Overload Story

BOSTON (AP) — A trucker who was subpoenaed to testify before a legislative commission investigating truck overloading in the state pleaded the Fifth Amendment Wednesday rather than produce records of his deliveries to a Massachusetts Port Authority land fill site.

Gerald F. Kelleher of Brockton made the plea, his lawyer said, because "the testimony which he very much wants to give could submit him to personal jeopardy."

Members of the commission had submitted to the legislature a bill to grant immunity to witnesses appearing before the commission, but the measure was killed in the House. There is already a law giving special commissions the power to grant immunity and Kelleher's lawyer is considering whether it would give him sufficient protection against prosecution.

Also testifying Wednesday was Charles Mudd of the J. E. Greiner Co. of Baltimore, the structural designers of the Mystic River Bridge which collapsed here in September after an overloaded truck crashed into a support column, bringing down a section of the bridge and killing the driver.

Mudd said the support columns were not designed with the thought that vehicles of any weight might be crashing into them but he said he thought a column might withstand a car crashing into it, if not an overloaded truck. He was unable to give an estimate of the impact a support column could withstand.

He added that the support columns are generally placed behind a railing or concrete wall where a vehicle would have trouble getting at them, but several of the support columns on the Mystic Bridge are exposed to traffic.

McGrath announced that a major priority of the commission at this time will be establishing a complete listing of the 5,000 bridges in the state.

Nuns Band As Consumers

BOSTON (AP) — A group of 5,000 nuns from the Archdiocese of Boston have banded together to lobby for a bill which would require utility companies to pay the costs of the attorney general's office and consumer council in rate case.

Sister Arlene Marie of the Sisters of Mercy told newsmen Wednesday that the group has been disturbed by "the pro-industry and utility posture of the Massachusetts Senate, coupled with an anti-consumer stance in the utility area."

Committee Reviews Discrimination

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent announced the appointment of a committee to review the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination Wednesday.

Sargent said he appointed the committee in light of recent criticism of the MCAD "questioning its effectiveness and sincerity.

"It is essential that the citizens of the commonwealth have complete confidence in the ability and commitment of this agency to carry out its mandate," Sargent said. "It is my hope that this review will produce any necessary changes and better enable this important agency to continue its work to eliminate discrimination in Massachusetts."

Christian Scientists Attend Meeting

This past weekend several members of the UMass Christian Science Organization attended a New England regional meeting for Christian Science college students held at Smith College.

The meeting was sponsored by the Christian Science Organizations at Smith, UMass, and Mt. Holyoke, and the two day session drew over 300 people from the surrounding states. The meeting included workshops and talks by several speakers of prominence in the world-wide Christian Science movement.

The theme of the meeting was "Discovering the Freedom of Commitment" and topics dealt with defining these two seemingly contradictory ideas and showing the application and benefits of commitment.

The Christian Science Organization at the University holds weekly inspiration/testimony meetings Tuesdays, 6:45 p.m., C.C., and heartily invites all those who are interested in attending.

Black Film Series: Contemporary Church

"Let The Church Say Amen" a feature length color documentary about the struggle of the Black Church to stay relevant in the Black Liberation struggle will be shown tonight as the History of Black Film series begins its contemporary films segment. The film was directed and written by St. Clair Bourne who will be present at the showing of his film tonight. The theme music is written and played by Roberta Flack and Donny Hathaway and B.B. King will also be heard singing "Midnight."

Though shot in documentary style, "Let the Church Say Amen" is based on actual events and uses real people instead of actors. Bourne, who has taught film courses all over the country was the producter for television's Black Journal. He has also just completed directing and anti drug film produced by Godfrey Cambridge.

In a statement on the purposes of the Black Church film Executive Producer, David Briddell said "We are presenting three non-scripted contemporary experiences of the Black Church for what it is...the portrayal of the struggle of a people to create a meaningful Black Church." He went on to hope that the viewer "Will experience that struggle in such a way that it will help him deal with what it means for the Black church to be about the liberation of Black people."

U.N. Blue Berets Now Buffer Forces

By FORD BURKHART
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The men who wear the blue berets of United Nations peacekeeping forces are soldiers of a special breed.

The beret is worn today by military men of many nations assigned to U.N. duty as buffer forces in Kashmir, in Jerusalem, on the Mediterranean Island of Cyprus - and since last week by a new emergency force in Egypt.

Canadian Gen. E.L.M. Burns, who took command of the first U.N. emergency force in Egypt in 1956, said:

"It's a strange role for a man who has been trained all of his life as a military officer to go to war."

"We're not out there as an occupying force. We're not there to fight. Not to gain a victory," he said. "We are there to separate two combatants and to preserve the peace."

Burns' men came from the armies of Brazil, Canada, Indonesia, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, India, Norway, Sweden and Yugoslavia.

Some of them wore baseball-type caps. The Indians wore turbans. Others borrowed U.S. Army plastic helmet liners and spray-painted them blue.

That year the U.N. command adopted the blue beret as its symbol.

Since then about 100,000 men have worn it along with the blue U.N. scarf and shoulder patch. They have served in West Irian in the South Pacific, in Lebanon, in the Congo and elsewhere.

Walk-A-Thon To Be Held For Belchertown Residents

On November 17, 1973 a walk-a-thon designed to raise funds for the physical renovation and implementation of new programs for the Adolescent Training Unit of the Belchertown State School will be held. This unit is comprised of male and female residents ranging in age, 10-24 years, who are moderately retarded. The Adolescent Training Unit is a starting point for the resident's entry into a normalized community atmosphere.

Presently, the conditions under which these people live strip them of the human dignity which is necessary for all human beings to attain. The residents sleep in large impersonalized wards, eat in huge dining halls, lack private toilet facilities and have little privacy for themselves. They lack a much needed self-respect. Prolonging the existence of the residents in such conditions simply makes it more difficult each day for the resident to learn the basic skills needed for them to be assimilated into the community. The results of this walk would provide immediate improvement to the building, itself, and to the establishment of innovative programs which the residents are in dire need of. Improvement of the physical environment will effectuate an immediate positive change in the psychologcal and social environment of the resident living in the Adolescent Training Unit.

The walk will be a community effort drawing from young and old alike. Participants are expected from Amherst, Belchertown, Hadley, South Hadley, and surrounding areas. The walk will begin at Sheldon Field, Northampton, at 8:00 a.m. on Saturday, November 17, 1973. Each hiker will be expected to receive renumeration from business and individual sponsors for each mile hiked (eg.-25 cents a mile). The monetary goal is $15,000-the real goal is the betterment of a group of individuals.

Volunteer workers and walkers are desperately needed. Please call 253-5897, 546-8271 or 253-7461 for further details.

Cooperation

It seems as if just about anyone who's connected with any student, cultural, or athletic organization on this campus wants or needs space in the Collegian at some point in time or another. And it also seems that we're always on someone's enemies list for failure to comply in the hoped for manner with the requests we receive. Hard feelings ensue. Hopefully, the community will have a better idea of how to go about procuring the necessary space by reading this.

First, we have to have a reasonable amount of time prior to when you'd like to see something printed so we'll be able to set aside the space. Second, you'll have to consult the appropriate departmental editor for the room you desire. If you need a news notice, see the News Editor, for sports, the Sports Editor, and so forth.

One thing we do object to, though, is the feeling of some people that we're making political judgements if we exclude them or decide to handle their topic on our own. It takes a lot of understanding, I know, to be told that we'd rather do it on our own or that our priorities aren't yours, but it happens.

Another problem that we encounter is pressure from special interest groups. The first time we encountered this sort of thing a year ago we caved in completely to a large physical presence in our office. This poor piece of editorial judgement on our part hopefully did not lead to the impression that that's the only way to get something into the Collegian.

The reason I bring this up now is that it almost happened again last week. Some people think it did happen. Having been out of town myself I can't really tell. But it can't be allowed to happen, and it won't. Cooperation we can dig. Coercion, we can't.

On another front, the continuing saga of Joel Stoneham and Food Service continues. Last summer I called for Stoneham's immediate firing in an editorial commentary for the summer paper. It appears that the issues are considerably heavier than I imagined at the time, and hopefully they'll come to light before the end of the semester. In fact, the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate is holding an open meeting to discuss Food Services and possible board increases for next semester some time next week. If you're interested it might be worth your while to go. Watch this newspaper for details.

At any rate, it now appears that more than one head both in and out of the Department should roll. The indictment on Stoneham stands, but maybe for a different reason, or another one to go along with mismanagement: failure to reveal the internal and external University forces behind the Food Services mess (a form of mismanagement itself?) Stay tuned for the thrilling details.

Remember The Past

"If I am not for myself, who will be for me? Being only for myself, what am I? And if not now, when?"—Hillel

I am Jewish. I was not born in Israel, nor have I ever been to Israel. My parents and grandparents were not born in Israel, nor have they ever been there. Yet, from the day I entered Hebrew School, I have been told that Israel is my homeland.

My hands never toiled in Israeli sand and soil, yet I feel a twinge of pride when I hear tales and see pictures of the fertile Israeli plains and orange groves which the Israeli people created from barren desert.

Now Israel is engaged in a military conflict which threatens its very existence, and I am forced to question my role in this saddening situation. I refused to fight for the United States in the Viet Nam war, as I reject the concept of war in its entirety, and yet I have ambivalent sentiments toward defending the State of Israel.

As an American Jew, what should Israel mean to me?

I asked this question to Noach Hashachar, assistant to Rabbi Aryeh Meir, and this is what he told me:

"The Jewish people have learned throughout the course of history that the minute we seem secure in a certain country, the tides turn," said Noach. "We have learned the lesson of history----we can't depend completely on any government or country. We must depend upon ourselves for our survival and security," he said.

"Some people tend to take the concept of Zionism out of proportion and distort it," he continued. "They take it to by synonymous with imperialism, colonialism, and expansionism. The concept of Zionism is to establish a homeland for the Jewish people. Zionism is much deeper than the surface 19th century concept drafted by Theodore Herzel," said Noach.

"Zionism to the Jewish people is a concept that has existed ever since the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 A.D. It was and is the hope of Zion," he concluded.

The Middle East conflict is a prime example of how an international crisis can internally divide peoples of other nations, and even students at universities. We don't need any more fighting: we don't need any more war. Those who forget the past, we are told, are condemned to relive it.

Yes, the Jewish people must learn the lesson of history and defend their sacred homeland. We may need to return there someday----if not us, perhaps our children.

But the American people must learn the lessons of war, how it weakens a nation and corrodes a people's morale.

I appeal to the University community, Jewish and Gentile, black and white:

We don't need fighting. We've already witnessed the destruction and horrors of war. We don't need emotion-charged shouting matches between Arab supporters and those sympathetic towards Israel. That won't work, either.

What we do need is mutual understanding of all political ideologies in order to strive for a harmonious future. I feel understand and accept the principles of Zionism. If necessary, I will help defend the State of Israel. But I will also try to understand those who disagree with my views. And I ask them to do the same.

Concert Season

The strange phenomenon of John McLaughlin and the Mahavishnu Orchestra performing in the Student Union Ballroom to a less than capacity crowd and Donny Hathaway facing a nearly vacant Cage occurred this weekend. The Program Council sponsored McLaughlin; while the Concert Committee presented Hathaway in the first concert in the Cage in almost three years. Why did McLaughlin perform in the Ballroom to a larger crowd than Hathaway did in the Cage and why was the attendance so poor?

The McLaughlin concert could probably have filled the Cage if it were held there. He didn't perform there simply because the sponsors couldn't make the necessary arrangements. It takes substantial bargaining to get the Cage; time must be alloted for the removal and replacement of athletic equipment (the basketball team is practicing there now) and the construction of a stage. Quite frankly, the Program Council could not have gotten the Cage when they signed McLaughlin because these arrangements could not be met. Still, they did present a fine concert with adequate security. Criticism should not be aimed at them for not having McLaughlin in the Cage; instead praise should be lauded on them for being willing to take a financial loss and provide so much entertainment. Their lack of advertising, and tight security measures assured that there would not be a repeat of the Traffic riot three years ago. Anyone who complained that they couldn't get tickets doesn't know that there were over 100 tickets left unsold. And anyone who complains that they made plans to go home before they found out about the concert must concede that whatever they went home for was worth more to them than hearing McLaughlin.

The Hathaway concert was sponsored by the Concert Committee, which is funded by the Student Senate and presents the Spring concert each year. The fact that only one thousand seats out of a possible four thousand were sold indicates that a mistake in judgement was made in the choice of performers. Not that the groups weren't good, just that they weren't popular. But before one can discuss the choice of performers other factors must be taken into consideration. First, there was the McLaughlin concert. Most people will not buy tickets to two concerts on the same weekend. The dual performance was not necessarily the Concert Committee's fault either. Second, there is the difficulty in gauging a groups popularity; checks were made with local radio stations and record shops to determine if this concert would be a success and there was little evidence that it would fail. Most important there is the problem of who's available and how much they cost. This is the crucial question. If you use the critera of attendance and financial success the concert was a failure; however if you judge the concert by the quality of the music it was a success.

The Concert Committee obviously did not decide to present a show that would not sell out. Their security measures, advertisements, and the rest of the arrangements they made clearly indicate that they are not inept. It is possible that during their extensive study of possible acts they developed tastes that most Umies don't have. They acquainted themselves with music that most people aren't conscious of.

The recent concerts were not mismanaged; on the contrary, they were very well run. The disappointing turnout was, in part, indicative of a change of this campus and the in the music industry. UMass concerts used to be a major event; they were a rare opportunity to see a big name group. If one of the Five Colleges didn't sponsor a show you would have to go to Boston to see top notch performers. But now we have the Springfield Civic Center which has presented the Dead and Tull since it opened. Hartford has even been presenting some decent performers. The promoters of these events not only draw our attention away from campus performances; they also draw the groups away. Last weekend was the start of the concert season. It will be a fine season.

Ignorance Due To News Bias

To The Editor:

This is in response to the article and the letter by Zamir Nestlebaum, both of which were recently published in the Daily Collegian. His article is a typical example of the general ignorance of the Middle East situation shown by many on this campus as well as in the nation. This is due mainly to the one sided, uninformative news reports in this country. Some may say that this is not possible in America "the beautiful". Well, let's face it, this type of reporting has happened in the past (Interpretations in American History, Grob & Bilias, Vol. II, article by Arthur S. Link, pages 244-261), and will continue to happen as long as the American people allow it to. It was this type of journalism that certainly helped plunge the U.S. into the Spanish-American War and led us into World War I.

How many students on this campus (or in the nation) are aware that the Israelis have used NAPALM on the Arabs? This report was conveniently kept out of major U.S. publications but was published by a Socialist newspaper often sold on this campus (and no, I am not a Socialist). Where are all the people who demonstrated and protested against this in Vietnam?

Mr. Nestelbaum, you state that the Arabs attacked Israel on her most holy day and this, consequently, was a cowardly act on the Arabs part. As far as I can remember, there was a great controversy over who actually instigated this most recent war, and again the news media and conflicting reports from both sides are to blame. Did you also know, or forget to mention that at the time the war broke out, this was the most holy time of the year for the Arabs of the Moslem religion· during this time the Moslems fast from sunrise to sunset.

You speak of the "narrow-mindedness selfrightousness that pervades the Arab movement", but show no justification of this fact, (which also may be said to apply to the Jewish feelings on this issue). As an example, I give you the Jewish students and supporters present at the rally sponsored by the Committee In Defense of the Palestinian-Arab Struggle. When they opposed a view of or statement of the speakers, did they raise an intelligent response to it? No, they either laughed, snickered, shook their heads or stormed off.

Next you say that the Arabs refuse to recognize Israel's right to live, the Jew's right to existence and basic human needs. What, Mr. Nestelbaum, do you feel toward one and one half million Palestinian refugees in Israel, who live under martial law, whose children are denied decent opportunities for education and who are denied job opportunities and decent pay? Do you know that the Palestinian refugees must survive on SEVEN CENTS A DAY, while the United States has given Israel 2.2 billion dollars, OVER HALF OF THE GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT of Israel?

I would like to suggest that you attend some of the teach-ins to be held by the Committee in Defense of the Palestinian-Arab Struggle, not to brainwash you (as the news media in the U.S. has towards the continual support of Israel) into becomming anti-Jewish, but because you say, and I quote, "I have respect for the Arab people as I do for all people." Come and be educated about the Arabs and the Palestinians.

I urge all people to look on this situation with an open mind, and listen to both sides.

War is war, and this country, along with the rest of the world, has had enough. Let us all unite and protest United States intervention in the Middle East.

Dear Stooges

To The Editor:

It has been said that the world is divided into two halves· those who laugh at the Three Stooges, and those who wonder why they do.

Well, Moe Howard has indicated that he would be pleased to visit UMass and speak and share his treasured memories with us.

However, DVP, who will sponsor Moe, needs some expressions of support from student stooges to convince them that Moe is a worthwhile recipient of their funds.

I know he is, and I know you know he is, so I would hope that you show your support for the living legend by writing in to DVP and/or the Collegian. Do it soon. This may be your only chance to get your eyes poked.

A Continuous Past

To The Editor:

(In reply to Eric Teal, Collegian, Oct. 30)

Who are you to say what the true spirit of the University is? It is the path to the future, I agree. But the future is made up of a continuous past. One's life doesn't begin at year one of college-so couldn't part of that future be forged from the past? If a man or woman has come to the University with a meaningful relationship already established, it should be looked on as an accomplished goal that one need not seek further. Of course meeting new people is a continuous process in life which should (and does) happen. He or she is very free to form new friendships and enjoy new experiences-whether there's someone back home or not. They just have no need for a new love. Why do you feel there is stagnation? To black out, drop, dismiss, and totally erase such a significant bond as love-merely because it was born at home-is a butcherous measure. Why do you think relationships are handy toys, easily discarded? Be patient, Eric, someone's bound to break away sooner or later. If they don't, at least you'll know why.

Forced To Hitchhike

To The Editor:

In response to North Burn's letter, although we agree that there are traffic hazards caused by hitchhikers, we resent the implication that there are buses available to all hitchhikers. There are no buses to Riverglade or Brittany Manor Apartments. Supposedly, a bus line to this area would interfere with the public transportation route. However, neither the Five College bus nor the public transportation will stop in the immediate vicinity of East Hadley Rd. Therefore, we are forced to either walk from Amherst College or hitchhike. Perhaps one solution to this problem would be the establishment of a new bus stop.

Fantastic Cartoons

Culinary Delights

Dear Joel Stoneham:

I trust, that by this time, you've already noticed that most colorful array of dried regurgitation, found at the rear exit of Berkshire Commons. Could this, perchance, be indicative of the savory culinary delights served daily, in our fine, upstanding dining halls? Surely, to remove this would be a gross affront to the artistic community. Therefore, I rest assured that there are no plans for its removal. Thank you, sir, for yet another feature that was totally unexpected.

Not only are we served gout quality foods here at UMass, but we also receive large-size portions of them. Just think of those two luscious hamburgers, served often enough at the D.C.! Why, the suspense and the very mystery of not knowing what you'll find upon biting into one of the little beauties is enough to shake the fillings from your teeth! Oh! Those long awaited increased portions of starch, and more starch! For example: those luke-warm french fries that give illusion of a full plate; and the stuffing that makes the turkey look as if it's been piled high, when in reality we are getting less. These are to mention but a few.

How could we ever hope to forget the memory of wrestling with the cube steak (or, "mystery meat", as we affectinately refer to it) during the evening meal? I've also witnessed the awarding of an extra slice of meatloaf which is, supposedly, an amelioration of past meals. However, I have the distinct impression, Mr. Stoneham, that you are cutting it a bit thin. (Close, but no cigar, Joel)

I, for one, will never forget tonight's meal. A friend and I "fed" at 5:00 p.m., and an hour later we were still very, very hungry; the reason being that the quality of roast beef served led us to believe that it was from those poor cattle that suffocate on the train. Where in the world do you get this stuff, anyway? Are you, perhaps, affiliated with Ruby Vine's Railroad Salvage? Or maybe this food, and I use the term loosely, that we are subjected to is the culmination of a nation-wide search? One must have to search far and wide in order to find food as cheap as this, yet still sanctioned "fit" for human consumption--at lest, by your standards. What next, Mr. Stoneham, the Purina Company? Maybe you've already explored this possibility. Are these to be the memories that each and every one of us will keep in our hearts forever? (Or is that heartburn? Well, nobody's perfect, Joel.)

If, perchance, you feel that I am being much too critical, or too cynical, it could be due to the fact that I have been eating at the dining commons much too long now. Have you ever given any consideration at all, dear Joel, to the phrase, "You are what you eat"?

Shouts And Honks

By MARK VOGLER

WASHINGTON, D.C.--A small but vocal demonstration infront of the White House Saturday afternoon reflected a growing concern among American people that the Nixon administration has gone too far--and that the surrender of the tapes is not enough to quell the cries for impeachment.

There's a strong indication--juding from the determination displayed by demonstrators here--that people are just fed up with Mr. Nixon and can no longer accept his sale pitch.

The release of the tapes last week momentarily postponed the high prospects of the President's exile from the presidency. However, his behavior during the Mid East crisis--his over-reacting which still merits an explanation and his abusement at the hands of the press Friday night have further tarnished his image as one who is capable of governing this country.

Surely, Congress must make the first move to achieve impeachment--and the prospects aren't all that exceptional since the tapes release.

Yet, the sale of impeachment stickers is multiplying, the word impeachment has become a household word and Western Union continues to be flooded with telegrams emphatically demanding the ouster of a man who has betrayed the trust of millions. The beat goes on.

Less than a thousand mobilized around the White House Saturday, chanting impeachment slogans while the President was recuperating from his Friday Night confrontation many miles away in Camp David.

But the President heard the shouts and the honking horns just the same. When the traffic congestion died down on Pennsylvania Avenue, Metorpolitan Police retaliated by sacking honking motorists with five-dollar citations for unnecessary use of the horn. It will take more than the D.C. police to slow up the momentum of the impeachment backers as Nixon's days pass on.

The composition of the crowd was encouraging with respect to age, but did not have many minority people. The size of the crowd, while disappointing since it fell way off from its projected 5,000, attacked Nixon's credibility with gusto, carrying a wide assortment of signs as the more enthusiastic donned Nixon costumes. I guess it may turn into a Halloween fad -- Nixon in jail garb.

A spokesman for one of the coalitions to impeach the President said the demonstration was kept "in low key" at the advice of Ralph Nader. They may want to let the momentum stall in anticipation of big waves coming from this week's resumed Watergate hearings and the Senate judiciary's inquiry into circumstances surrounding the firing of Special Independent Prosecutor Archibald Cox. This may be their strategy.

Youngsters, young people and elderly folks were all out there expressing themselves in their own way. There were no incidents, but it was surprising. The manner in which the police lined up like an army would seem to invite trouble.

In the coming weeks Washington based committees for impeachment plan to multiply their efforts. Some even see a march on Washington by delegations across the country.

If Nixon does have a silent majority, they better make themselves heard. The consensus of people in this town is that Richard Nixon should be impeached. And the polls around the country are climbing in his disfavor every day.

Middle East Teach-In

To The Editor:

"The two-and-a-half million Jews in Israel want to ensure their rights, not only individual freedom and freedom of worship, but to live in a sovereign state of their own. They want what Fatah, even in their most liberally phrased declarations, is not prepared to grant them - the right of self-determination as a national entity within a sovereign territorial framework. The problem is not a personal one of a given number of individual Jews but of a framework for a specific human entity possessing its own culture, political structure and awareness of identity. In the same way, the problem of the Palestinians is not that of individual rights to a certain house or plot of land but that of self-determination as a national body........"

The problem of the Middle-East is one of two peoples struggling for national sovereignty. Many Israeli Jews are moving towards an awareness of the Palestinian entity. It has not been easy for them. For many years the only spokesman for the Palestinians whose words reached Israeli ears, spoke of the destruction of their state. The reaction — in the context of modern Jewish history, a completely human one — "NEVER AGAIN!!!" If only there had been Arab voices of moderation, of compromise. There was only the rhetoric of Khartoum — "no negotiations, no recognition." So the struggle deepened and again — war, suffering, and bloodshed.

The time has come for BOTH the Arabs and Israelis to realize that intransigence can only bring more of the same. Both the Israelis and the Palestinians want an end to the conflict and the suffering. What has not been understood is that their suffering is intertwined — inseparable. It is in such a frame of reference that a teach-in on the Middle-East is being held tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Campus Center, Room 113. We call upon all people of good-will — people who are tired of hearing worn-out rhetoric of hate and intransigence — to join us in a discussion of the causes and prospects for peace in the Middle-East.

Rational Discussion Needed

To The Editor:

I appreciate Mr. Rosenfield's concern about the biased response by some members of the University community toward the relative Middle East positions of the two superpowers. However, Mr. Rosenfield's lack of knowledge about the Middle East is painfully obvious. The letter was merely one more example of the vast amounts of propaganda, slogans, and general misinformation, by both Pro-Israeli and Pro-Arab groups, which have flooded the campus. Rational discussion of the Middle East issues is sorely needed on this campus. Therefore, I invite Mr. Rosenfield, and the University community, to attend a Middle East teach-in tonight in Room 113 of the Campus Center at 8:00 p.m.

Fred London

Political Music

To The Editor:

There is a large sign in the Student Union advertising the coming to the University of the Leningrad Philharmonic, "direct from the Soviet Union." "Philharmonic" means "lover of harmony", but in the Soviet Union today there is no harmony. Political dissenters are still regularly sent to forced labor camps and insane asylums, and on the world scene the Soviet Union works to promote wars and extinguish freedom. In the last ten years, the Soviet Union has provoked two wars in the Middle East, sent its tanks into Prague to crush Czechoslovakia's brief springtime of freedom, armed North Vietnam for a war that cost over fifty thousand American lives, and brought the long dark night of Stalinism back to the Russian and Eastern European peoples.

The masters of the Kremlin believe, however, that sending fine musical groups like the Leningrad Philharmonic abroad will make people forget their record. Do not say that music is non-political, in the Soviet Union nothing is non-political. Even the basic human right of freedom or worship is not non-political. For these reasons, I ask those of the university community who were planning to attend this orchestral concert to boycott it and, if they wish, to buy a record instead. Do not deceive yourselves, the Leningrad Philharmonic will be here as representatives of the Soviet state.

Latin Soul

To The Editor:

I have just read Zoe Best's article "Free Puerto Rican Nationalists March." I know that Zoe Best is not Puerto Rican, but what she does have is "latin soul", which to me is just as important.

I was deeply moved by her article, as I'm sure every other Puerto Rican with some degree of consciousness was.

"Borinquen's" struggle for independence is a long and frustrating history which is still very much alive today. The main problem or better still, "argument", in favor of colonialization, is one of economic reasons, but it seems that every time we try to take a step towards economic independence, some capitalistic interests (both Puerto Rican and American) stifle it. For instance, during the last governor's stay in power, there was an effort to form a Caribbean Common Market with San Juan as the base city. Governor Ferrer, with his interests in the cement industry and his close alliance with American "big business", completely killed all hopes of putting the plan into action.

When you see yourself being pitted against these monstrous forces, in the struggle for liberty, you can see the need for a Nationalist Party, for independence groups not only in Puerto Rico, but in whatever nation this situation may be existing. Severence from the United States and its dominating force is what we need, and if we need to employ methods like the ones the Nationalist Party advocates, then let it be! As Reuben Berrios, a present leader and spokesman for the independence movement in the island, said, "Violar la ley del imperio, es cumplir la ley de la patria", "To violate the law of the empire is to comply with the law of the fatherland."

In the beginning of this article, I stated that I was deeply moved by Zoe Best's article. I lied. The truth of the matter is that I was very saddened by it. Saddened, because I realized the bonds around me, around the beautiful shores of "Borinquen". Freedom is a precious thing, it must be beautiful to experience it! "Muerte o libertad!Que viva Puerto Rico libre! 1868" "Grito de Lares", 23 de septiembre 1868.

D.V.P. Needs New People

To The Editor:

On behalf of the Distinguished Visitors Program, I would like to encourage all Freshmen and Transfer students to consider applying for membership on the DVP Committee. DVP plans and runs approximately twenty programs per year. Members are constantly active working on programs and with speakers involved in a wide range of contemporary issues and interests. Because of this responsibility to the university community we are encouraging people to apply who: 1) can draw ideas and experiences from their backgrounds of minority interests, of special interests in a field of endeavor, or of lecture programming; and 2) are prepared to commit their energies to all DVP responsibilities and activities.

I hope that all Freshmen and Transfer students who feel they have something to contribute to DVP will apply.Applicationscan be obtained in the Student Activities office on the balcony floor of the Student Union. Due date is November 12, and applications should be returned to the DVP office, 428 Student Union or to the Student Activities Office.

For more information call 545-0920. Hope to see your application.

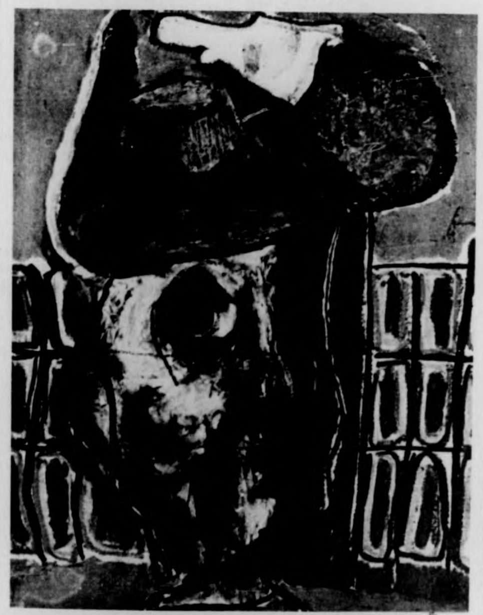
"Deeply Human Art, I Hope," is the way Michael A. Cohen describes his exhibit of paintings, on display November 3 through December 1 at the Common Ground, 25 Elliot Street, Brattleboro, Vermont.

Inspired by volunteer work at Belchertown State School, Cohen, an MFA candidate at the University, attempts to show innocence, humore, sadness--yet hope--in a series of childlike works.

All are invited to the opening, from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m., which Cohen says is "in color, with wine and a little cheese."

Below is Cohen's "The Missing Eye".



Paul Dudley White: Doctor, Researcher, Friend

HARTFORD (AP) — Dr. Paul Dudley White, one of the world's leading heart specialists who died Wednesday at 87, was a "steadying influence" in a time of turmoil, a longtime friend of White's said.

Dr. Harold Knight, head of the cardio-vascular section at St. Francis Hospital, said "I will miss Dr. White as a friend and also as a steadying influence that people look to for evaluation of new changes and developments in this time when all theories and philosophies seem to be shifting so rapidly."

Knight, whose father worked with White in 1924, said White practiced what he preached.

"He of course was instrumental in developing the research programs and did some of the research himself on the risk factors.

"When he found out that exercise and staying thin were important he stayed thin and he rode his bike in the traffic of Boston every day."

Dr. White served in both the British and American armies in World War I. After the war, he continued his research, adding data from books, articles, lectures and other information mined from the great medical libraries of London, Paris and Vienna.

From this background he wrote his classic 1,000-page reference work, "Heart Disease," published in 1931. This book stood as a standard reference work for doctors for decades and reappeared in many revised editions.

Dr. White was one of the first to recognize that a heart attack did not necessarily mean a short or invalid life. After a mild heart attack in December, 1970, Dr. White continued his own program of moderation and sensible exercise.

Another finding of White's research was that the size of a mammal is inversely related to its heart beat. He recorded the 600-a-minute beating of mice hearts. He was 70 when he went hunting for whales so that he could record the ponderously slow once-in-two-seconds beat of their hearts.

This research ended the long-standing misinterpretation of the rapid heart beat of children being indicative of heart disease.

His private practice gave him much satisfaction and he was beloved by his patients. A patient was never a "case" to him but an individual human being.

WMUA

The prospective faculty election on collective bargaining has raised many important questions for the students and faculty of UMass. What is the rationale for faculty collective bargaining on students, administration and non-professional staff? How would collective bargaining procedures really work? All of these and more questions will be explored tonight on WMUA's "Dialogue". John Robichaud and Terry Hofmann of the Public Debate Program will discuss collective bargaining and its ramifications with Professor Harvey Friedman, director of the Labor Relations Center on WMUA at 6:00 p.m. Thursday.

"Dialogue" is a project of the UMass Public Debate Program which is dedicated to the principle that the free and open advocacy of ideas leads to better understanding and policy making. Aired biweekly on WMUA "Dialogue" will explore issues affecting the university, the five college community, the commonwealth and the country.

At The Podium: Ram Dass And Robeson

On Monday, November 5, at 7:30 p.m., Room to Move will present Baba Ram Dass in Mahar Auditorium. Ram Dass, formerly Richard Alpert, Ph.D. and professor of Psychology at Harvard, is well known to many as a teacher, model, and symbol of spiritual development and unfoldment in this country.

In the early 1960's, Richard Alpert worked with Timothy Leary at Harvard on the research on LSD and other psychedelic drugs. After several years of study and experimentation, Alpert felt that the Western philosophy and psychology with which he was familiar was not adequate to describe or account for his and others' experiences with the drugs.

In 1967 he went to India, and there he encountered beings who were highly evolved and apparently knowledgeable about the higher states of consciousness experienced with the psychedelics. He began his study of various yoga and meditation practices, and the transformation into Ram Dass. This transformation is described in his book Be Here Now, which was published in 1971.

C. James To Speak

The location of the second talk in the Paul Robeson, Sr., Lecture Series at UMass has been changed from SBA Room 120 to Herter Hall 231.

The lecture, Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 8 p.m., features Mr. C.L.R. James, professor of history and literature, Federal CityCollege and Rutgers University. His subject will be "Mr. Paul Robeson and The International Struggle for Freedom and Independence."

The series is organized by UMass Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, the Institute for Pan African Culture and others in the UMass community. Mr. James is the author of "The Black Jacobins," the history of the San Domingo revolution, and "World Revolution," a study of the rise and fall of the Comintern. He has carried on dialogue with such leaders as Paul Robeson, Jomo Kenyatta, Kwame Nkrumah, and George Padmore. He is also a novelist, playwright, and literary critic.

Wanted: People Who Want To Be Different

Culturnatives Clearinghouse is looking for energetic volunteers who are interested in starting a new service for those on campus who are trying to find creative ways out of the "established" way of doing things.

Those who qualify are invited to a meeting at 4:00 p.m. Thurs., Nov. 1 in 319 Hampshire House.

The initial work of the Culturnatives Clearinghouse task force will be information gathering. There is a huge store of human resources within the university community, a potential treasure chest which has not been tapped. There are people with skills to be shared: building log cabins or domes, foraging for wild foods, crafts, maintenance, organizing, converting cars to propane — skills which can be used to start communes or live more cheaply or provide an income independent from 9-to-5 or to improve a dorm living situation or start a new group.

If you're interested, but can't make this meeting, call 545-2789 and leave your name. You'll be notified of the next meeting.

The Culturnatives Clearinghouse Task force is a project of the United Christian Foundation.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The president of Local 500, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, in Vancouver, Canada, claims that he successfully administrates through the aid of astrology. Louis Kaufman, 38, is quoted as stating, "I can represent my men and negotiate with their employers with confidence and strength because I know, from analyzing their horoscopes, exactly what sort of person I'm dealing with."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Roadblocks are removed. Relations with one in authority will improve. Changes occur in partnership or marital situation. Home life will be more pleasant. You get what you want after making minor concession.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keen observation on your part wins the day. Leave direct action, confrontation for another time. Emphasis is on planning ahead in work, health, service areas. Let others make declarations. Hold your fire. Time is on your side.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Enlightened self-interest should be featured. Don't give up something of value for nothing. Your ideas, creativity are at a premium. Capricorn, Cancer persons are likely to be involved. Emphasize fair return for investments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint from Taurus message. Finish rather than initiate project. Deal with one who is dynamic, has far-reaching concepts. Don't limit potential. What was a stable area receives benefit of new life. Gain shown through property, land.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New ways of accomplishing tasks are featured. Highlight original approach. One of your sign plays prominent role. Surge of vitality returns. Ideas flourish. You attract favorable attention and publicity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You take steps to ensure security. You also learn by teaching. By expressing ideas, you encourage chain reaction of knowledge. Aquarian is likely to be in picture. Romance, creativity also are featured. You feel alive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Family member may express discontent. Be receptive. Some changes now would be beneficial. Know it and be mature. Hanging on to past may be substitute for security blanket. Experiment. Reach for potential. Highlight versatility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain valid hint from Libra message. Break loose from unnecessary restriction. Means give yourself room for expression. Running here, there and everywhere is not constructive. Be yourself. Relative could be misinformed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cash flow is stimulated. You make right move at right time. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. Change, travel and variety are featured. Payments, collections are in picture. Now you can review values.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lunar cycle is such that you get green light from powers that be. Means progress is possible. Take initiative. Backing comes from family member. Home life can be more harmonious if you make intelligent concession.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get best results by communicating, writing, advertising. One at a distance could get "in touch" with good news. Past efforts are repaid. Pisces, Virgo persons could be in picture. Find ways of better distribution.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Friendly advice can be turned into solid profit. Know it and be ready to take advantage of opportunity. Mate, partner is likely to be involved. Some wishes are closer to fulfillment than might be imagined.

Many born under Leo and Aquarius figure in your life. December can be one of the most productive months of 1973 for you.

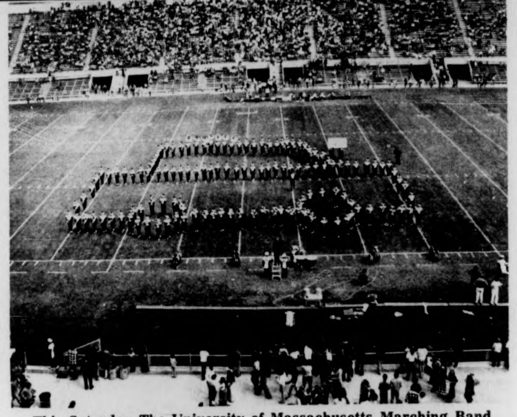
The Band Plays On...

"Bolt your windows, lock your doors and turn out your lights, because during the next few minutes you will be subjected to . . . . shock!" No this isn't the beginning of a horror story, or a scoop about President Nixon, it is what you all will hear at Alumni Stadium this Saturday afternoon. It is the opening announcement for the halftime show, entitled Monster Mass. The University Marching Band will once again thrill the crowd during halftime, except this time not only thrill, but chill the fans.

All season long, Director of Bands John Jenkins and Assistant Director Joe Duchi, think up halftime shows that will entertain and enlighten football crowds at UMass. Well, this week, Joe Duchi has finally snapped! He has had the band outside from 4:40 to 6:00 p.m. in the cold, mist and mud, since Tuesday. Doing what? Why, the "Monster Mash!"

This Saturday marks the final appearance of the band this season and the band is going to finally devulge what goes on inside of Old Chapel in the wee hours of the night. What was often thought of as a student practicing his trumpet, or crashing the cymbals, has not been what you have thought. The Band knows what lurks in the halls of Old Chapel, but has kept it under its hat. Well, Saturday afternoon, you all will know, but rembember to keep sane, you must repeat to yourself: "Its only a halftime show, Its only a halftime show, Its only a half...."

In keeping with the spirit of the day, the show will begin with a salute to Yogi Berra. From that point on, Yogi had better take cover, because the streets of New York would be safer than the football field at halftime. Featured music during the show, will be "The Addams Family," "The Munsters", "Purple People Eater", "Monster Mash", and Edgar Winter's "Frankenstein." People with weak hearts are advised not to view the show!



This Saturday The University of Massachusetts Marching Band will lend its hand in paying tribute to Yogi Berra. Pictured above, is the band, in formation, during the halftime of the Holy Cross game.

...As Belchertown Residents Watch

The Belchertown Volunteers will host twenty five residents of the Belchertown State School at the UMass-Vermont football game this Saturday, November 3, at Alumni Stadium. Last year, for the first time, the volunteers accompanied a group of residents to a UMass game in what they hoped would become an annual affair. The residents immensely enjoyed the opportunity to leave the institution for an afternoon and watch the game at Alumni Stadium. This year, as well as last year, tickets for the residents will be graciously provided by the UMass Athletic Dept. and the Umass ticket manager, Mr. Wally Novak.

At this point, students interested in accompanying residents to the game are still needed. Anyone who is planning to go to Saturday's game and would be interested in sitting with a Belchertown resident is requested to leave his or her ticket book in the R.S.O. office by 2:00 p.m. Thursday. Any person who has already received his ticket for the game and is interested in sitting with a Belchertown resident is requested to call 253-5897 by Friday. Further details about where to meet for the game and when will be in the notices of Friday's Collegian.

Bruins Shut Out Stars

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Wayne Cashman triggered a Boston onslaught with a goal and an assist and Phil Esposito scored in his 10th straight National Hockey League game as the Bruins overwhelmed the winless Minnesota North Stars 5-0 Wednesday night.

Cashman scored the first goal in the first period to open Boston's 38-shot attack and set the stage for goalie Ross Brooks' first shutout of the season.

Then at 12:02, Cashman zipped a pass to Ken Hodge who scored his ninth goal of the season and gave the Bruins a 2-0 edge.

Esposito, the NHL's leading scorer with 23 points, made it 3-0 in the second period to maintain his string of scoring in every Boston game this season.

Andre Savard, later in the second period, and Bobby Orr, with his fifth goal of the season in the third, topped off the rout of the North Stars, who have lost five and tied six games as the only winless NHL team.

Brooks, starting only his second game, had a rather easy time of it, steering out 25 North Stars shots as the Bruins protected their East Division lead.

Celtics Defeat Cavs

BOSTON (AP)-Don Nelson and Don Chaney sparked Boston to an 18-point lead in the first seven minutes and the aggressive Celtics went on to whip the Cleveland Cavaliers 128-110 Wednesday night in a National Basketball Association game.

Nelson popped in eight points and Chaney converted two steals into baskets while tallying seven points as the Celtics got away to a 13-2 lead and then a 25-8 advantage en route to avenging an upset at Cleveland Sunday.

Cleveland trimmed the lead to 10 points 65-55 at halftime as Austin Carr found the range for eight points, but it was a futile charge.

The Celtics wrapped up the game in the third period, outscoring the Cavaliers 42-28 as the big guns, John Havlicek, Dave Cowens and Jo Jo White, accounted for 24 points and a 107-83 lead.

Cowens and White each finished with 21 points and Chaney had 17. Austin Carr led the Cleveland shooters with 26 points, while Bobby Smith had 14 and Bob Rule 13.

TEP Campus Champs Again

ends" rush with zone blocking, and picked the CE secondary apart with short, flat passes. By now the blocking of Paul LaLiberti, John Griffen, Joe Ferretti, and Jay Phalen was coping successfully with the Civil Engineering rush. Late in the third Quarter, Ron Beaurivage broke straight down the middle, turned halfway at midfield to take a pass from Bruce McNamara, and was tagged. Apparently. But as two CE secondary men converged on him, he shoveled the ball to Pete Backstrom, who romped down the sidelines and scored.

This was the turning point of the game. The Civil Engineering momentum dissolved amid the cheers of a partisan Tau Epsilon Phi crowd, and the vaunted line of Mike Buckley, George Trubiano, Mike Joyce, and John Kennedy just couldn't force any TEP mistakes. In the closing seconds of the game, CE marched to the TEP seven. But Ron Beaurivage is leaping interception at the five snuffed out CE's last flickering hopes of a championship.

Stickers End On Sour Note

By BETH O'BRIEN

UMass ended their 1973 field hockey season on a down note, dropping a close decision to Northeastern, 2-1, and making their record for the season 5-3-3.

Playing on their own thick grassy fields, NU had the decided advantage early in the game. They utilized scoops, flicks and other airborn maneuvers while the grass bogged down UMass's running and passing game. NU jumped into an early lead on a nice flick into the corner of the net.

UMass's Wendy Alpaugh led the team out of their early foundering by switching the attack to the air, and effectively using air dribbles, scoops and flicks. The play evened out and the half ended with NU ahead, 1-0.

UMass grabbed the second half momentum with an early score on a drive from Elaine Senosk on a centering pass from Wendy Alpaugh. The game continued in pretty much see-saw fashion until a late score by NU put the pressure on UMass. They pressed for a score in the circle, but missed a couple of good chances as the NU defense held fast for the win, 2-1.

The J.V.'s playing in waning daylight, beat the NU J.V. 1-0. The game winner was a beautifully hit hard drive by Donna O'Brien.

The game was called after 20 minutes due to darkness. The J.V. season record stands at an impressive 6-1-1.

All Star Team Selections Highlight Of UMass Season

By BETH O'BRIEN

The selection last weekend of eight members of the UMass field hockey squad to the Northeast College first and second teams was both an honor and the highlight of the season.

Starting on the first team from UMass will be Lori Nazar, junior fullback and three-year member of the UMass team and Wendy Alpaugh. Wendy has been the consistent high scorer for UMass in her four years with the team and is tri-captain.

The Northeast College Tournament was held to select the 50 players that will make up two first teams and two second teams which will play in the Northeast Field Hockey Tournament in Rye, New York on the weekend of Nov. 10-11.

A Selection Committee will choose the 55 best players from the 25 participating teams. These players will then represent the New England area in the National Tournament to be held at Winchester High School over the Thanksgiving recess.

The players chosen for the second team from UMass are Kathy O'Neil, Elaine Senosk, Joanne Lorrey, Joanne Smith, Kathe Germann and Barb Martell.

Unitas: End Of Road

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Will Johnny Unitas, the Pittsburgh kid who was drafted by the Steelers but shunted off to Baltimore without playing a game, wind up his legendary pro football career back home?

The San Diego Chargers asked the Steelers this week to consider taking Unitas on waivers, along with his salary — reportedly $250,000 annually.

"We told them we're not interested," a Pittsburgh spokesman said Wednesday of the quarterback who has passed for more yards and more touchdowns than any other signal-caller in pro football history.

Unitas, 40, was sold to San Diego earlier this year for a reported $150,000-equal to the deferred income which he would have received from Baltimore. Then he signed a two-year contract with the Chargers.

But after three games as their No.1 quarterback, Unitas was benched halfway through the Chargers' 38-21 loss at Pittsburgh. He hasn't played since.

The Steelers drafted Unitas No. 9 in 1955, but before his first pro season Unitas was waived. He went to sandlots near Old Forbes Field as quarterback of the Bloomfield Rams, earning $6 a game.

The Colts invited him to their training camp in January 1956, and Unitas went on to win acclaim.

The trading deadline has passed, but a player put on waivers could be claimed by any of the other National Football League clubs, bidding in reverse order of their 1972 finish. His current contract would be continued with the new club.

The Steelers' No. 1 quarterback, Terry Bradshaw, suffered a partial shoulder separation Sunday against Cincinnati and may be out four to six weeks.

Paul Metallo

Down In The Bush Leagues

By STEVE CROWE

For Paul Metallo, the days of screaming fans, dancing cheerleaders, and Boardwalk Bowl glory are gone. Instead, the man who broke all UMass rushing records last year is playing defensive safety for the celler-dweller Western Mass. Pioneers of the bush Atlantic Coast League.

"What I miss most of all is being with a winning team," said Metallo, who's Holyoke-based team is 1-8 this year.

How does a guy who is so accustomed to success, cope with the frustration of playing in the bush leagues?

"I'm playing,-that's the important thing. I'm learning and that's good, too."

But the disappointment of playing on the Western Mass. Pioneers could be seen on Metallo's face. The team is a mixture of two basic types of players, as Metallo pointed out: those who are playing in hopes of getting into the pros or who just want to play a couple years of football· and secondly, those who aren't going anywhere. These are the ones who cause most of the trouble on the team.

"They go around with the attitude that 'I'm a big dude 'cuz I can fight anyone," said Metallo of the troublemakers on the team. "But they're really nothing." Being a big man in the bush leagues, realizes Metallo, really doesn't amount to much at all.

"I had a friend from the Midwest who went to camp (Kansas City Chiefs) with me who quit the team (Holyoke) because the club was so unorganized with everyone fighting all the time" he added.

For Metallo, it was quite a change to make from running back to defensive back. Drafted in the thirteenth round as a defensive back, of the NFL draft last year, the Kansas City Chiefs were looking at the speed and quickness of Metallo as the material for cornerback.

"I don't think they even knew I was a running back in college," said Metallo. "I was listed on the rookie camp roster as a defensive back and I was never given the chance to try out for running back."

Although Metallo didn't know why he wasn't drafted as a running back himself, it is speculated that he was not big enough. He surely had the speed (fastest sprinter in rookie camp-4.4 seconds in the 40 yard dash), but his 5-11, 180 lb. frame was probably not considered big enough for a NFL running back.

"Sure, I miss running the ball," confessed Metallo, "I always got a special thrill when I did run in college. But I realize that if I'm going to make it in the pros its going to be as a defensive cornerback and not as a running back."

But his lack of experience in playing defensive safety was the reason he was cut from the Chiefs. "I had to learn fifteen different defenses," said Metallo, "at the same time I was trying out for the team."

But now, Metallo knows all the defenses and by playing safety on the Pioneers, he is getting a chance to improve himself at cornerback. "Now, I'm getting the overall picture on defense," he said. "But anyone can play safety," he said "it takes a lot to play cornerback."

When Paul Metallo was trying out for professional football teams this summer, he came across a couple incidents of prejudice.

It was apparent to him that the people in the NFL did not respect New England. "They don't think we play a good brand of football up here," said Metallo. "But I was happy to see Boston College beat Texas A and M and play good games against Tulane (and Miami). And UMass beat Boston College last year. Maybe now, people will take another look at UMass football and New England football in general.

After being cut by the Chiefs, Metallo went north to try out for a Canadian football team, the Edmonton Eskimos. "Their coach was an idiot," said Metallo, "I didn't like him and he didn't like me. I had the respect of the players, and they were expecting me to stay around and play for them. But the coach-he had something about the NFL guys (those players who had played in the NFL). He felt, 'I can't let them go-they played in the NFL!' No matter if someone else was better than them, it was more important to him that the guy was in the NFL."

As far as Metallo was concerned, the Canadian Football League is not that good. "Last year's UMass football team could have won games up there," he said.

Where does Paul Metallo go from here?

"I can't see playing in the Atlantic Coast League for any more than two years," he said. As a free agent, Metallo will decide which pro team he would like to try out for next spring. A year's experience should help him a lot, but a career in the ADFL is not Metallo's idea of what he wants to do.

"If I don't make it in two years," he said, "I'd like to try coaching or go on to grad school (in Physical Education.)"

Plans are presently being made for the formation of a World Football League, an international league with teams stationed in Tokyo, London, Honolulu, Tampa, and New York.

"The WFL has an international flair to it which is attractive to a lot of bachelors. This could even draw a lot of bachelors away from the NFL. It's a chance to see a new sport overseas and I think it will go over big if it is understood."

But Metallo emphasized that the WFL to him is only a second choice. "I still want to play in the NFL," he said. And by his willingness to play a year or two in the shadow of the ACFL, Metallo has proven that he surely must want badly to play in the pros.

Why I Hate Sports

By BOB SCHEIER

I hate professional sports. Hockey bores me to death. My heart drops every time I walk into a room on a sunny Sunday afternoon and see an audience of otherwise healthy people sprawled out watching grainy quarterbacks dissolve into pig-piles, amid the static. Basketball (on TV) is about as exciting and unpredictable as watching The Brady Bunch. It's depressing--like reading the personals in The Real Paper and wondering vaguely if you should be able to enjoy what all those other people seem to be enjoying.

It isn't sports themselves I hate; baseball can be reasonably interesting, when watched in person, and watching it on TV can be a nostalgic rush, remembering afternoons ten years ago watching the Gillette parrot between innings on the World Series. Football in the stadium can be an interesting plunge into another culture, dodging the drunks and the alums.

But sports as it is packaged, sexed-up, idolized, and homogenized for a mass audience of fading jocks disgusts me. Football (via the networks) isn't a game. It's a culture celebration. Virile men. Big expensive cars. Gillette shave cream. Maximus Super beer. Plenty of cheerleaders (and pretty girls in the stands for the camera to glance at self-consciously). Flags flying in the wind. Give me A break.

And sports at the collegiate fantasy level is even worse. Thousands of high school track and football freaks--who genuinely enjoyed sports competition in High School come up to the big university and crawl away from their books on a Sunday afternoon to escape into past vico tries, trading obscure statistics and lies about plays, runs, jumps, throws, hits, blocks, shots, passes, sprints, and tackles, they'll never see again.

Marx said religion is the opiate of the people. He should have seen the Boston Bruins. What else can you call something that keeps thousands of middle-aged men who hate their jobs, wives, kids, fellow workers, neighbors, and probably themselves safe in a chair guzzling beer after beer and trying to focus their eyes long enough to see what "That Espo" has done this time?

Which brings us to golf. Watching a golf match if you don't play golf is like reading a dirty book before you reach puberty. You can't figure out what all the fuss is about. Golf is exercise? Only for the caddies.

Then there are the sports fans. "Hey, did you see that save? Didja Bob? Huh? That was the wildest thing I ever saw. Shit, that reminds me of the time I was playing with a bunch of kids on this pond near my house." Don't bother. One fanatic hitting another over the head with a hockey stick is the same to me. If you've seen one skull fractured in Boston Garden you've seen them all.

The media envelopes sports with swirls of exhaustive coverage, recoverage, analysis, and biographical idolatry of every obscure half-back and pitcher the industry can crank out. If the Middle East War were covered in the same depth and detail as the Red Sox, we'd know what shoe President Sadat puts on first in the morning--and why.

Which doesn't mean, as I said, that I hate all sports--or all Jocks. As for sports--show me a Frisbee and I start drooling. (Show me a hockey stick and I start yawning.) And coming to college was one of the great learning experiences of my life because I learned that not only are jocks people--some of them are damn good people who enjoy athletic competition, even in its most homogenized (or Marty Kelley-ized) forms.

Just don't tell me about it.

Ali Mouths Off..Bares Jaw

NEW YORK (AP) — Muhammad Ali exhibited his jaw Wednesday to combat rumors that it had been broken again. But he did it reluctantly and with a touch of sarcasm.

"How's he gonna know if anything is wrong with my jaw," snapped Ali when told at a news conference that his jaw was going to be examined by a New York State Athletic Commission physician.

"He can't see my jaw," said Ali as Dr. Harry Kleiman carried out the examination. "You'd have to X-ray my jaw. There's nothing wrong with it. This is just publicity. They're just jivin' the people."

The news conference was called by Madison Square Garden Boxing, Inc., following reports that Ali's jaw, which was broken in a fight with Ken Norton last March, was broken again last Friday in an exhibition in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. The Garden will be the scene of Ali's rematch with Joe Frazier Jan. 28.

Owners Seek To Extend Dealing

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Major league baseball's general managers recommended Wednesday the adding of another interleague trading session.

Winding up a three-day meeting, the general managers suggested that the trades between the National and American leagues be allowed between May 15 and June 15 each season. Such trading is now allowed from five days after the World Series to the last day of the major league meetings, which normally take place in December.

TEP Caps 2nd Campus Crown

By WALT POWERS

Pete Backstrom was mobbed by his teammates as he sat in the Boyden locker room. "Today the Boyden Bowl, someday maybe the Superbowl!", he yelled, and you had to believe him after he scored the winning touchdown for Tau Epsilon Phi in their 9-6 intramural championship victory over Civil Engineering. The score, which came on a play that would have boggled the mind of Dick Macpherson, erased a three point halftime deficit against the valiant "over-the hill gang" from Civil Engineering, and gave TEP their second consecutive intramural championship.

If the play that won the game was unexpected, the outcome itself wasn't. Both teams played pretty much to form on this cool, clear, Halloween night. Civil Engineering, the defending grad-fac champions, had given up just two points in the regular season. Their team featured a cautious, methodical offense and the most ferocious pass rush in the IM's. Tau Epsilon Phi was younger, bigger, and more explosive than CE, and relied mainly on the pass receiving prowess of Ron Beaurivage and Pete Backstrom. They were a "second half" team that preferred to look for defensive weaknesses in the first half, and exploit them in the second. As it turned out, that was exactly what happened.

After TEP's opening drive sputtered, Civil Engineering took advantage of a fifteen yard penalty and advanced to the TEP twenty. Steve Buckley then hit his brother Mike with a twenty yard TD pass, giving CE a lead that lasted till the middle of the third period.

The TEP defense solidified after that, and late in the second quarter the TEP offense put together their first sustained drive of the game. After a tremendous diving catch by Ron Beaurivage brought TEP to the CE seven, the drive stalled, and Steve Tonelli booted a twelve yard field goal. A few minutes later, Tonelli's second attempt, a 45 yarder FG slipped just under the crossbar, and Civil Engineering left the field at the half with a 6-3 lead.

In the second half, TEP responded to the CE's "looping

Koalas No. 1

By SHARON HUGHES

With about one minute left in the 4th quarter, the Crampton Koalas scored against the Squad to win (8-0) the campus championship in women's intramural football.

Koala left end, Jane Hopkins, snagged a pass at the 20 yard line and ran it the rest of the way for the touch-touchdown.

There was little action until the last few minutes. The game was a tough defensive battle against two evenly matched teams, but neither played up to their potential. Both the Koalas and the Squad had trouble gaining yardage and hanging onto passes.

Squad quarterback Kathy McDonald completed many fine passes to flanker Marilyn Ritz.

With under a minute left, the Squad offense got it to the 30 yard line when the Koalas intercepted to end the game.

In the playoff for third place, the Field Whalers topped the Knowlton Notlwonks 13-6.

"Injuries are a reason for our disappointing season, not an excuse," said a defensive Paul St. Onge at yesterday's Varsity M luncheon at the Newman Center.

St. Onge said just finished reading an article in the Collegian which quoted the co-captains as saying that the lack of desire greatly hurt the team this year.

"Sure the team's morale is down and the spirit is low, but this isn't anything abnormal," he said. "When the team is losing and no one knows why, it is hard not to get down on yourself."

But what St. Onge didn't understand was that the article said the team was playing poorly because they lacked the desire and not that they lacked the desire because they were playing poorly.

Some people seem to be under the impression that what Marty Kelley writes represents the opinion of Collegian. They read a Kelley column and say, "The Collegian said," Let me set the record straight. A sports column represents the opinion of the writer and not necessarily the opinion of the newspaper. And in the case of Marty Kelley, you can almost bet that the opinion of the paper is exactly the opposite.

Coach MacPherson has announced the freshmen he is bringing up to play in the Vermont game this Saturday: Rich Jessamy, Bob Peck, T.J. Edmunds, Keith Lang, Steve Williams, Greg Butterfield, and Ross Schubarth.

Remember when you were in little league and one team won all their games, the second place team won all their games but one, and the third place team lost only to the two teams ahead of them? Well, UMass has chucked all that order out the window. UMass beat Maine; Maine beat Rhode Island· but (here's the catch) Rhode Island then beat UMass. Here's another one: UMass beat Rutgers, Rutgers beat Delaware, Delaware beat UConn, and (here it comes again) UConn beat UMass. You can't make sense and order out of anything any more.

Coach MacPherson on cornerback Bob Parrott: "We have never had a guy who is so consistantly excellent as Bob Parrott." But later he added, "Dennis Kiernan is another one" who is consistantly excellent this year.

Assistant coach George Flood, who blushed when Coach MacPherson announced him as the offensive coach at the luncheon, expressed concern that he was not going to receive the coverage in the paper that fellow assistant coach Bob Lord did when he spoke at a previous luncheon. In fact, Lord got a headline story because he was so entertaining. Flood is about the third guest speaker in a row who felt the pressure of living up to the level Lord reached...and the third straight to fail. Keep trying, guys.

Randy Thomas, who supposedly said before winning the Yankee Conference cross-country championship meet, that "no freshman ever beats me twice in a row", gets another shot at that particular freshman, UConn's Bruce Clark, when they meet again Monday in the New Englands. Maybe Thomas would like to come out and predict that no freshman ever beats him twice in one season. How abot it Randy?

To most of you, today's cross country meet at Worcester may seem unimportant, but it means a great deal to Tom Gillen, Phil Broughton, Tom Wilson, Chris Chambers and the rest of the UMass team.

Gillen, Wilson, Broughton and Chambers have been practicing especially hard over the past two weeks and hope to prove themselves in today's meet against Holy Cross and Central Connecticut.

Coach O'Brien commented, "Wilson has looked impressive in workouts since the Springfield meet." O'Brien added that Wilson, Broughton and Gillen are probably in the best shape they have ever been.

UMass, which won their record breaking fourth straight YanCon title on Saturday, enters today's meet with a 5-3 record.

The race is a big one for all those running because it will determine who will run the junior varsity race in the New England championships on Monday, and the IC4A's a week after.

The team, according to O'Brien is well-rested, not having had a race in nine days.

The runners have to put together a better race than they ran against Springfield last Tuesday. If the squad runs a good race, then UMass could beat both teams, if not, Central and Holy Cross will be troublesome.

Pressure is expected in the three way meet from the UMass freshmen. Robb Leary, John Scheer, Jim Hunt and Chet Mysliwicz should provide the competition for the UMass veterans, while vying for a spot on the team that run the New Englands.

Holy Cross is led by sophomore Neil Coleman, a good runner who enjoyed a successful freshmen season last year. Coleman, a 9:12 two-miler, is backed by teammates Steve Kiley, Donald Klett and Nick Audette. Holy Cross, sporting a 3-5 record, is a young team with mostly freshmen and sophomore runners. The Crusaders, however, are not as strong this year as they have been in the past.

Bob Lees, an outstanding runner who won the indoor two-mile and outdoor three-mile titles, leads a strong Central Connecticut team. Lees has already set several course records this year. Last Saturday, Lees placed first second only to Charlie Dugan of Springfield in the ECAC championships. Central will depend on Jim Balavender, Vin Curry and Dan Neckes to improve on its 8-4 record.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER — Coach O'Brien told his team before the Yankee Conference meet, "They're not going to give you anything. You have to go out there and take it." The runners got the message and stormed to their fourth straight title, taking seven of the top twelve places. Only one runner was able to break into the top ten that was dominated by UConn and UMass. George Reed of New Hampshire placed tenth to break up the UConn-UMass superiority.

Cross country is probably the most agonizing sport outside of marathon running, and complete recovery from a tough race sometimes takes weeks. Here freshman John Mcgrail winds down after his eighth-place finish in Saturday's Conference Championships.

Dr. Marcalo Dascal speaks at last night's teach-in on the Middle East.

Middle East Peace Subject Of Teach-In

By KAREN GORDON

"Pro-Israel is not Anti-Arab, was the theme of a teach-in last night in Campus Center room 113. The purpose of the teach-in, the first in a series sponsored by Hillel, was to clarify the issues and facts involved in the Middle East situation. Speaking were Dr. Marcalo Dascal, Dr. Chaim Gunner, and Moshe Komianski, an Israeli student.

Dr. Dascal stressed that there are two separate conflicts involved: the conflict between the Arabs and the Israelis, and the conflict between the Palestinians and the Israelis.

"Even if Israel would return the territories gained in the 1967 war," said Dascal, "the Arabs would still consider themselves in conflict with Israel."

But, he added, a settlement with the Arabs is possible, whereas Palestinians are impossible to negotiate with.

The Palestinians have stated that they want a Democratic non-sectarian state, according to Dascal. To eliminate the national rights of the Jews, he said, would be synonymous with the annihilation of the State of Israel and this is what the Palestinians really want. Dascal noted that, unlike other guerrilla movements, there is no real support of the Palestinian guerrilla movement from the population within the boundaries of Israel. The real economic and political support comes from the more reactionary Arab States, he said.

"Essential to any peace settlement," he concluded, "is a declaration or sign of intention by the Arab States, that they recognize Israel and that they do not support the Palestine movement."

Moshe Komianski spoke on the myths and facts of the Middle East situation.

"Propaganda," he said, "is one of the greatest weapons the Arabs are using against Zionism."

Kamionski described a world-wide propaganda campaign aimed at neutralizing Western power, controlling the Third World, weakening congressional support, developing anti-Semitism among Blakcs, posing Christians against Jews, and obtaining support from college students and the New Left. Arabs have "revived old myths embellished by new cliches," he said.

Komianski addressed himself to specific myths portrayed by the Arabs, speaking on Arab claims of Jewish mistreatment of refugees. These reports were unsubstantiated, he said, adding that Israel actually offered to help refugees. He also told stories of brutalities committed upon Jews living in Arab Nations.

"Every minority has suffered by the Arabs," he said. "The Jews are not the only ones."

Dr. Chaim Gunner spoke on perspectives for peace. The Middle East crisis is a global crisis, said Gunner. It stems from the world population and energy problem, he said and can only be solved through the cooperation of the super powers. Gunner surmised that, due to the Soviet relationship with China, the Russians will detente to the U.S. The worldwide energy crisis will also be a factor in the eventual settlement.

Gunner predicted that the Israelis would have to relinquish the Sinai, but that the Syrians will have to give up much of the Golan Heights.

"I would guess that the great losers will be Palestinians," he said.

The two and a half hour session concluded with a question and answer period during which dialogue took place between Arabs and Israelis.

Golda Visits Nixon

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel yesterday suggested after meeting with President Nixon that Egypt and Israel negotiate a new cease-fire line in a way that would involve "moving forces on both sides of the Suez Canal."

The proposal, made at a news conference, could provide a way of freeing an estimated 20,000 Egyptian soldiers trapped by Israeli forces on the canal's east bank. As Mrs. Meir put it, the lines should be "straightened out" and "large numbers of people moved" without jeopardizing the cease-fire or harming the political positions of either Egypt or Israel.

Mrs. Meir spent an hour and 20 minutes at the White House with the President, who described their discussion as "very constructive" as he saw her to her waiting black limousine. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said the talks went "very well."

No Data Distortion Found By Computing Center Inquiry

By JERRY LAZAR

No present employee of the University was involved in data distortion or improper use of the Computing Center.

That was the conclusion reached by UMass officials after a month-long investigation of charges made by an ex-employee of the Computing Center, who claimed that Dr. Conrad A. Wogrin, director of the Computing Center, and Dr. James C. Fortune, a former School of Education professor, "conspired in the execution of a computer program which generated a fraudulent report for the U.S. Office of Education."

Fortune left UMass in August, 1972 and is now teaching at Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Blacksburg, VIrginia.

The investigation was prompted by letters dated August 10, 1973 to three U.S. Senators, signed by Thomas F. Sullivan, a former night shift operator at the Center for over eight years, claiming that he was illegally fired in September, 1972 because he threatened to expose the alleged conspiracy.

The investigation was conducted by members of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's staff: Dr. James I. DeShields, Dr. Douglas Forsyth, Patricia Asack, and staff attorney Sidney Myers.

Their report, according to Dr. Tim Bornstein, assistant to the Chancellor for personnel and employee relations, is an "internal, confidential document" and will not be revealed to the press.

"It deals with people's reputations and careers," explained Bornstein. "It was written and designed to be a confidential memorandum to the Chancellor," he said.

Bornstein told the Collegian that his office will study the report and conduct a further inquiry into Sullivan's charges of racism, nepotism, illicit moonlighting, and mismanagement involving employees at the Computing Center.

Bornstein noted that, although the ad hoc investigating committee talked to Fortune, the conclusions reached did not apply to him, as he is no longer employed by the University.

Both Wogrin and Fortune have made unqualified denials of Sullivan's allegations, both to the committee and to the Collegian.

Bromery will now respond to UMass President Robert Wood who will in turn reply to Senators Edward Kennedy, Edward Brooke, and Lowell Weicker.

Sullivan was removed from the payroll in September, 1972 after abandoning his position at the Computing Center, according to the committee.

Study Abroad Night

8 Nice Places To Go

By AVIS YUNI

Eight specific programs were discussed at the Student Abroad Night held Wednesday from 7:30-9:30 p.m. in room 101 Campus Center. About 60 people attended the program which was sponsored by Alpha Lambda Delta (a sophomore girls honor society) and the International Programs Office.

In the main part of the program eight students discussed their experiences studying abroad under different programs. They were Olga Wierbicki - University of Freiburg, Germany; Ellen Knoff-University of Keele, England; Caroline Young - University of Ulster, North Ireland; Joe P. Theroux - Oxford Summer Program, Trinity College, England; Sam Cannarella - Bologna Summer Program, University of Bologna, Italy; Imogene Lewis, University of Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania; Nancy Mazonson - Hebrew University, Israel; and Beth Gordon - Study in Greece Program, Athens, Greece.

Dr. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs and Ms. Katherine Kipreos, Director of Study in Greece, Inc. were also there to answer questions during the question and answer period which followed the speeches.

Dr. Burn began the evening by offering some general information. UMass sponsors summer, semester, two semester and January programs. There are summer programs in Freiburg, Oxford and Bologna; one semester programs in North Ireland and Grenoble, France; and year or two semester programs in Freiburg and Paris, France (through UMass Boston but also available to students here).

A student exchange is run with the University of Keele, England, and the University of Victoria, British Columbia, Canada.

In January a new program will be offered that goes to London, Paris, and Rome with an emphasis on broadcasting and communication. More information can be obtained from Professor James Lynch.

The office is also presently developing new programs - Teaching English in Colombia, South America; a Social Work Internship in England, andstudent exchanges in the Cameroons, West Africa and the Indies in the Caribbean.

It is not necessary for UMass to offer an official program for a student to study abroad in a particular country. UMass students have studied under other programs in numerous other places such as Tanzania, Greece, and Israel, and have received UMass credit for it.

Some money is available as aid for student Study Abroad. Dr. Burn said the office has received $5,000 for scholarships for this. Further information concerning study abroad can be obtained in the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore.

Speaking on the Freiburg Program, Olga Wierbicki explained that about two weeks ago UMass and the University of Freiburg, Germany signed a partnership concerning this program.

She said that before entrance into the University of Freiburg students must take an entrance exam testing such things as their German grammar and language comprehension. Freiburg itself, she said was a very differentiated place in Germany. France and Switzerland are only 30 and 45 minutes away, respectively.

Ms. Wierbicki also spoke of the Cantes Program in France, where she spent a semester before going to Freiburg.

Before entering into the regular university students must pass a year of foreign student classes where it's difficult even to get the passing grade of 50 per cent, she said.

Ellen Knoff found 30 nations represented in the foreign students attending the University of Keele, England.

Ms. Knoff said that life there centers around the Pub and that even Americans encounter a language difficulty when they first get there because of the different accents and expressions.; Only three people will be selected to go next year through written application and an interview.

Students interested in this program are asked to come down to the International Programs Office room 239 Whitmore the first week in November.

Due to problems with bombs on campus and other activities, this year the semester program at the University of Ulster, North Ireland, was cancelled, Caroline Young explained.

Ms. Young also mentioned that this January the UMass School of Education will be offering several programs for students to student teach in Europe. She herself will be participating in one in Paris, but others are offered in Spain and Dusseldorf, Germany.

Joe P. Theroux attended last summer's Oxford Summer Seminar at Trinity College at Oxford.

Oxford is about one hour from London by train. Special trips are offered under it with a possibility of a special trip to Russia next summer. Details of the program are available from the Director, Prof. Ernest Hofer, in Bartlett Hall.

Under the Bologna Summer Program, Sam Cannarella felt that classes seemed to take a second place to the students' interests in Italy.

Nancy Mazonson spent a year at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, Israel. Ms. Mazonson felt that the most valuable part of the experience was living in Jerusalem because there are people from all different backgrounds.

Students must apply to Hebrew University through the American Friends of the Hebrew University in New York, she said.

Blind Sculptor Gains Recognition

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Michael Naranjo, an American Indian, came home from Vietnam with his eyesight gone and his right hand mangled. He immediately took up sculpting.

He worked by touch and memory, remembering how his Tewah Indian mother had taught him to mold clay pots in childhood. But his subjects were more intricate-realistic animal figures, characters out of Greek mythology and dancing Indians whose costumes were painstakingly sculpted feather by feather.

"Everyone was surprised at the kind of work I was doing," he recalls. "But it gave me great pleasure, and it was coming out well enough. I could feel it in my hands; it was forming well and starting to take shape."

Now, at 29, Naranjo is gaining recognition as one of the West's most promising artists.

His work has been shown in one-man exhibitions at galleries in his native New Mexico. The Veterans Administration sponsored a show of his sculpture at the Library of Congress in Washington where he was introduced to President Nixon. Several Southwestern art magazines are featuring photos of his art.

The tall, slender veteran, his dark hair tied in long Indian braids, spoke of his work, his blindness, and the war during a visit to Los Angeles. He had come to deliver a surprise to his mother Rose who had encouraged him to work with clay again. At his suggestion, she was featured on the daytime TV show "The Girl In My Life" which honors outstanding women.

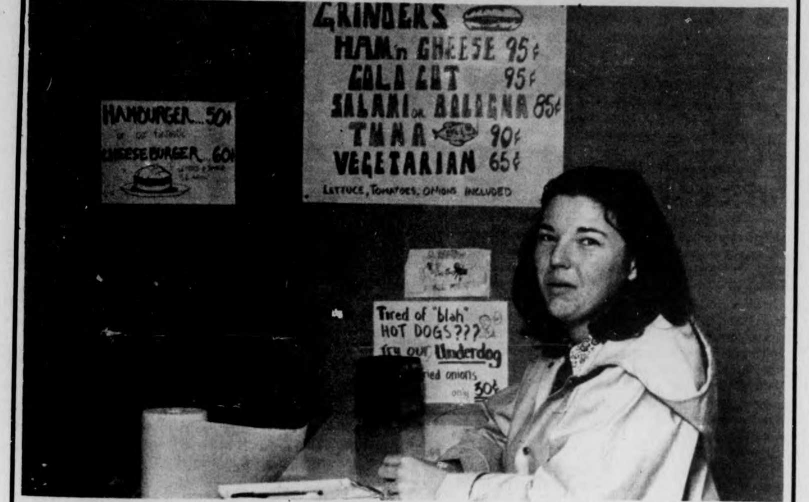
Greenough And McNamara Fight The Munchies



Staff Photo/Emmett Schmarsow

"It may not be a burger joint, but it's all we got!"

By BRIAN COYNE

To fight the late-night munchies, the residents of Central and Sylvan areas now have their own student-run snack bars.

The snack bar in Greenough is called "The Down Under," and is located in the basement of Greenough. The Sylvan Snack Bar is in McNamara. On any given evening, students can be found in them satisfying appetites acquired through studying and other activities.

When Greenough was renovated last semester, the old kitchen area, which was housing a small snack bar, was remodeled to better suit such an operation. The result was a total face-lift, with a new serving bar, tables and chairs, and carpet.

Jerry Bluhm, manager of "The Down Under," received a $1,000 loan from the Central Area Council to begin operation this year. The loan was not easy to procure, according to Bluhm, because the snack bar that was in Greenough during the Fall semester of '72 lost over $400. As of this week, "The Down Under" has made over $800, and Bluhm expects to exceed the $1,000 mark within two weeks.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is now in its fourth semester of operation. It is managed by Jonathon Russell, and has grossed over $1,100 so far this semester. Its mien is rather modest, having formerly been a storage room. Russell says that plans for remodeling the place are now under consideration by the Sylvan Area Council, but nothing has been finalized.

Both snack bars specialize in grinders, with "The Down Under" also offering hamburgers and hot dogs. Bluhm says that he is also interested in acquiring a pizza oven.

Neither snack bar receives any help from University Food Services, forcing them to search for suppliers. Both Bluhm and Russell said they were having no trouble getting supplies, though.

Both Bluhm and Russell expressed satisfaction at the reception their operations were being received by the area communities. Bluhm was particularly impressed by the way Greenough responded to the opening of the snack bar. For the first two weeks, the employees worked without salary, and when things got very busy, volunteers from the dorm would come to help.

The hours of business for "The Down Under" are 7 p.m. - midnight on Monday through Thursday, 7 p.m. - 1 a.m. on Friday, and noon to midnight on Saturday and Sunday. The Sylvan Snack Bar is open from 5:30-midnight during the week, and from 12:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. on weekends.

APO: The Frat That Helps People

By CHRIS WALTER

Would you believe a fraternity that doesn't even have a house? The fraternity is Alpha Phi Omega and it is the National Service Fraternity.

According to Frank Evans, a fraternity advisor, the purpose of APO is "to perform service for the campus, community and nation." Last year's record is impressive, with $1300 raised in the APO-GSS sponsored Heart Fund Walk, $700 raised in the fraternity's Las Vegas Night (which went to Belchertown), and over 1,100 pints of blood in the APO-GSS-University Women sponsored Blood Drive.

While these activities are standards which are sponsored by APO every year, the fraternity is willing to take on requests. "People call us and ask us to do something, and then we decide on it according to its worth" said Evans. This year's requests include supplying ushers for the theater department's "Moon for the Misbegotten" and "Jaques Brel." One of the requests last year was from a woman in Northampton. She was about to lose her mortgage because she couldn't afford to paint her house, "So APO took the job, and supplied men to paint a good portion of the house" and the woman still lives there, said Evans.

"APO" said Evans, "is the largest fraternity in the world, with over six hundred chapters." Membership ranges from 10 to 100 members per chapter. APO at UMASS presently has "about twenty members" according to Evans.

Southwest Assembly

Peer Sex Gets $675

By FRAN BROCK

At last night's Southwest Assembly meeting, the Peer Six Education Program in SW, was allocated $675. The money will go towards audio-visual equipment, written materials for distribution within the Houses, and honoraria/fees for off-campus guest speakers. The materials and speakers are a part of the program which is available to all SW residence.

According to those sponsoring the request, the PSE Program helps students to understand themselves and their peers in "the area of human sexuality."

The program also receives a training grant from the National Institute of Mental Health. But this grant can only be used for "University populations other than in residence halls."

Colloquia are conducted by the PSE counselors in SW as well as the other residential areas. The money allocated will only go to the SW Program.

Two major announcements were made at last night's meeting. The first, made by Maureen Mitchell, asked for student support of SWIP — Southwest Internal Planning. A meeting will be held today at 4:30 in the Resource Center to finalize the plans for the workshops of the SWIP Conference which will be held the second weekend in December.

The last conference was held two years ago. It was at that conference that students were given a say in the uses of Hampden. Since then, the Resource Center has been established there and plans for a Rathskeller are in the process of being decided.

President, Larry St. Cyr announced the SWAP Conference that will be held Nov. 30 — Dec. 2. This conference is sponsored by the University Student Senate.

St. Cyr said that SW residence, not in the Assembly, are eligible to attend. He needs at least nine such students to apply. Applications are available in JQA Lobby.

Appointments were made of representatives to committees. They include Tom Paulinca to Academic Policy Board of the Instructional Center, Patty Murphy, Maureen Mitchell, Larry St. Cyr and Gary Hartley to Academic Policy Board, and Donna Waskiewicz to Governmental Affairs as co-Chairperson. The other co-chairperson is Toni Yuille.

Defense Dept. Gets Priority For Domestic Petroleum

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department was given special priority yesterday to buy U.S. domestic petroleum ahead of other customers, adding further pressure to already hard-pressed domestic supplies.

An Interior Department announcement said the Defense Department usually buys about half its needs abroad, the equivalent of less than 2 per cent of domestic supply, but it cannot rely on foreign supplies in the present circumstances.

Faced with anticipated shortages ranging from 100,000 barrels per day to perhaps 800,000 and the additional cutoff of Arab oil, the nation now may have to provide up to some 340,000 barrels per day to U.S. forces overseas.

Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton announced the defense priority at a news conference where he also announced the appointment of Eli T. Reich, a retired vice admiral, as administrator of the Mandatory Petroleum Allocation Program which took effect Thursday.

Reich told newsmen the United States has already begun shipping petroleum from Norfolk, Va., to its fleet in the Mediterranean.

He said the fleet normally is fueled by Mediterranean refineries but supplies of Arab oil to Europe were already being cut off.

Duke R. Ligon, director of the Office of Oil and Gas, said the Arab cutoff would begin to be felt gradually in the United States in about two weeks when tankers en route from the Mideast before the oil embargo began have unloaded their cargoes.

The administration put into effect yesterday a mandatory allocation program covering home heating oil, jet fuel, diesel fuel, kerosene and other "middle distillates," requiring a fair distribution at the wholesale level.

Morton said in answer to a question that mandatory allocation probably would have to be extended to include crude oil, gasoline and other petroleum products.

Mass Picket Planned

The Juan De La Cruz Committee is calling for all members of the five college campus communities to join them on a mass picket line Saturday, 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the Finast Supermarket in Hadley.

According to a Committee spokesman, Joanne Levenson, without this pressure on Finast, not only will the store continue to scab on it's contract agreements they made with the UFW but also the UFW contracts with Stop and Shop will be terminated early next week because Stop and Shop has said they will honor agreements only if other major chains honor theirs.

According to Charles March, regional organizer for the UFW, "what is at stake is not one of two contracts only but the realization that the struggle of the Union is part of the Amherst and Northampton communities. It is up to us to pressure the stores and growers when they refuse to recognize the legitimacy of the Union," he said, "a Union that in their national convention last month still had the support of 90 per cent of the farmworkers."

Full Independance Promised

Nixon Nominates Saxbe As Attorney General

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon nominated Ohio Republican Sen. William B. Saxbe as attorney general yesterday and promised full independence for a new special Watergate prosecutor, Texas trial lawyer Leon Jaworski.

Nixon gave his personal assurance that he would not fire the new special prosecutor as he did Archibald Cox without getting approval from congressional leaders of both parties.

The President appeared in the White House briefing room to announce the nomination of Saxbe to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation Oct. 20 of Elliot L. Richardson.

He left to Acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork the announcement of Jaworski as "perhaps the best we could get for this very important position" of special prosecutor.

Bork said the 68-year-old Jaworski, a Democrat, would have all the freedom and independence originally promised Cox and a renewed promise of "the full cooperation of the executive branch in the pursuit of his investigations."

Bork was asked if it was clearly understood that Jaworski would be free to go to court to press for additional tapes or presidential papers if he deems it necessary.

"That is absolutely clear," Bork replied.

Cox refused to accept a summary of taped White House conversations dealing with Watergate rather than the tapes themselves. Nixon fired Cox and established the prosecutor's office inside the Justice Department.

At a news conference in Houston, Jaworski said: "There are no restraints. I am not prohibited from taking any action I might feel should be taken."

Nixon's pledge did not satisfy Sens. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., and Birch Bayh, D-Ind., sponsors of separate bills providing for a court-appointed special prosecutor.

"We've relied before on the promises of the President and Congress has been burned," Stevenson said. "There can be no independent prosecutor without congressional action."

House Speaker Carl Albert said the legislation should proceed but did not know what effect Jaworski's selection would have.

Saxbe, 57, who already had announced that he would not seek another term in the Senate, said he understood he was taking on the job in "difficult times" when "the country is in a crisis of leadership."

He said he was anxious that the new special Watergate prosecutor would go to work "without any limitations." While he knew his job was going to be difficult, he said, "I have no reluctance and no doubts that I can handle it."

Saxbe said Bork will remain as solicitor general.

Jaworski is a senior partner in the Houston law firm of Fulbright, Crooker and Jaworski, where he has been since 1951.

An experienced trial lawyer and prosecutor, he was chief of the Nazi war crimes trial section of the U.S. Army in the European theater after World War II. He was president of the American Bar Association during 1971-72 and was a friend and adviser to former President Lyndon Johnson. A native of Waco, Tex., he received law degrees from Baylor University. He is married and has three children.

Hearings, Tapes Center Of Watergate Controversy

Ex-Campaign Head Was "Deceived"

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Nixon campaign manager Clark MacGregor testified yesterday he was used and deceived in the Watergate affair and said the President should submit to questioning by the Senate Watergate committee's two ranking members.

In a separate statement, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said an appearance by Nixon before the full Watergate committee may offer the President the only way out of problems of credibility that now besiege him.

A third formula was offered by Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., R-Conn., who suggested the President be asked to invite the entire panel to the White House and submit to complete questioning.

Weicker said that the committee will vote on his proposal at its next executive session and that most Watergate committee members have greeted the idea enthusiastically.

Weicker said no oath should be required of the President, but insisted that a transcript of the proposed session be made public.

Testifying before the committee, MacGregor, a former Minnesota congressman and White House aide, said he believes Nixon might be willing to submit to questions put informally by Watergate chairman Sam. J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., and vice chairman Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.

MacGregor told newsmen he had not checked his idea with Nixon before offering it to the committee.

In a statement issued from his Senate office Goldwater said: "In my opinion the credibility of the President has reached an all-time low from which he may not be able to recover. I repeat the suggestion I made to my President a long time ago, that he go up to Capitol Hill and appear before the Ervin committee and answer questions. I feel now more than ever that this may offer the only way out."

In his testimony, MacGregor disputed parts of the testimony of two previous witnesses and said of his campaign experiences: "It doesn't make one happy to learn that one has been used."

MacGregor singled out former White House counsel John W. Dean III and Jeb Stuart MacGruder, his immediate subordinate at Nixon's re-election committee, as having used him.

Crucial Dean Conversation Missing From Tapes

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Presidential aide Stephen V. Bull received an important tape recording months before President Nixon is said to have learned that it did not contain a crucial Watergate conversation, a Secret Service technician testified yesterday.

The technician, Raymond C. Zumwalt, said he did not know whether the tape was among those that former White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman took home with him about the same time.

The tape in question recorded Nixon's conversations of April 15, 1973 and preceding days in his Executive Office Building suite. But the White House has told U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica that the tape ran out before Nixon talked with ousted counsel John W. Dean III late in the evening.

Sirica called yesterday's hearing to place on the record the circumstances by which two White House tapes sought by Watergate prosecutors are now said not to exist.

Dean told the Senate Watergate committee in June that his April 15 conversation with Nixon included Nixon's whispered remark that he was probably foolish in earlier discussing an offer of executive clemency for Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt. Dean also said the President disavowed an earlier statement about raising hush money for Watergate defendants.

Haldeman told the Watergate committee that he had listened, sometime between July 9 and 11, to a recording of an earlier meeting between Nixon and Dean. He said at that time he also received several other tapes but did not listen to them. He said he got them from Bull, took them home, kept them for two days and returned them.

Zumwalt said his notes show Bull checked out three tapes on July 10, including two reels of the Sept. 15, 1972 conversations Haldeman said he listened to. On the following day, Zumwalt said, Bull received six more tapes, including the April 15 recording.

"Do you know whether or not a tape recording of conversation between the President and John Dean in the Executive Office Building office on the 15th of April, 1973 was given to Mr. Haldeman in July this year?" asked Richard Ben Veniste of the Watergate prosecution force.

"No," said Zumwalt.

In other Watergate-related developments:

-Nixon named Sen. William B. Saxbe, R-Ohio, to be attorney general and approved the selection of Leon Jaworski, Houston lawyer, as the new special Watergate prosecutor.

Saxbe, if confirmed, would replace Elliot L. Richardson, who resigned Oct. 20 in the controversy over the tapes. Jaworski, who replaces ousted Archibald Cox, told a Houston news conference he plans to begin work Monday.

-Clark MacGregor, who directed Nixon's 1972 re-election victory, said he was deceived and used in the Watergate cover-up that was going on around him. Appearing before the Watergate committee, MacGregor repeatedly of high-level involvement in the Watergate affair.

On Wednesday, White House lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt disclosed that two of the nine tapes that prosecutors have fought for so long never existed.

"Constructive Talks"

Meir Visits Nixon

Later, at the 45-minute news conference, Mrs. Meir stoutly denied several times that the President was applying pressure on her country to give up positions when the first Oct. 22 U.N. cease-fire agreement failed to halt the fighting between Israel and Egypt. She added that Washington attached no conditions to the massive arms shipments that helped Israel through the Yom Kippur war.

Meanwhile, U.S. officials said they have a "firm understanding" that Israel and the Arab states eventually will negotiate directly with each other for a lasting Middle East settlement. Until now, the Arabs have never been willing to have such face-to-face talks.

Asked why it is in the U.S. interest to support Israel, Mrs. Meir replied: "Why should it be so surprising that a big power should not want to see a little power dumped into the sea?"

Mrs. Meir is visiting the United States seeking assurances that her country's interests will be safeguarded as the United States and the Soviet Union oversee exploratory talks designed to enforce U.N. cease-fire agreements and pave the way for negotiations on a lasting peace agreement.

Egypt, Syria and other Arab foes of the Jewish state have consistently opposed direct negotiations with it. U.S. officials in reporting such talks were in the offing would not say where they would be held or even whether the Arabs had specifically agreed.

Meanwhile, as the diplomatic pace accelerated, these officials indicated that Kissinger may meet with Mohamed Zakaria Ismail, the deputy foreign minister of Syria. Washington has no diplomatic relations with Damascus, but any substantive agreement between Israel and her neighbors would have to include Syria, which along with Egypt, was a principal Israel foe in last month's war. The meeting presumably would be held here before Kissinger leaves Monday for Cairo and other Arab capitals.

However, in New York, the Syrian minister told a reporter: "I know of no meeting with Kissinger." Syrian officials reiterated earlier in the week that they would not negotiate with Israel and that the only solution to Middle East problems is a complete withdrawal from all occupied territories.

In another development, Robert J. McCloskey, a State Department spokesman, said the United States has discussed in meetings with Mrs. Meir and Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy a possibility of opening a corridor to the Egyptian 3rd Army encircled by Israeli troops on the east bank of the Suez Canal.

McCloskey said neither Egypt nor Israel has agreed. The proposed corridor would allow supplies to reach the trapped Egyptians.

Israeli forces opened fire yesterday on Egyptian tanks and infantry that moved out of the circle of Sinai Desert in which Israel has cut off the Egyptians, the Israeli military command said.

Ford Testifies Before Judiciary Committee

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Vice President-designate Gerald R. Ford said Thursday the House Judiciary Committee should pursue its investigation of grounds for the possible impeachment of President Nixon.

"I don't believe there are grounds-but that's a personal judgment," he told a Senate committee examining his fitness to be vice president. "But that's the way to clear the air."

Ford, sounded out on a broad range of subjects, said he thought "it might have been much more helpful" if Nixon had disclosed earlier that no tapes exist of two key conversations connected with the Watergate investigation.

He also said no president has an unlimited right to invoke executive privilege, but must weigh any such claim against the right of the public to information from confidential White House conversations and documents.

He said he had recommended to high White House officials more than once that Nixon release the White House tapes requested by the Watergate grand jury.

The question of impeachment was raised by Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., who said that, along with other members of Congress, he has received a flood of mail calling for impeachment or the resignation of Nixon.

"Impeachment is the problem that is paramount in everyone's mind at this time," Hatfield said. He asked Ford how the national concern caused by such a potential upheaval could be eased.

Ford replied that the inquiry now launched in the House by the Judiciary Committee should be continued until it leads to a determination that grounds for impeachment either exist or do not exist.

Ford was questioned at morning and afternoon sessions and agreed to return Monday, when the committee expects to finish with him.

During the hearing, the first ever held on the confirmation of a vice president, Ford denied allegations of wrongdoing in his handling of campaign funds and other financial transactions.

"I'm no saint," he told the committee, but he said a close scrutiny of his 25-year career in public life would show that he was "clean" and had a reputation for truthfulness and honesty.

Such a scrutiny was promised by Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, which is conducting the hearing. Under the procedures of the 25th Amendment for filling a vacancy in the vice presidency, the House is conducting a similar inquiry.

Cannon said the FBI alone sent more than 350 agents across the country to conduct more than 1,000 interviews in its investigation of Ford, resulting in 1,700 pages of data. In addition, the House Judiciary Committee, the General Accounting Office and other agencies have gathered information on him and Ford has voluntarily supplied his full financial records.

"I am convinced this investigation has been the most thorough undertaken for any nominee for public office in the history of the United States," said Cannon.

Ford, the Republican leader of the House, was treated with courtesy and some deference by his Senate colleagues, particularly the Republican committee members, who stressed it was their duty to ask some potentially troublesome questions.

Most of these dealt with previously aired charges that Ford had failed to report $11,500 in campaign funds during his 1970 congressional campaign, had collected funds from the dairy industry for distribution to other Republican congressmen and had accepted $15,000 in loans from a lobbyist without repayment.

Ford said the $11,500, in five checks, was transferred by him to the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee because he had no need of the money in his own campaign. A similar amount later was allocated by the committee to other groups working for his re-election, he said, but all transactions by the other parties were reported in accordance with the law, as far as he knew.

He said he had followed the practice before and did the same thing in the 1972 campaign.

His role in the distribution of $15,000 from a dairy industry political organization to some GOP congressmen was merely to give the organization the names of 10 members having unpaid campaign debts, he said. An attorney for the organization asked him for the names, he said.

Ford dismissed as "utterly preposterous" the assertion by a one-time Washington lobbyist, Robert Winter-Berger, that he had given Ford $15,000 over a three-year period in small cash loans. Winter-Berger, who has written a book about his Washington experiences, made the charge in an affidavit filed with the Rules Committee.

"I categorically, unqualifiedly and unreservedly say that's a lie," said Ford.

He said he was duped by Winter-Berger, who was introduced to him by old friends from Michigan with whom he maintained a close association. "They were likewise duped," Ford said of his friends.

Nixon Leaves Reporters In The Dust

By GAYLORD SHAW

HOMESTEAD AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP)-President Nixon flew to the Florida White House on Key Biscayne.

Nixon, who has been sharply critical of some of the news media, left Washington on such short notice that a small group of reporters that customarily travels on his jetliner was left behind.

It apparently was the first time in Nixon's presidency that he departed on such short notice that the "Air Force 1 travel pool" was left behind.

Reports began circulating Wednesday that Nixon planned to spend the weekend at his Key Biscayne, Fla., home. But White House spokesmen insisted they knew of no presidential travel plans-an insistence they maintained until reporters heard a helicopter land on the White House South Lawn.

The pool is a group of five reporters and two photographers who ride on Nixon's jetliner, relaying any information they receive to their colleagues in the White House press corps.

Asked why the pool was left behind, White House Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said. "The President decided to go...and there was not time" to get the pool to nearby Andrews Air Force Base.

Warren said that Nixon decided after a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir that he would head for Florida.

"We had anticipated that he would make his decision later in the afternoon, giving us time to make the usual notification of the pool," Warren said.

Jaworski Sees "No Restraints"

By B.F. KELLUM
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Leon Jaworski, named special Watergate prosecutor yesterday by President Nixon, said there are no restraints in what he will be permitted to do in his new post. He said that he will take any steps he thinks necessary for justice to be served.

"I am not precluded from taking any action that I conclude that should be taken," the 68-year-old Jaworski told a news conference here Thursday. "Conditions I believed would enable me to do the job as it should be done have been met," he said.

Jaworski said his appointment "was a call to duty." "It was put on that basis," he said. "With the conditions being what they are — I'm talking about the prescribed conditions — I felt I had no alternatve but to agree to serve."

Jaworski said the American people are entitled to have some answers without waiting forever and "it's going to be my purpose to try to provide those answers as soon as I can."

Jaworski, who served as president of the American Bar Association 1971-1972 and president of the State Bar of Texas, has been practicing law nearly half a century. He became a lawyer after graduating from Texas' Baylor University at the age of 19.

Jaworski said he did not seek the special prosecutor post but was urged to accept it.

Jaworski, who has never held public office, is regarded as a judicial and political conservative. He has long backed establishment Democrats in Texas, including the late President Lyndon B. Johnson and former Texas Gov. John B. Connally, now a Republican.

Jaworski said he hoped to meet Monday with the staff left by his predecessor, Archibald Cox, fired by Nixon. He said he will start out with the same staff.

Jaworski said if he encounters an impasse with Nixon on any phase of the Watergate investigation it will be presented to the two senior majority and minority members of both the House and Senate Judiciary committees for determination.

Emergency Funds For Chelsea

BOSTON (AP) - Some $4.4 million in state funds for housing and urban renewal have been proposed in an emergency relief program for the city of Chelsea, Gov. Francis Sargent said yesterday.

The governor said he will submit the program to the legislature in several days for its approval.

Sargent made the program public at a news conference attended by Chelsea Mayor Philip J. Spelman and Lewis Carmptool, commissioner of the state's Department of Community Affairs.

The DCA will head the state's redevelopment efforts in Chelsea.

An Oct. 14 fire destroyed at least 10 per cent of the city.

The state funds proposed included a $2.7 million bond issue to construct new housing; $1.5 million for the state to assume the city's share of an urban renewal program in the fire ravaged area, and $200,000 for a state rental assistance program to provide 100 new units for those left homeless by the fire.

Sargent said he signed the federal-state disaster assistance agreement Thursday which formalizes the federal aid program already underway in Chelsea.

Israel's Fighting Women Show Pride, Perserverence

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

MEROM GOLAN, Israel (AP) — The small contigent of Israeli women serving with combat units in the barren, windswept Golan Heights have put away their miniskirts and put on ski masks and fur-lined parkas.

The life is rough — camping in pup tents in freezing temperatures, manning communications equipment 24 hours a day and living without a bathroom.

But there are no complaints. In fact, there's a tremendous pride in being about as close to combat as the women's army permits, rather than in an office in Tel Aviv.

Israeli and Arab combat forces were still in place even after the cease-fire.

"I think it's the best place to be in such a time," said 2nd Lt. Neili Ofiry, 20, of Jerusalem, commander of an all-female communications unit which has been operating at a base less than three miles from the Syrian border.

"First of all, they need girls here," she said. "If a girl sits here, then a boy can sit somewhere where it's more dangerous.

"I also think it's good for morale," she said. "It's nice to see girls. In the evening, when we sit near the fire, some groups near us don't have girls, and they always come here and ask to talk to our girls."

The women's army is called "Chen," which is the Hebrew word for "charm." Its symbol is a flower and sword.

Since Israel's war of independence in 1948, women have been barred from front-line fighting. Chen soldiers in the Golan Heights and Sinai were evacuated at the beginning of the latest war — but returned as the danger lessened.

Col. Ruth Muscal, Chen's commander in chief, explained that any woman fighting in active combat runs the risk of being taken prisoner, "and since this is a Middle East country, the fate of a girl taken prisoner might be a little bit dicy."

Nonetheless, every war, including the latest conflict, has seen women casualties. On the third day of this war, a bomb exploded in a rear unit on the Sinai front and a Chen soldier died shortly afterwards. Several other women were reported wounded.

The exact size of Chen and its deployment are a military secret. But the International Institute for Strategic Studies, which is not subject to Israeli censorship, estimates that the women's force is 12,000 strong.

Girls in Israel are subject to the draft at age 18 but half are excused because of marriage, lack of education or religious objections.

Chen soldiers serve for 20 months and remain in the reserves until motherhood or age 34.

In both war and peace, the women's army does office and administrative work, nursing, teaching, engineering, radar and communications work and policing.

Unlike their American WAC counterparts, Israeli women receive rugged combat training and learn hand-to-hand fighting, expert marksmanship, judo and battlefield first aid.

Nixon Credibility Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Barry Goldwater said yesterday President Nixon's credibility "has reached an all-time low from which he may not be able to recover" and renewed his appeal for Nixon to testify before the Watergate committee.

The Arizona Republican issued his statement in the wake of Wednesday's White House assertion that two of the nine Watergate tapes don't exist.

"As one schooled in electronics," Goldwater said, "I can understand it, but as a practical person in close touch with the American people, I doubt that they will accept this.

"I repeat the suggestion I made to my President a long time ago, that he go up to Capitol Hill and appear before the Ervin Committee and answer questions."

"I feel now more than ever that this may offer the only way out."

Goldwater urged "all Americans to allow him, Nixon, the benefit of the doubt until Judge John Sirica, afterhearing the testimony of so-called experts, can announce his opinion of the mystery of the lost tapes."

Mrs. Saxbe: "Nixon Needs Sense Of Humor, Common Sense"

WASHINGTON (AP)-What the Nixon administration needs is "some common sense and a sense of humor," says Dolly Saxbe.

And she's sure her husband, Sen. William B. Saxbe, R-Ohio, the new attorney general designate, can supply both.

"If anybody can straighten out the Justice Department, Bill can," Mrs. Saxbe said in an interview yesterday as she awaited word of her husband's nomination.

Mrs. Saxbe's sense of fun is as well-honed as her husband's.

"When Bill came home after telling President Nixon if he wanted him he'd have to take warts and all, I asked him where he'd been keeping his warts," she related. "I didn't know he had any."

Mrs. Saxbe is as ebullient and outgoing as a famous predecessor, Martha Mitchell, but she disagrees strongly with Mrs. Mitchell's assessment of Washington as an unfriendly place and politics as a dirty business.

"I like Washington and think politics is fun," she said.

The Saxbes met in college, where she was an art major. They have three grown children.

Paul Dudley White Honored At Funeral

BOSTON (AP) — Private funeral services will be held here for Dr. Paul Dudley White, 87, the world famous heart specialist, followed by a memorial service in Memorial Church, at Harvard University in Cambridge on Nov. 13.

President Nixon paid tribute Wednesday to the distinguished worldwide leader in the field of cardiology. He described Dr. White as "A model of all that is best in American medicine."

Dr. White died Wednesday after his condition weakened steadily from complications of a stroke he suffered early in October. The stroke affected his speech and right side of his body.

The American Heart Association, which planned to present him the James B. Herrick Award Nov. 8, praised Dr. White as the "father of American cardiology."

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said, "His achievements have mirrored for all to sec the spirit and dignity that has made our city and people so extraordinary.

"For years," the mayor continued, "Boston has been known as the medical center of the world. Dr. White was one of the men who gave this city that reputation...the heart research begun by Dr. White will live forever."

The stroke was the final one in a series of health setbacks for the cardiologist over the past several months.

He had a minor stroke May 30 and was hospitalized until June 19, when he returned to his home at Juniper Road, Belmont.

Dr. White, a graduate of Harvard Medical School in 1911 and a lifelong advocate of moderation and exercise, became nationally known in 1955 when he treated President Eisenhower for a heart condition.

He went to China in 1971 to exchange information on cardiology and study acupuncture. He also exchanged information with heart specialists from Russia and other countries.

He is survived by his wife, the former Ina Reid; a son, Alexander, of Weymouth; a daughter, Penelope Dudley Vogel of Townsend and two grandchildren.

His family requests that instead of flowers, gifts be made to the Paul Dudley White International Cardiology Fund in care of the American Heart Association or to the Paul Dudley White Fund of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

October Grocery Bills Drop

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The grocery bills of American families dropped a bit in October, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows. But food was still more expensive than it was last spring.

The decline might accelerate. The Department of Agriculture says the prices of raw farm products — especially cattle, hogs, wheat, broiler chickens and eggs — dropped 4 per cent in October, and this will be reflected in supermarket prices later.

The AP survey showed that between Oct. 1 and Nov. 1, grocery costs declined in 9 of 13 cities checked and rose in 4. The drop ranged from 5.7 per cent in Chicago and Salt Lake City to .3 per cent in Atlanta and Seattle, Wash. The average drop was 2 per cent.

The AP each month since March 1 has checked the price of 15 food and nonfood items in 13 cities around the country. The latest survey showed that groceries are 8 per cent higher than they were eight months ago. At the end of September they were 9 per cent higher.

The AP each month since March 1 has checked the price of 15 food and nonfood items in 13 cities around the country. The latest survey showed that groceries are 8 per cent higher than they were eight months ago. At the end of September they were 9 per cent higher than March 1.

Livestock prices have declined since the beef freeze ended in September, and this brought down the cost of chopped chuck in October. On the other hand, prices rose for peanut butter and other foods using oils, which are in short supply throughout the world.

The price declines generally were too slight to bolster the spirits of consumers.

"I'm buying as little as I can," said Mrs. Joe Stewart of Albuquerque, N.M., shopping for her husband and three children. "We're eating out of stocked up canned goods and we're cutting down on meat, even though it's dropped."

In all, 195 items were price checked on Nov. 1, as they were Oct. 1. Twenty-nine per cent went up in price; 25 per cent went down; 37 per cent were unchanged, and 9 per cent were unavailable on one of the survey dates.

Armstrong Gets 23 Years

MADISON, Wis. (AP) - Karleton L. Armstrong, who pleaded guilty to charges in the 1970 University of Wisconsin bombing that killed a physics researcher, was sentenced Thursday to 23 years in prison.

"Long live the revolution," the bearded Armstrong shouted after Circuit Court Judge William Sachtjen sentenced him on a second-degree murder charge.

The 27-year-old former University of Wisconsin student walked out of the courtroom with his right fist raised in salute. Supporters in the audience responded, "Right on, Karl."

Armstrong, who has been in custody since his arrest in Canada early last year, would be eligible for parole in five years. He still faces federal charges in connection with the bombing, in which physicist Robert Fasnacht, 33, was killed.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — George Gallup is planning what could be the biggest public opinion poll ever — a survey of the entire world to get a picture of the state of mankind.

Gallup said Wednesday the survey will take a full year, cost about $100,000 and will try to determine "how increasing incomes relate to the satisfactions and happiness of people."

The Kettering Foundation of Dayton, Ohio, will sponsor the poll. "We will have an idea of the psychological well-being of the world when the poll is completed," Gallup said.

ROME (AP) — The banner of abortion is not being waved by some women's liberationists in Italy, such as Nilde Jotti.

Ms. Jotti, an organizer of the congress of the Union of Italian Women, said yesterday "I don't believe that abortion can resolve a mistake in love. But I believe in birth control and conscious motherhood."

Another organizer of the congress in this Roman Catholic nation, Marisa Passigli, said she did "not consider abortion as a standard birth control measure or as a liberating act."

ATHENS (AP) — A Greek government spokesman said yesterday that composer Mikis Theodorakis is free now to return to his homeland without running a risk of going to jail.

The government said no charges are known to be pending against him.

Theodorakis was imprisoned for opposition to the military-backed Greek regime and left Greece in January 1970 after being freed by a personal appeal of French politician Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber.

Some of his music still may not be performed in Greece.

MADRAS, India (AP) — The former queen of Greece, Frederika, has been enrolled since mid-August at Madras University, studying the philosophy called Advaita.

The philosophy is based on the thought of an 8th century sage, Shankaracharya, and its central tenet is an "insistence on reasoning and rejection of anything based on blind belief," she said in an interview Wednesday.

Park Plaza Project Said To Be Doubtful

BOSTON (AP) - Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, said yesterday there is no chance the $266 million Park Plaza Development Project, planned for downtown Boston, will ever get off the ground.

"Park Plaza no longer commands the political support necessary to bring it to fruition," Frank said, adding that some state officials are still trying to keep the project alive while "the patient is already quite dead."

The project, which has received support from Boston Mayor Kevin White and Gov. Francis W. Sargent, has been opposed since its proposal by citizen groups and environmentalists.

"As a direct reflection of public opinion, a majority of Boston legislators have turned against the plan," Frank said.

"And this guarantees the plan's defeat because Park Plaza cannot be consummated without affirmative action on the legislative level-action which will not be forthcoming."

Frank said the legislature will be able to hold up the project easily because of park land which is included in the intended site.

Ex-POW May Try To Unseat McGovern

By TOM BRETTINGEN
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - A retired Air Force officer who spent six years in a North Vietnamese prison camp announced yesterday he may try to unseat Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., next fall.

Former Lt. Col. Leo K. Thorsness of Sioux Falls told newsmen he will seek the Republican nomination to run against either McGovern or Rep. Frank Denholm, D-S.D.

Thorsness, 41, said he would decide within three months which office to seek, but said he was leaning toward the Senate. Although Thorsness has said McGovern's antiwar activities during his presidential campaign damaged the morale of American prisoners of war, he said yesterday he carries no grudge against the senator.

Thorsness, recovering from leg and back injuries suffered when he ejected from his bomber in April 1967 over North Vietnam, still walks with a cane.

He said shortly after being freed last March that he would like to defeat McGovern, but declined to discuss his future further while he was still in the Air Force. He retired last week.

Thorsness said he disagreed with McGovern's stands on marijuana, amnesty, welfare and abortion. He also criticized McGovern's attempt to reduce military spending.

The Medal of Honor winner said he thought President Nixon had done a "magnificent, outstanding job" in international relations. Questioned about the Watergate affair, Thorsness said Nixon should be treated the same as any other person under the law, but added, "I'm not going to run out on him because he now appears to be in trouble."

State party Chairman E. Steeves Smith said, however, that the decision will be left to Thorsness.

RI Governor Calls For Nixon To Quit

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-Gov. Philip Noel said yesterday that Watergate scandals have crippled President Nixon's ability to lead the nation and he therefore should resign.

At the same time, the government backed away from supporting impeachment proceedings against Nixon. Impeachment might be too traumatic an experience for the country, he said.

Noel, a Democrat, issued a conditional call for Nixon's resignation last week, saying the President should step down if he could not regain public confidence.

"I felt before that there was an opportunity for him to regain the confidence of the people so that he could again exert a leadership role. I don't see now how he can regain the confidence of the people," the governor said.

Noel said his feelings were swayed by White House statements that two key Watergate tapes do not exist and Nixon's statements at his news conference last Friday.

The declaration the two tape recordings do not exist raises "another serious credibility question," the governor said. "It just seems logical they should have revealed at a very early time they are not available."

Noel maintained there is enough constitutional basis for holding a new election. He said Nixon would be more inclined to resign if he knew he would be succeeded by someone other than a non-elected President, particularly a Democrat.

However, he added, "I don't think he'd be inclined to resign at all."

However, he added, "enough facts have been disclosed so that everyone reasonably can conclude that his administration has not held to the ideals demand of that office. Facts have been disclosed that cast the President and his people in a light of serious mistrust."

Medford Rep. Offers Impeachment Resolution

Last week Representative George L. Sacco (D-Medford) offered a resolution to the United States Congress to support and initiate impeachment proceedings of the Chief Executive of the United States.

Sacco stated that, "The time has come for our people to stand up for the proposition that ours is a government of laws, not men. This is the principle and the course of action of a legal giant-and likely, one with the moral convictions necessary in our government today-Archibald Cox-and it is in this spirit that I offer this resolution.

Sacco continued that, "It is a fundamental principle of our Constitution that if the President desires to disobey the court, the only alternative left to our people is impeachment. The President's only other alternative is to resign. We ask not for conviction nor do we impugn guilt of criminal offenses-rather we request impeachment hearings in order that the President and the country have the benefit of a fair and impartial hearing."

The resolution, submitted by Sacco, has been referred to the Committee on House Rules where it awaits further action.

Prison Furlough Program Seen Safe

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — State Correction Commissioner Frank A. Hall said yesterday he does not believe the prison furlough program is in trouble because of apparent confusion over the law governing inmates who escape while on furlough.

"I don't believe we have a problem," Hall said, "because I believe the laws we have are clear on the point."

The question arose Wednesday when Norfolk County Dist. Atty. George Burke asked the legislature for emergency legislation to allow prosecution of furlough escapees on escape charges.

Burke acted in response to action by Superior Court Judge Cornelius Moynihan in ruling that two inmates were innocent of escape charges because statutes governing the furlough program provide no penalty for escape.

Hall disagreed with the judge, saying "The law as it applies to furloughs as well as our procedures for enforcing the law is clear.

"Any inmate who fails to return to the institution within two hours of his scheduled return time is charged with escape, a new indictable offense.

"Any inmate who returns late is charged with a violation of his furlough contract and appropriate disciplinary action is taken at the institution for violation of prison rules and regulations.

"District attorneys have already successfully prosecuted inmates who have escaped from furlough," Hall said.

Atomic Plant Accident Reported

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government disclosed today that an accident occurred Oct. 20 at its Oak Ridge, Tenn., atomic facility involving highly secret experimental equipment.

One experimental device was virtually destroyed and some others were damaged, an Atomic Energy Commission spokesman said.

Disclosure of the accident — in which no one was reported hurt and the cause not yet determined — was held up for nine days because the project is "a secret and sensitive one," he said. The project is aimed at developing a new process for producing uranium for weapons and power plants.

The spokesman explained that progress on American experiments with the process — called the "gas centrifuge" — have long been kept secret from any country, including friendly ones, in part because the process if perfected, could be used to produce fissionable uranium for weapons.

And he said AEC scientists felt they had to evaluate the situation before even disclosing that an accident had happened invoving the experiments.

Stop The B-1

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

"Progress is our most important product" is the slogan of a corporation made famous by Richard Nixon's ally, actor-politician Ronald Reagan — and it's important to see exactly what General Electric considers progression, and to where corporate moneychanging leads. (Every year, one billion dollars plus is siphoned from our collective pocket, and those taxes are funneled into G-E's account for the purpose of military and military-related work. And that work is quite profitable as well, ranging from 50 percent to 100 percent ABOVE the average profits for domestic consumer production.)

A pet project of the United States Air Force is the proposed replacement for the B-52 and FB-111 bombers and its name is B-1. The complete beast will be able to carry twice the "payload" of the B-52, i.e., 50,000 pounds or 24 nuclear tipped missiles. It will feature swing wings for supersonic and subsonic flight, and airstrip compatibility to some extent. The B-1 will boast the most advanced electronic systems for automated warfare, and even more bizarre, it will have the capacity for use of the "laser death ray", when perfected. It will be a manned, nuclear and conventional bomber that, when finished, will be the largest and most costly weapons system ever built. The pricetag for research and development, production, and support systems for the 241 planes the Air Force wants starts from $43 billion to over $75 billion. With our nuclear over-kill capability, where any ONE of the present systems alone could destroy 64 million people, the infamous Pentagonal argument of nuclear "deterrence" doesn't hold water.

Flexibility is the major Air Force argument now. Military officers, especially Strategic Air Command types, point to the bombers design. They say it's a great terrain hugger, conventional fighter (like the FB-111) as well as a high-flyer, heavy bomb load saturator (like the B-52). (Air Force spokesmen have expressed dissatisfaction with B-52 operations over Indochina, although B-52 bombardment in Indochina over a period of a decade was the heaviest and-caused the most devastation of any in warfare.) They feel that the B-1 would have made a fantastic difference in Indochina by deploying it early. Twice the bombs could have been delivered in one-third the time. "Any future U.S. military involvement in limited wars should be based on the early and proper use of air-power, and the defended allies providing the bulk or all of the gound forces." — Air Force Magazine

U.S. investments abroad — mostly held by large multinationals — now total $203 billion, and greatly reflects the continual U.S. need for raw materials. That often leads to the Third World.

B-1 production itself is largely dependent on foreign supplies of Bauxite for the airframe, and Chromium, Nickel, Cobalt, and Tungsten for the engine. 67 percent of the world supply of Bauxite comes from Latin America; 31 percent of U.S. imports of Chromium comes from South Africa, 19 percent from Turkey, 19 percent from S. Rhodesia, 18 percent from the Philippines, and 5 percent from Iran; 20 percent of U.S. Nickel imports is from New Caledonia; U.S. Cobalt imports are 60 percent from Leopoldville, 13 percent Morocco, 11 percent Zambia; U.S. Tungsten imports are 19 percent South Korean, 8 percent Bolivian and is also found in Burma, Indonesia and Cambodia. American corporations building the B-1 will generally not purchase these materials from foreign owned mines, but they will be bought from other U.S. corporations which OWN the foreign mines and exploit the workers.

U.S. Imperial interests dominate where dictatorships are the rule. The dictators depend on U.S. aid to stay in power, and the U.S. government tends to ignore the regimes' repressive policies in order to protect U.S. Imperial interests. This vicious cycle is complemented with large amounts of police and military aid. Should the pro-Imperialist dictatorship fail, history has shown that the U.S. will often resort to intervention. In the previous 175 years there were 199 U.S. military hostilities without a declaration of war. Nearly 100 percent of these U.S. interventions were in Third World countries. The ultimate counter-insurgency weapon in Vietnam was the B-52. What about the B-1?

Senator William Proxmire called the B-1 "a public works project for the aerospace industry rather than a needed weapon for the defense of the United States." Contracts have been landed by three corporations for research and development of the B-1 prototypes. A $1.32 billion airframe contract is in Rockwell International's hands. General Electric has a $458 million jet engine contract. A $65 million avionics contract is Boeing's territory. If the Air Force gets its way, these companies will gain billions. There are about 70 subcontractors as well, and Rockwell claims that 3,000 U.S. big businesses will eventually gain $ from the B-1 and related production. Moreover, high profit are guaranteed by the Pentagon, with fringe benefits thrown in, like incentives, equipment and plants!

Money has been allocated by Congress on an annual basis since 1969 for research and development of B-1 prototypes, and $1.9 billion has been burned thus far. $473.5 million has been requested for fiscal year 1974, the highest yet for a single year. Two crucial congressional votes are coming up. One will be in the summer or fall of 1974 after the first test flight, and if Congress bends to corporate pressure, two FURTHER prototype planes will be developed for more testing. Then, according to the current schedule, Congress will be asked to fund the production of 241 B-1's.

If you agree that militaristic priorities — like the B-1 — should be reversed, write your congressional representative. Ask that no further funds be appropriated for production or development of the bomber.

A Taste Of History

When people study history, they should study more than just facts, they should also look at the story behind the facts. Instead of looking for where or when, they should ask why.

To ask why is not easy. It involves a great deal of looking into facts that are well known and looking into facts that may have been buried by time or supressed by certain people for their own purposes. But if one is willing to look long and hard, these facts can be found.

After finding these facts, they must all be taken into consideration and the researcher must come up with an answer to the question "why?" These conclusions must be carefully arrived at, or else they can be used to distort history. And, of course, one's conclusions is one's own bias which is one's opinion based on fact with a little of the researchers personal ideology thrown in.

One of the most criticized books of the sixties is "The Politician" by Robert Welch. A while back, I put in a short review of Mr. Welch's book which is a history, a careful documentation of the life of Dwight David Eisenhower. Almost immediately after this book was released in 1963, vicious attacks were made on the author. But these "critics" did not deny any of the facts presented in the book. They never mentioned that half the contents of the book is footnotes from sources such as "The New York Times", "Time", "Life", "Newsweek", etc. They did not mention that Mr. Welch researched his topic very carefully for six years before a first manuscript was written. All they did was call him a crackpot because they just did not happen to like the conclusions he made. If they wanted to be honest about the whole thing, they should have read "The Politician" very carefully and checked out Mr. Welch's sources. Undoubtedly, they would have had to come up with the same conclusion. Sure, Mr. Welch's anti-communist ideology was thrown in but facts are facts and in my reading "The Politician", I was forced (not by coercion) to agree with Mr. Welch.

Another thing about history, those who don't learn from it are bound to repeat its mistakes. Two examples. In 1933, a madman named Hitler took control of Germany. In time he became a dictator. We all know that. What I feel people fail to realize is that when Hitler started his imperialistic moves, he was encouraged by Britain's Neville Chamberlain in that Chamberlain let him have the Sudetenland and other territories. It wasn't until he invaded Poland, a country he couldn't have, that World War II started. My point is that if Chamberlain had confronted Hitler when he wanted the Sudetenland, Europe would have been saved from World War II. Yet, Chamberlain made the mistake of negotiating with Hitler.

The same parallel exists today. Since the end of World War II, the communists have been the imperialists. They were the aggressors in Korea, Vietnam and now the Middle East. Yet we negotiated in Korea, which brought on Vietnam. The Vietnam settlement was negotiated and now Israel is in great danger of becoming the next place. What I am saying is that unless you confront the communists and make them stop this series of aggressive acts, they'll keep it up until they have conquered the world. Of course, there's much more to this example than can be stated here at this time but basically, this is what its all about. My second example shows this.

In the period of 1945-48, the conquered nations of Eastern Europe were taken over by the communists. At the conclusion of World War II, coalition governments were set up by the victorious allies as agreed upon at Yalta, Potsdam and such. The communists eventually seized control of Bulgaria, Albania, Poland, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Hungary. The mistake, I feel, was letting the communists into such a coalition government. The United States should have helped these conquered nations rebuild so that they could decide for themselves what they wanted. But the communists, with less than 1 per cent of the population in each country, took control. Now we are making the same mistake, only this time on an international level. Coalition government, world style, is what the United Nations is. In my recent columns I exposed some of the ways in which the communists control the U.N. and how they are using it to promote their aims and objectives. I do not intend to repeat myself but I am saying that history has shown that coalition governments with the communists have ended with a communist takeover and with the U.N. structured the way it is, there can be no difference.

Why do I feel this way? I'll tell you why. History has shown mistakes in the past in regards to communists. The same mistakes are being made now. Apparently the men making these decisions haven't learned the lessons of history. As for the history in "The Politician", Robert Welch had the following ending to the book, "And if this history contains facts that are unpleasant and disturbing to both the reader and myself, that is the fault of those who made the history, not of him who wrote it."

On Alert

By STEVEN McMAHON

Last week, a number of people became understandably perturbed, even frightened, because American troops throughout the world were ordered to go to what has been termed "precautionary alert". After the initial shock wore off and one seemed satisfied that the incident in no way approached the enormity of the Cuban Missile Crisis, the air thawed considerably. Indeed, the possibility of a U.S.-Soviet confrontation had been virtually alleviated by the time many Americans had even become aware of a crisis; a far cry from the Kennedy-Khruschev duel which persisted for eight very long days.

Besides calling up grim visions of a reinstitution of the Selective Service System, one could not help but echo the sentiment expressed by some of the reporters at the Kissenger press conference; that perhaps the incident had been precipitated more by domestic considerations than by the vagaries of international diplomacy. While Henry minced no words in dismissing this irreverent query, the impression hung on long after the conference had ended; spawning both applause and repudiation of the outrageous question.

Indeed, the question was an outrageous one, one which at any other time of the modern Presidency would have clearly deserved unqualified dismissal by both the President's detractors and supporters alike. But this time in which we live is like none other in modern American history. Ours is a time of grave suspicion and mistrust for the Chief Executive; a mistrust created not by the press, nor the Congress, but by the man who presently and unfortunately occupies the Oval Office.

In all fairness however, the President's order for a world-wide troop alert seems, on the basis of the available evidence, to have been quite justified, even commendable. A unilateral Soviet "peacekeeping force" represents a totally untenable position. It would seem that the Soviets' chief interest was in coming to the aid of the beleaguered Egyptian Third Army (which is still surrounded by the Israelis in the Sinai), rather than enforcing a cease-fire. Fortunately, the world-wide alert, unanimously voted for by the National Security Council with the concurrence of the President, dissuaded the Russians from their planned course of action.

Although the Soviet move smacks of irrationality on the surface, there may have been a solid political motivation underlying this gesture. It has been reported that the Russian alert which initiated the entire crisis was most probably a compromise by Brezhnev in order to placate the military which has persistently attacked his policy of detente with the U.S. For some time, the military has been pushing for involvement in the Arab-Israeli War in order to test the latest weapons technology with Russian personnel. Mr. Brezhnev appears to be sitting in slightly warmer water than his American counterpart, who will doubtless serve out the remainder of his term unless the unthinkable occurs; that the tapes in any way implicate him in high crimes. If the tapes were not clean of incriminatory details, certainly Mr. Nixon would have made them so before handing them to Judge Sirica.

Despite the distinct possibility that Nixon will survive Sirica's perusal of the tapes, his credibility quotient will not therefore rise by any discernable amount. It would seem more plausible that he will complete his term of office amid the spectre of disgrace till the day finally comes when the press really won't have Nixon to kick around anymore. For even if Mr. Nixon should be completely exonerated of any directly criminal activity (pre-Watergate activities notwithstanding), he is still the man who compiled one of the vilest collections of high-ranking criminals since Teapot Dome. The buck, indeed, stops here.

The Food Fight Story

To The Editor:

I was a little disappointed by your reporting of the food fight that took place Halloween night in Hampshire Dining Commons. You printed only one picture with no accompanying article. In talking to some of the students who had been there to see it, I got the impression there was more to the story than what I saw printed.

Apparently the whole thing was planned. Students said they saw posters advertising the event in Washington tower, Pierpont, and a few of the other Southwest dorms. People showed up in raincoats, and coveralls, loaded down with the extras the D.C.'s try to pacify you with. It's not understood how everyone knew which room in which to congregate.

At approximately 6:00 p.m., "Some girl walked into the room, threw a handfull of coleslaw and then ran out." Inside of about two seconds the air was full of garbage. Not one table or chair was left untouched.

The innocent, caught by surprise, mostly just tried to get out of the way. Not too many were successful. One girl just covered herself with a coat and stood there waiting for it to stop. Another student dumped his tray as fast as he could and used it as a shield. Some who hadn't known what was going to happen wound up participating.

When it was over, the walls, windows, and the floor were thoroughly covered. No one had ever seen anything like it. People stood around in total amazement at the last escaping food-flinger accidently tipped over one of the round tables near the door, sliding trays, plates, and glasses of milk on to the floor, making one of the smaller messes in the room.

Later that night, I was talking to one of the participants during a Halloween boogie. He was dressed up as a piece of shit, all wrapped up in brown crepe-paper with green and yellow blotches.

He told me the fight had two purposes. First because it was great sport, and secondly to protest the over-priced dung that's served in the UMass. commons. He pointed out that none of the other four colleges in the area charge so much for such poor quality food. Hampshire College, for example, serves a char-coal broiled steak dinner every Saturday night, with seconds on everything but the steak, for $2.00. And the food is good! Hampshire's normal dinner fee is $1.75 for visitors, with seconds on everything. The meal ticket is good on weekends, and if you eat only one meal on a particular day, your unused ticket is good for any meal served the rest of the week, including the steak dinner. So where does UMass get off charging $2.30 for dinners the Army would be ashamed of?

I had to admit, he had a point. So did a lot of others. It seemed to me a good many people thought this wasn't going to be the end of it if the D.C.'s couldn't manage to provide better service for the incredible amount of money they are taxing out of the undergrads.

Of the people I talked to that night, many felt sorry for those who had been innocent and still got covered with lasagna, but none had sympathy for the owners of the commons who had to pay to have it all cleaned up. In fact, most laughted, and then yelled, "Give 'em shit!!"

Pressure Finast

To The Editor:

The United Farm Workers are involved in a crucial contract struggle this weekend in Western Massachusetts, and are calling for all members of the campus communities to join them this afternoon at a mass picketline at the FINAST supermarket store in Hadley. This picketline is crucial to VFW's, as agreements between the UFW's and Stop & Shop will only be put into effect in Western Massachusetts if the boycott committees from the area pressure FINAST from scabbing on the boycott. To clear the area of non-union iceburg lettuce and grapes the boycott needs the support of people to show Atkins Farms, Finast and Stop & Shop and other chains that there is a moral and political awareness that is inherent in even buying a head of lettuce. The issues are clear, the workers want the Union to be their representative bargaining agent - for without the union there is sub-standard pay, and poor living and working conditions. The VFW asks people to join them 1 p.m.-4 p.m. Saturday.

This is one step in defeating a system that permits over 100,000 children under the age of 16 to work full time in the fields, a system that gives the migrant worker a mean life span of 49 years while the average white American is 72, a system that permits 8,000 to 9,000 people yearly to suffer severe pesticide poisoning, a system that allows growers to sell lettuce from 29 cents to fifty-nine when it only costs them 2 cents to process the head. Support the LETTUCE & GRAPE BOYCOTT SATURDAY. Call 253-2055, 549-0698, 546-6620 for information on rides. Signs and leaflets will be at the store. JOIN THE DELEGATION. Venceremos.

Pro Moe

To The Editor:

As Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian and the main keeper of the student voice on campus, I feel that UMass, through the Distinguished Visitors Program, should do everything in its power to bring Moe (Three Stooges) Howard to campus.

It is usually my policy not to include my voice in this section of the newspaper, but the issue is too important for me to stand by and idly watch.

As to those of you who would oppose Moe's coming to UMass, perhaps a quote from Moe himself would fit: "Everytime you think, you weaken the nation."

Omission

Editor's Note: A sentence was inadvertantly omitted from Wednesday's letter to the editor entitled "Palestinian-Arab Struggle" (page 15, four paragraph).

The paragraph should have read:

"Constant Israeli expansionism subjects the Jewish masses to the antogonism of the Arab masses, an antagonism which was never present before Zionist growing presence in that area. The Arab-Jewish friendship is a purely Western phenomenon. For example, the Jews in Moslem, Spain were made to flourish and had the necessary security to exercise and develop their thought and culture until they were persecuted, from the inquisition onwards, by the Europeans."

The Collegian regrets the error.

The Ballad Of John Dillingus

To The Editor:

I'd like to congratulate the local police force on their outstanding job of upholding law and order on this campus. I'm referring to that magnificent investigation into the illegal sale of alcoholic beverages by some hardened underworld kingpin. I'm sure that the report will read that this enemy of society was trying to establish a mafia foothold into UMass with the orders coming up directly from New York City or maybe even Washington.

Being a true Republican, I'd like to also set the news media straight on what really happened. Two months ago I noticed a new student had moved into Webster dorm. Immediately I knew something was strange about him, always wore a trench coat and carried a violin case plus he had a star on his left cheek. Later that same week, I saw his picture on the F.B.I. story on T.V. I then raced down to the post office and saw his name and picture again on the 10 most wanted list right above the notorious Dick Milhous. With that I knew my life and the lives of everyone in the dorm was endangered. I then did what any good red-necked Umie would have done, I ratted on him to the UMass super police.

Justice was swift in coming. Just last Tuesday, 63 UMass police, 45 state troopers with dogs and Gov. Sargent himself leading the raid surrounded Webster House. The ultimate force (102 parking ticket police and 3 Amherst towing trucks) were kept on standby alert. The police rushed the dorm, tore off every door before cornering John Dillingus in a toilet stall. After an exchange of 13001 shots (13000 police shot and 1 fart from John Dillingus) the police resorted to using Dining Commons food. Unable to take it, John Dillingus made a break for it. The rest is history, John Dillingus fell and died in a pool of food. His vast warehouse was seized (17 cases) and each policeman had his picture taken shaking hands with Gov. Sargent over the body of John Dillingus thus guaranteeing them all tenure.

From that night on I knew I could sleep well knowing that the great UMass police are out risking life and limb protecting me from such criminals.

Blacks Should Not Support Arabs

To The Editor:

I believe it is one of the great ironies of history that some Black groups and individuals have chosen to align themselves with the Arab cause in the current Mideast crisis. To a large degree this alliance is encouraged by a combination of forces seeking to use the awakening Black consciousness for their own political ends, and a general American ignorance of the demography of Africa and Southwest Asia.

It has been suggested in a resolution recently adopted by Third World students that American Blacks have an obligation to support the Arab cause because of their "cultural link to Egypt". This is a myth that ought to be explored and exposed.

The part of the world in question can be divided roughly into three areas: the Middle East, North Africa, and sub-Saharan Africa. The Middle East comprises Arab states such as Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Iraq. The peoples of this area are Caucasians of predominantly Mediterranean stock.

The nations of North Africa are Egypt, Libya, Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia. The peoples of this area were conquered, in the distant past, by the Arabs of the Middle East, with whom they merged culturally and racially.

Sub-Saharan Africa is a region sharply differentiated from the preceding two. It is Black Africa and distinctly non-Arab. It was from this area that Black slaves were brought to the United States. At no time were any of the Arabs of North Africa nor the Mediterranean Arab peoples of the Middle East brought to the United States as slaves. On the contrary, they were instrumental in supplying slaves from Black, sub-Saharan Africa to the American Market. The Arabic language itself bears out this historical fact to this very day. A common word for "Black" (see "Negro" in English-Arab dictonary) is "ibd", the same word for "slave".

Obviously, Arab political groups are not eager to enlighten Blacks on the Arab role in the slave trade. Instead, they will encourage resolutions claiming an impossible "cultural link" between American Blacks and Egytians. They will distribute leaflets in Third World circles deriding the Jew as a white, European colonizer, while in Europe this same Jew is depicted as the dark and grasping anti-Christ for those more inclined to classical anti-semitism.

It's a treacherous game in which we, in this atomic age, may all end the losers.

Hampshire Food Fight

To The Editor:

I am usually the last person to have anything to say when it comes to the subject of the dining commons, but there are a few things which cannot be ignored. On Wednesday evening, October 31, a group of so-called "students" turned one of the rooms in Hampshire Dining Commons into one of the most repulsive sights I think I'll ever have the chance to experience. About six "students" seemed to feel that the dining commons needed a little excitement and started up a food fight, which ended up with an inch or more of food covering the floor, walls and windows, and an unestimated amount of damage to dining commons property.

Not only did these clowns, I use the term losely, the only thing lacking in their Halloween joke being their clown costume cause damage to the dining commons, which at this point no one can really afford, but they also destroyed the remaining meals of about thirty people who had cleared out of the room to avoid being hit, and covered any remaining coats and jackets with food. The sad thing to remember is that its the few people like these that give the rest of Southwest the reputation which it has. One can't help but wonder what these "students" are really here to study.

Middle East: Not A Political Game

To The Editor:

The recent deluge of letters about the conflict in the Middle East has had a unifying theme: people see what they want to see and they choose to prop up one dimensional viewpoints with layers of reassuring rhetoric. For example: 1. A Wednesday column by David Eibel claimed that the U.S. created Israel. In fact, Israeli Jews created Israel by a protracted struggle against the British Mandate government. The immediate cause of this struggle was Britain's policy to exclude Jewish immigration to Palestine both prior to and after the Nazi holocaust. Britain, having found Palestine sufficiently ungovernable, turned their Mandate over to the United Nations. In 1947 the United Nations created a plan to partition Palestine into a Jewish and an Arab state. The plan passed despite the opposition of every Middle Eastern country because of the joint support of the Communist Bloc and the Western Allies. The Soviet Union and the United States were the first two countries to recognize Israel. 2. Several letters have attempted to paint Israel as the agent of capitalism and imperialism in the Middle East. The greatest investment of capital in the Middle East is that of American oil companies in Arab oil producing countries. The finances of the Arab world and the funding of Palestinian organizations rest on this investment. It should be mentioned here that neither in Southeast Asia nor in the Middle East have American oil companies been silent partners in the policies of their host countries.

All of the combatants in the latest Middle East war claim to be socialist in orientation and have some institutions within their societies of a socialist nature, depending on their levels of industrial development. The issue of who is more socialist than whom is an especially stupid way of viewing the Middle East. 3. Israel cannot escape responsibility for the departure of two-thirds of the Arab population of Israel in the 1948 war. It is irrelavant whether these prople fled because they were told to by the leaders of invading Arab armies or whether they were forced to by Israeli intimidation. The rectification of the problem of Arab refugees should have been a top priority of the Israeli Government after the 1948 war. It was not.

Nor was it a top priority of the Arab Governments at the time. King Abdullah of Jordan seized what was to have been much of Arab Palestine. None of the countries of the region were willing to accept the refugees: thus they were confined to refugee camps. I do not write this to imply that Arab and Israeli injustices cancel but only to illustrate that the injustices of the region come from more than one source. 4. Theresa Carr's leter to Wednesday's Collegian proposed a peace based on a return to the 1947 Partition Plan. It is somewhat mysterious to me why a demarcation deemed sufficiently unacceptable in 1947 by Arab nations to provoke a war would be accepted today by the same parties. In the first ceasefire of 1948 Israel held roughly two-thirds of the land allocated by the U.N. Partition. That ceasefire was broken by the Egyptian army ten days after it had been established.

It is not at all clear to me that what is acceptable to Theresa Carr would be acceptable to the Middle East antagonists. It is clear that Israel's existence under such a solution would be contingent on the good will of militarily hostile neighbors. A glance at the 1947 partition map reveals two strips of land connected by a junction two miles wide for a Jewish state; three disconnected pieces of land for an Arab state. While I do not advocate territorial expansion for Israel beyond the 1948 boundaries, I also do not advocate national suicide. If Ms. Carr believes solidarity with the Arab side will accomplish such a solution, I believe her sympathies are misplaced.5. ACollegian column on Friday cited Israel's Law of Return as evidence of Israeli racism. Most of Israel's population came to Israel since 1948 from the Arab World under the provisions of the Law of Return, mostly from Iraq, Yemen, and North Africa. After the 1948 war Jewish residents of Arab countries came under considerable persecution, particularly in Iraq. The governments of these countries were willing to let their Jewish populations depart en-masse, provided thay left all their possessions behind.

That same persecution began occuring in the Soviet Union at roughly the same time, for reasons too involved to discuss here. Let it suffice to say that the Soviet Union

Three Strikes, Zamir

To The Editor:

Ah God, I was hoping he wouldn't do this to himself. Somebody told me Zamir Nestelbaum was threatening to make an ass of himself by attacking the Central Area Academic Affairs Committee in the Collegian. Most impolitic, I thought; surely Nestelbaum has enough self-respect..But he's gone ahead and done it anyway (October 30) and taken a few cheap shots at me while he was at it.

Okay. Now it's his turn. Here's what happened:

One! Nestelbaum skulks into a committee meeting to defend his intensely phoney proposal for a colloquium in "Chess and its Social Perspectives." (That's right: social perspectives.) With a perfectly straight face, he talks about the "foreign policy" implications of the Fisher-Spassky match (I swear he did!) and makes a few crypto-fascist remarks about chess-playing among Russian "peasants." It soon becomes clear that the committee should move on to more serious business.

Two!! As for the game itself, my resistance to granting university credit for playing chess is merely a matter of judgment. Other members of the committee made intelligent and dignified cases in favor of the idea. When it came to a vote, we reached a compromise, approving the proposal, but for no credit. If Nestelbaum had played it straight with us and said what was really on his mind--that he'd like his cronies to get academic credit for sitting around playing chess with him--we would have had, at least, an honest proposal to consider. But, always on the alert for a chance to make himself the object of derision and merriment, Nestelbaum decided to base his defense on a lot of meretricious crap.

Three!!! If Nestelbaum's chess game is as feeble as his writing, then his would-be students have been spared exposure to an incompetent.

Yer out, Zamir, baby!

Mr. Nestelbaum replies: "Nyah! Nyah! Nyah! Sour grapes will get you nowhere, Mr. Slick!!)

Laughed Out Of Class

To The Editor:

There have been several times during my four years at the University when I have sat back in amazement at the student body. Today, sitting in Mahar Auditorium at the 3:35 section of Food Science 101 was another one of those times.

A professor has the unfortunate experience of following the Teacher of the Year in a large lecture class. What is the result? Several members of the class walk out laughing. One even felt a need to stick out his tongue and make some sort of gutteral utterance. What's the matter, people? Can we no longer understand and empathize human feelings? Doesn't everyone have some worth, and knowledge to share? Would it have been any different if he had preceeded Dr. Clydesdale? Is this the result of having an exceptional instructor, that any following one is laughed out of class even before being listened to? If a teacher can truly not reach you, then O.K., buy the lecture notes. But how about next time, staying for the remainder of the class. Try not to make a judgement until you've heard the lecture. Maybe you'll be surprised at what you hear, and perhaps it will help someone's self concept just a little more, something that anyone could benefit from.

Religion In The News

Nationwide Ad Campaign Underway

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The new theme for a nationwide religious ad campaign still preserves its social concern — this time on curbing violence in America — but indications are that future emphasis may switch back to the more personal side of faith.

A "better balance," a directive to a planning committee put it.

Such a shift would mean that the multimillion-dollar program of Religion in American Life would have gone a full cycle in its 25 years — from its original emphasis on personal worship, to religion's broader social implications and back again to personal aspects.

Signs of a similar refocusing on personal religion also have been showing up lately in the country's major denominations.

However, for the coming year at least, the cooperative religious advertising venture is keeping stress on the social dimensions in a new campaign starting this month against varied forms of violence.

A "tide of violence is sweeping our land," says a program outline, adding that the campaign "recognizes both the overt and covert aspects of violence, and the institutional as well as the personal forms it takes."

While recognizing this "complexity of violence," the descriptive statement says the program stresses that "each of us can be the instrument by which this cycle is broken" by sensitivity to God's love rather than to violent human tendencies.

As one ad puts it, "We concede that violence is in all of us. So is God. Try it His way. It works."

The campaign, sponsored annually by 43 national religious bodies in cooperation with the Advertising Council, includes posters and broadcast spots as well as newspaper and magazine ads, the space and time contributed free as a public service.

This runs up to $27 million worth of advertising annually.

One of the current ads, citing the diverse forms of violence, says:

"Men and women walk in fear...... The hand that would reach out to help is often held back by fear of involvement. No one is free of involvement: a child struck, a crooked deal arranged, personal violence is committed.

The cooperative program, started in 1949, put the emphasis in its early years on personal religion and participation in church and synagogue. But about eight years ago, it began stressing social ramifications of faith, such as interracial reconciliation and concern for the poor.

However, on Oct. 18, the 50-member board of directors, including both businessmen and church executives, modified the rules to give its final say on program content. This previously had been left up to a planning committee, consisting mostly of religious communications specialists.

The committee recommended a program for next year emphasizing social justice, but the board turned it down, calling for a more balanced program that dealt with personal worship and participation in churches and synagogues.

The board felt the proposed program was "too one-sided," said the Rev. Jerald Hatfield, RAL's information officer.

Legalized Prostitution Considered In Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Two members of the city council who are seeking re-election have suggested voters might want to consider legalizing prostitution as a way to control it.

Councilmen Joseph Tierney and Gerald O'Leary made their comments in response to a questionaire from a citizens group.

O'Leary said that he personally abhors prostitution "of any kind and it is against my personal belief and conscience."

But he said it might be better to have a sanctioned "red light district........so other people can walk the streets without being accosted" rather than the open prostitution that exists in some areas of Boston.

After O'Leary's comments were published yesterday, he issued a clarifying statement saying if prostitution were legalized by voters, "any such activity should be restricted and confined......and should not be allowed to spread to other sections of our city."

Tierney said the idea should be submitted to the people in a referendum so "the people of Boston can decide if they want it."

He said "We might be surprised" at the results of such a referendum.

"Some people may think I'm a nut for this," he said, "but I'm married, I'm happily married, and when I was single I did all right."

Belchertown Plans Benefit Hike

A 25 mile hike for the benefit of the residents of the Adolescent Training Unit at the Belchertown State School, Belchertown, is planned for Saturday, Nov. 17. The route will take hikers from Sheldon Field, Northampton to the grounds of Belchertown State School.

The announced goal of the campaign is $15,000, which will be applied to a program of revitalization of structures and programs for the adolescent residents of the school.

The exact route, which is to include refreshment and entertainment stops, will be announced within a week along with procedures for obtaining contribution pledges.

Middle East: Not A Political Game

has had difficulty reconciling a policy of cultural genocide against the Jews and the embarassment a massive Jewish emigration would produce.

European Jewry was trapped in Nazified Europe prior to the Second World War. Hitler compares favorably with the present Soviet leadership in that he demonstrated some willingness to permit massive Jewish emigration. No country in the world, the United States included, was willing to accept these would be emigrants. Within five years they were annihilated in Nazi death camps and Russian forests.

The Law of Return is the only way that Jews have to ensure that the above sequence finds a new vocabulary to justify their hatred of the Jews. In the Middle Ages "Christ killer" was the appropriate epithet for the Jew, and it provided the necessary reassurance to justify the imposition of misery in better times, wholesale slaughter in worse.

In Czarist Russia Jews were murdered for thirty years because a Jewish girl participated in the assassination of Czar Alexander II. The vocabulary of hatred then claimed that a Jewish-Communist conspiracy existed undermining the moral strength of Russia. This vocabulary is no stranger to American shores, South and North.

The catchwords of hatred in post-Medieval Europe were that the Jews were merchants and middlemen profiting from the toil of others. Such a view is blind to over a millenia of legal restrictions in European history permitting no Jew to own land and prohibiting all but a few occupations to the Jew.

In the Nazi era the distinction between Aryan and Semite provided an intellectually satisfying way of justifying the unjustifiable. The problem was race; the solution final.

In America today the vocabulary of hatred against the Jews begins with the catchword Zionism. The American press, you see, is controlled by Zionists, wealthy ones at that.

I suggest that some of the purveyors of this rhetoric to the pages of the Collegian stop kidding themselves. 7. Peace in the Middle East will not occur unless the claims of Palestinian Arabs and Israelis to a homeland in Palestine are mutually realized and respected. If this can be done by drawing a defensible line across Palestine or by the creation of a true binational state aware of the unique problems of both nationalities in world history, I am all for it. But such a peace will not be achieved by the cheerleading attitude that American advocates of both sides seem to have adopted.

As a Jew I would be naive indeed if I thought that "Solidarity with the Arab Cause" will bring peace to my people. Had the recent war gone the other way, I do not believe that any Israeli boundary would have been respected or that any power on earth could have effected a ceasefire. The official position of the Egyptian and Syrian Governments is that Israel must be destroyed. Twenty five years of relentless hostility has shown that if this position is mere rhetoric, it is rhetoric gone out of control. Jews tend to take talk of annihilation seriously. To me "Solidarity with the Arab Cause" implies the sanctioning of terror against Russian emigrants and Israelis and the lionizing of the Munich and Lod Airport murders, unless these things are demonstrably repudiated. Those political groups on campus that have chosen to embrace this solidarity have shown both moral blindness and an incredibly transparent opportunism.

American support of Israel has uncomfortable similarities to a fan's rooting interest in a successful football team. It sees what it wants to see — it sees Israel as a willing gladiator against Soviet expansionism. It seldom if ever acknowledges the stillbirth of Palestinian national aspirations that the world acquiesced to in 1948.

The Middle East is people, not a political game to occupy the free time of UMIES. It is people who are no strangers to disenfranchisement, terror and death. Partisan advocay as has been expressed in this paper fuels hatred and war. Wars are also people. Dead people.

"Operation Hunt" Continues In Southwest

The guidelines for the first few stages of "Operation Hunt", the search to find a successor to Southwest Master-Director John Hunt, have been formulating over the past week.

Vaughn Jeffries, Southwest Staff Assistant and Chairman of the operation, announced Wednesday to Southwest staff members the results of several meetings held recently.

At present, the operation consists of two processes: internal planning and external questioning.

All Southwest affiliations will have a chance to voice opinion as to the definition, requirements, and role of the new Master-Director. These orzanizations include Southwest Centers, the Southwest Assembly, the Business Office, the Southwest Policy Board, and the SW Houses.

The people present at the recent meetings drew up a list of approximately 30 University-related staffs and groups that are related in some way to Southwest and who would have an opinion on the matter.

The Southwest staff yesterday made plans to unite representatives from these organizations into small groups which would discuss the situation.

The next step in "Operation Hunt" will be the review of opinions and the formation of a Search Committee. It has been suggested that the membership of the Search Committee be kept at a small number. Robert Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor For Academic Affairs, has tentatively suggested that the Committee be composed of two Southwest faculty members, two faculty members from outside the area, two Southwest staff members, and three Southwest students.

Jeffries noted that student feedback on the matter is welcome, and that comments can be directed to him in Washington Tower. Comments can also be made to the Southwest Assembly.

Going-Gone: Sold To The Man In Centerfield

By KAROL STONGER
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - "Eighty...eighty...do I hear ninety...couldn't get you another eight balls like this except at Cooperstown and they're not for sale.

"Ninety...ninety...do I hear a hundred?

"One hundred..one hundred to the man out there in centerfield."

An art and antique auction house on Manhattan's plush East Side was invaded Thursday by baseball buffs who bid nearly $8,000 for some 400 baseballs and other memorabilia from the estate of Alphonse Leveque. The proceeds went to charity.

Leveque, who lived just three blocks from Ebbets Field until he died last April at the age of 90, was a devout baseball fan. His team, of course, was the Brooklyn Dodgers, but he collected autographed balls from nearly every club in the country, including the old Philadelphia Blue Jays and Boston Bees. And when the balls arrived in the mail, he stashed them in the vault at the Wall Street bank where he was an officer.

The earliest in his collection was a 1927 Dodgers ball that went for $130. But a 1936 Yankees ball with the signatures of Babe Ruth and Casey Stengel commanded the highest bid - $320.

Most of the collection was sold in lots, up to 11 balls, well shellacked and stapled in plastic bags, to a group.

For the most part, the bidding was brisk. But when it lagged, the auctioneer would take up the slack by shouting "that's worth more than a diamond of that size."

John Bolig, a University of Delaware researcher, was all smiles. He bought a Babe Ruth-autographed ball for $200.

"A friend of mine and I guessed it'd go for $1,000. We talked about spending $500 apiece and putting it on my mantle for six months and on his for six months. He backed out of the deal so I personally was willing to go to $500.

"Now I'm going to go home and gloat a lot."

Brodie Back

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) - John Brodie will return as starting quarterback Sunday when the San Francisco 49ers play at Detroit, Coach Dick Nolan said Thursday.

Steve Spurrier started the last three games, including a 17-3 loss to Atlanta last Sunday, and the team lost two of the games to drop to 3-4, three games behind leading Los Angeles in the National Football Conference West.

The 38-year-old Brodie announced a week ago that this will be his last football season. He came off the bench to play in the last two games after Spurrier was unable to lead the offense to any scores.

Women's Crew Completes Successful Season

By MARK DLUGOSZ

"The girls always had enthusiasm," said women's crew coach Bob Spousta of his women's crew season. "The girls got up every weekday morning at 6:30 and worked hard."

The girl's crew season had started with a six team meet on the Connecticut River where the girls won the entire meet. The Fall Regatta had been cancelled, so the girl's next meet was the Head of the Charles Regatta where the women's eight finished sixth in a large field. The girls in this eight were: Debbie Kirchmer, JoAnn Andreas, Holly Olander, Barb O'Riley, Mimi Brown, Mary Miley, Missy Mayer, Rose Seliew, and coxwain Donna Blackburn.

Captain Missy Mayer said "she enjoyed all sports, but really found crew a rewarding experience."

The girls recently had trouble at a multi-school meet in Meriden, Connecticut due to high winds and lack of practice that week due to morning fog. The girls have a rough weekend with a race against Smith today and a race against Yale tomorrow. They also have the annual Hadley-Henley Meet on Sunday which consists of an intersquad scrimmage of the men and women's crew team. This meet winds up the fall season for both crew teams.

The women's crew will do winter training as will the men's crew team. The girls are hoping to enter a sprint boat in a major meet during May. During the fall the girls normally race an eight boat but in the Yale meet they will also race a four boat. Other girls that contributed to the team are: Janet Wilson, Cherie Chase, Sharon Gerth, Gail Geddes, Debbie Pierce, Sally Baybutt, Cindy Flint, Nancy Dowd, Eileen Gallant, and Lynne Zoino.

Yanks Switch

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Tal Smith is the new executive vice president of the New York Yankees in a front office restructuring announced Thursday.

Smith, employed for the past 13 years by the Houston Astros, was the only new name introduced by the Yankees at a press conference.

In other administrative changes, Bob Fishel was named a club vice president, relinquishing publicity director chores to his assistant, Martin Appel. Clyde Kluttz was named director of player procurement and scouting; George Pfister was appointed director of minor league clubs; Gene McHale was named controller and Kathy Korleski was appointed director of the Yankees' Alumni Association.

Frosh Host BC In "Biggest Challenge"

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

"Boston College represents a very prestigious school athletic wise, because they play a national schedule as opposed to our New England schedule. It's the most challenging game on our schedule." — Freshman football coach Bill Maxwell.

It comes this weekend for the freshman gridders. It's the pups version of the biggest rivalry in New England Sports (possibly with the exception of Harvard-Yale), Boston College vs. The University of Massachusetts. It all begins Sunday with the opening kickoff at 2:00 p.m. The Frosh are seeking to protect their perfect slate (1-0) Sunday, hopefully still remembering their 41-0 thrashing of URI one week ago.

It's pretty interesting playing BC because there are so many guys playing for BC that were scouted by the Minuteman football program and vice versa. The guys who would want to play football on a national level would probably choose BC over UMass. Whereas the kid who wants to play New England level football will come to UMass." This is how Coach Maxwell accounts for where the in-state prospects went to college and now play football.

There is a distinct possibility that the frosh will go at the Eagles shorthanded. There are 7 players who will dress for the varsity on Saturday against Vermont, and if they are called by Coach MacPherson, that individual (or individuals) probably won't play on Sunday for health reasons.

The signal-caller position is still up for grabs as Brian McNally, Peter Colson, and Frank De Fillippo have all fought it out through practice sessions. Only after practice today, will the decision be known on who will start against the Eagles (and hopefully lead a killing of the travelling birds).

The Frosh have been left well-preserved through last week's humbling of URI and through practice sessions this week. In fact the only guy who won't be dressed for Sunday's game is Gary Bing, a defensive lineman who bruised his knee in practice.

Last year when these two teams met at Chestnut Hill, everything went right for the Minutemen as they rolled over the sluggish Eagles 45-26 in the cold, wind, and rain.

Hopefully, the weather will be different this time, but not the outcome. See ya Sunday. Kickoff again is 2:00.

Andrews Released By A's

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - Mike Andrews, the reserve second baseman who became the center of an off-field controversy during the recent World Series, was given his unconditional release Thursday by the Oakland A's.

The team announced that Andrews, placed on waivers last Friday, was unclaimed. Any other major league team could have acquired him for $1.

The 30-year-old veteran, who played less than three months with the A's, cost team owner Charles O. Finley $5,000 last week. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn fined Finley that amount for the way the owner treated Andrews during the World Series.

In the 12th inning of the second World Series game against the New York Mets, Andrews made two costly errors on successive plays.

The A's lost the game 10-7, and Andrews was left behind when the team flew to New York that night. At Finley's request, he signed a doctor's letter which stated he was disabled because of a bad throwing arm and couldn't properly play his position.

"I told him I couldn't sign it, because it was a lie," Andrews said later. He finally agreed to sign, he said, when he became convinced "if I didn't sign I'd never be in an A's uniform again."

Kuhn ordered Andrews reinstated to the A's, turning down the team's request that infielder Manny Trillo replace Andrews on the roster.

Andrews appeared in 18 regular-season games with Oakland, mostly as a pinch hitter, and batted .190.

Booters Set To Kick Cats

By STEVE DeCOSTA

The Catamounts are coming.

It sounds exciting, but if you stop and think about it, it's really not that big of a deal.

For the uninitiated, the Catamounts are from Vermont, and their coming carries along with it a 0-5 Yankee Conference soccer record.

In other words, Vermont has lost to everyone in the league, and only the Minutemen of Massachusetts stand in the way of a perfect record, in reverse.

Granted, the Cats will be out to break their streak, but it is doubtful that they will be able to overcome their inconsistency enough to threaten the Minutemen.

This year's version of the Catamounts cannot even compare to the Vermont teams of the past. In the composite records for the years 1965 through '72, Vermont had the best conference standing. In that time span, the Cats compiled a record of 28-8-5. Incidentally, UMass was second in that ranking, with a total of 24-12-5.

This year, however, has been a disaster. Vermont is, as indicated, 0-5 in the Conference and only 4-7 overall.

This does not mean that they will be easy prey for the UMass booters. In the five conference games they have lost, four have been by one goal, including a 1-0 defeat at the hands of Connecticut.

The Cats are led by scoring threats Bruce Norton and Gary Griffith. Norton is fourth in the conference in goals scored with five and Griffith is second in assists with four.

Their goaltending duties are handled by Jeff Jonas, who is fifth, or next to last, in the goalie stats with an average of 1.7 goals against per game.

The Minutemen are coming off a devastating loss to UConn in which their hopes for a conference championship were shattered.

Coach Al Rufe says his team is a "little flat right now, but they wanna win; they'll be ready."

For a time, the team was seeking a more balanced offense. Right now, after being whitewashed by UConn, any offense at all will do.

UMass' big scorer Tom Coburn, who scored nine goals in his first four games, has been held off the board in his last three. A big day for Coburn could turn the game into a waltz for the Minutemen.

Rufe has not yet decided on who will start in goal. Carl Vercollone has been the starter for most of the year but second-stringer Paul Pelloquin, when given a start, impressed by blocking Tufts 2-0.

The coach also stated that he would like to give both his goalies some playing time in Saturday's encounter. He said it is possible that each will play a half. Rufe also remarked that whoever doesn't start against the Cats will probably get the nod against Springfield on Wednesday.

Game time is 10:30 at the Boyden fields.

Tom Coburn leaves the goalie in his wake as he dribbles through the Tufts defense. The goal did not count as the result of an offsides infraction. If Coburn has a big day tomorrow the Minutemen could waltz by UVM in a home encounter.

Ruggers Tackle UConn

Forget football, forget basketball, there's no doubt that the greatest sport around is rugby. What can beat the violence of two hulking, sweating rugbyers herniating themselves at breakneck speed. And the scrum. What can't you say about the scrum, when twenty-two grown men fight over a frightened pigskin. What can't you say about the poor guy who takes the ball after the scrum and gets royally flattened by two other hulking herniates, as insane as he is?

Rugby is a combination of football, soccer, boxing and wrestling and most importantly sheer guts. Rugby is like the story of the sinking ship, "every man for himself." It's a sort of institutionalized game of hot potato with the player with the ball fair game for any kind of mayhem. Except no rugby player would ever kick another rugger in the ......Well you know what I mean to say. It just wouldn't be gentlemanly.

If you readers want to be entertained and titillated just head down to the playing fields across from Boyden Gymnasium Sunday afternoon at 1:00 p.m. to see not one but a pair of rugby matches between the teams from UMass and UConn. And I promise you, it may not look like ballet but you'll come away a believer. Be entertained, Sunday at 1 p.m.

WUMV

The football team may not be entertaining this season but that doesn't mean WUMV-TV must go sour. If you miss "Yogi Day" you can catch all the festivities and the Yankee Conference football game with Vermont at the Bluewall this Sunday night at 9 p.m. Marty Kelley will handle the play-by-play accompanied by Part 11 of the comic act with Earl "five year" Barroll. Bob Estelle will be the evening's guest communist.

At halftime highlights of the varsity soccer match with Vermont will be shown as well as football footage from the freshman clash with Boston College played at the Stadium on Sunday.

So for a taste of frosh football, soccer, and the circus gourmets, Kelley, Barroll, and Estelle stop down to the Bluewall this Sunday night at 9 p.m.

Auto Racing... Yet Another Battle Of Sexes

GAINESVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Auto racing's version of the Bobby Riggs-Billie Jean King match will take place at Road Atlanta near Gainesville this weekend.

The race is between the head of the "Group 44" racing team, Bob Tullius, of Falls Church, Va., and Canada's top woman racer, Ms. Ruys de Perez.

Tullius said the match was a result of his telling the woman that her car would be a lot faster with a man at the wheel and that she immediately challenged him to the race.

Correction

CORRECTION — An article appearing in Thursday's Collegian listed the Field Dorm Women's Intramural Football team as the Field Whalers. Actually, they are the Field Goals. The Goals won their consolation game and came away with a third place finish as they defeated the Knowlton Notlwonks, 13-6.

WMUA

Saturday the Minutemen attempt to salvage what's left of their season and their pride as they take on the Catamounts of the University of Vermont at Alumni Stadium. WMUA will be there to bring you all the action live. Game time is 1:00; air time 12:50. Don Gorski is still recuperating from last Saturday's debacle, so join Larry Convoy, Russ Small and Gerry Brooks for Minuteman football. That's WMUA......91.1 FM.

As The Ball Bounces

By GLENN POSTER

Now that you hockey fans have had your look at the upcoming campaign, it's time for basketball to get equal treatment.

In the Atlantic Division, the Celtics have gotten off to a sluggish start. The starting five is the same as last year, with relatively now new bench additions. Second-year man Paul Westphal should see more playing time, but rookies Steve Downing and Phil Hankinson will grow stale on the bench.

The Knicks have the best all-around team in the league again this year. The starting five is the same as last year, with relatively no new bench knows how to make use of his bench as the Celtics saw in last spring's playoff) can play with anybody. Dick Garrett, a guard, will help along with Henry Bibby until Earl Minroe returns from an injury. And don't forget the Knicks' twelfth man, Nathaniel Hawthorne Wingo. The Knicks will probably finish second, but watch out for them during the playoffs.

The Buffalo Braves have some talent in Bob McAdoo, Bob Kaufmann, Jim McMillan, Randy Smith and of course Ernie DiGregorio. However, the Braves are in dire need of a bona-fide center.

Now we come to the Philadelphia 76'ers. Hopefully, a new coach, Gene Shue, will get them off on the right foot. They have nothing much to speak about — oh yuh, this year's top draft pick Doug Collins.

In the Central Divison, the Atlanta Hawks will make some noise. Lou Hudson can play either forward or guard, plus there is scoring punch from Pete Maravich. The Hawks also have a fine playmaker in Herm Gilliam and excellent board strength in Jim Washington and Walt Bellamy.

Capital has K.C. Jones to coach him. But Wes Unseld is hurt and so is Archie Clark. Their slow start will hurt them. However, Phil Chenier will come into his own and should be an All-Star this year. But any team with Elvin Hayes isn't all bad. They should end up second in a close race with Atlanta.

Houston should be an improvement over last season. However, Otto Moore is not a quality center. Cleveland has Lenny Wilkins and Austin Carr in their backcourt. They also have a fine rookie forward in Jim Brewer. If Bob Rule can make a comeback at center, the Cavs might finish higher than fourth.

The Milwaukee Bucks are still the class of the Midwest Division. Lucius Allen has made it and Oscar Robertson is still a factor, though aging. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is the most dominant force in the league.

Chicago could probably fight for first place in any other division. Bob Love is their top player. Detroit just can't seem to put their talent together. Kansas City-Omaha now has Jimmy Walker in the backcourt to join Nate Archibald. But, that's all folks.

This should be the year for Golden State in the Pacific Division, with Nate Thurmond, Rick Berry, Cazzie Russell and more talent.

HS Gridder To Play Despite Artificial Leg

DETROIT (AP) — A high school football player barred from competing because he wears an artificial leg won a court decision Thursday that will allow his to play at least one more game.

Ron Suemnick, 17, played six games at tackle for New Boston High this year before a school official discovered he wore the limb. He was ruled ineligible last week under a Michigan High School Association rule barring players with artificial limbs.

However, U.S. Dist. Court Judge Lawrence Gubow issued a restraining order Thursday prohibiting enforcement of the rule until a hearing on the rule is held next week.

Suemnick and the board of education filed the suit, which claims the high school association rule denies him and others who wear artificial limbs of their rights.

Suemnick will thus get the chance to play at least once more since New Boston plays Grosse Ile on Saturday.

The team's final game is Nov. 10 and Gubow's decision will decide whether or not Suemnick can participate.

Suemnick lost his right leg below the knee in a mower accident in August 1971. Before the mishap, his coaches say, he was a standout in three sports as a sophomore.

Hansen Hurt, Will Not Play

Gridders Host Vermont

By BILL BALLOU

During a normal football season at UMass fans would look past the annual Vermont game and try getting their excitement watching Sunday morning TV.

But this isn't a normal season.

Dick MacPherson, as would be expected, expresses pre-game concern about Vermont, a team which hasn't beaten UMass since 1954. The thing is, he really means it.

"This game is really important," he said yesterday before practice, "and we've just got to have it."

That fact is obvious. The Minutemen have lost two games in a row to Yankee Conference opponents, and stand at 4-4 for the season with a 2-2 Yankee Conference record.

In the last ten meetings between the two teams, only two have been decided by less than 10 points. However, the current UMass slump and a rash of injuries put this outcome in doubt.

UMass is hurting, especially in the line. Kevin Moran most likely won't play, nor Tom Harris, and Gary Mika has the knee problem he's had since Holy Cross. To make matters on the blocking front even worse, though, is an ankle injury to Paul St. Onge which makes him improbable for Saturday. Defensively Paul Hansen injured his knee in practice Thursday and won't play.

The injury to Hansen may hurt the worst because the Catamounts are most dangerous when they're passing. Their big man, literally, is sophomore Bob Bateman, a 6' 5" quarterback who is supposedly the Yankee Conference's next Peil Pennington.

Bateman, about 25 pounds lighter than Pennington, has a strong arm and runs the option very well. He also has a talented corps of receivers, led by senior Tony Jones.

However Vermont is strongest on defense where they've allowed an average of just 12 points a game. Their problem has been that they've scored an average of just 11 points per game.

For UMass this game takes on an uncommon significance. Out of the Yankee Conference race, a bowl bid as remote as Houlton, Maine, the Minutemen are playing for a better than .500 season. A loss tomorrow, with New Hampshire and BC to follow, makes what, at the beginning of the season seemed a given, virtual impossibility.

UMass is now playing it for the game.

"By now, of course, every game for us is most important," says MacPherson. "The players are at the point where they know they're not playing as well as they should, but they can't figure out why. The feeling before the game now is one of consternation."

So pride in performance and love of the game is what it has come down to in 1973. Vermont, a non-winner versus UMass for 20 years would rejoice with a win. UMass, the better team on paper, has to start proving something all over again. Vermont never has been known to lay down and die, and it'll be "Salute to Yogi Day" at the Stadium.

It's possible it won't be a bad afternoon.

Subs Carry Harriers

By SCOTT HAYES

Depth. That's a sign of a championship cross couttry team. Yesterday, in cold and rainy weather, the UMass Cross Country team beat both Central Connecticut and Holy Cross in a tri-meet at Worcester thanks to its excellent depth.

The seven runners who won the Yankee Conference championship did not compete in yesterday's meet because they are training for the New England championships to be held Monday at Boston's Franklin Park.

Once again the freshmen came through to provide the harriers with the winning margin. Andy Levey, Mickey Hawkes and Jim Hunt were the heroes for UMass, passing Holy Cross' Mike Audette in the last 400 yards to give UMass a 24-34 win over the Crusaders.

The meet was a tight one and ironically, the battle developed between Holy Cross and UMass. The Crusdaers came into the meet with a 3-5 record while Central entered the race with an impressive 8-4 record. Holy Cross was evidently "up" for the meet and provided the competition for UMass.

Bob Lees of Central won individual honors, completing the 5.1 mile course in 25:50. Tom Wilson paced the UMass team by taking second place with a time of 26:00. Wilson was within five seconds of the Central speedster for most of the race, but Lees pulled away near the finish for a ten second winning margin. Neil Coleman took third for Holy Cross while Brian Balavender placed fourth for Central. Phil Broughton was the second UMass runner to finish, finishing with a time of 26:24.

Steve Kiley captured sixth for Holy Cross and UMass' John Scheer finished seventh in 27:08. Dave Klett took eighth for the Crusaders.

The next three places decided the meet for UMass. Andy Levey, Mickey Hawkes and Jim Hunt tied for ninth with a time of 27:19, after passing Mike Audette of Holy Cross in the home stretch. Francis O'Keefe came on strong at the finish also, but was only able to tie Audette. Both finished in 27:24.

Coach Ken O'Brien referred to Wilson's performance as an "outstanding effort", staying with the talented Lees for the major portion of the race.

The meet could have gone either way with only half a mile to go. Only two points separated Holy Cross and UMass at that point, and only the gutsy efforts of the three freshmen runners enabled the harriers to up their record to 7-3.

UMass defeated Central 24-37, while Holy Cross wound up with a split for the tri-meet, beating the Blue Devils 24-36. Central appeared to be a tougher team on paper, but statistics can lie too. The turn-around can be explained simply by Holy Cross' preparing for the meet and taking full advantage of their home course.

Wilson and Broughton were out front with Lees at the start of the race, and for the first four miles, UMass was trailing in the meet. CROSS COUNTRY CORNER --The team that will run in the New England championship meet on Monday will probably be Tom Wilson, Phil Broughton, John Scheer, Andy Levey, Mickey Hawkes, Jim Hunt, and Francis O'Keefe. Monday the New Englands, November 12 the IC4A's and then the NCAA's?

The Truth Is Told

In the past week, several newsworthy sports happenings have occurred on campus, but they have been mysteriously covered up by administration. Through careful investigative reporting, this reporter has amassed all the facts and now dares, despite threats on his life and well-being, to make them public.

TRADED — Cross country coach Ken O'Brien for soccer mentor Al Rufe. The rationale behind the deal was the fact that after Rufe takes off his glasses, no one can tell them apart anyway.

ISSUED — A warrant for the arrest of Collegian columnist Marty Kelley. The charge is impersonating a sportswriter. Kelley is extremely dangerous. He is armed with a typewriter and his words are loaded. If seen, do not try to apprehend, as you may end up as the subject of his next column.

AWARDED — To Jim Town, a full scholarship to Southwestern Louisiana. Town had previously been declared ineligible to play for UMass this season. When questioned about Town, the athletic director of SWL reportedly remarked, "We know all about his problems but that won't stop him from playing down here. We were accused of committing over 150 recruiting violations last year and one more couldn't hurt."

NEEDED — One Mickey Mouse to perform at halftime of the UMass-Vermont football game on Saturday. Although it was originally supposed to be "Salute to Yogi" Day, the format of the ceremonies was changed after Athletic Director Frank McInerney was quoted as saying, "Yogi Berra is kind of a folk hero, like Walt Disney and Mickey Mouse." University Promotions issued the change, to "Salute to Yogi and Mickey Day", saying, "By slipping in a Mickey, we can draw a lot of otherwise uninterested kids to fill up the stadium and beef up our revenues." The festivities will include Yogi and Mickey running hand-in-hand around the perimeter of the field while the band plays the tune "Money" and forms the shape of a huge dollar sign.

HANGED IN EFFIGY — John Soltys, Sports Information Director of UConn. Reasons were cited as Kicking WMUA sports director Gerry Brooks out of the press box, refusing to grant WUMV's Marty Kelley a press pass, yelling at kids over the loudspeaker to get off the goal posts, and sucking his thumb at halftime.

COMMITTED — The entire New England soccer rating board, to an asylum. The board's most recent folly occurred when they ranked tiny Amherst College, with a season record of 2-3, in the fifteenth spot, while placing the UMass Minutemen, who have a 4-2-1 record, in the seventeenth. The attending physician reported, "There is no hope for any of them."

REPORTED — By Professor of Journalism, Howard Ziff, that the Amherst College football team could probably beat the UMass Minutemen if a game were held this season.

REPLACED — Dick MacPherson as head football coach by noted football expert Howard Ziff. Ziff was at first reluctant to accept the post, but changed his mind when told that Amherst College was not on the schedule.

QUOTED — From baseball star, and now basketball hopeful John Olsen, who stated, "The ball is just too damn big. How am I supposed to get the right grip for my curve?"

It has come to our attention that the so-called "bigwigs" of this campus have walked among us unnoticed for entirely too long a time. We, the authors, feel that it is our patriotic duty to unveil to you for the first time ever on the pages of Poor Richards, the infamous "UMass Nine".

Can you identify these nine influential men after consulting only the clues offered underneath their pictures? Remember, no peeking on page 5 for the answers — that's cheating!

Prizes galore for all you smarties out there!!!

7-9 correct: You win!!! — an all-expense paid two-week trip to the new luxurious Columbia Point campus in Boston. Transportation provided by Peter Pan Bus service. Room accommodations provided by the Boston Housing Authority.

4-7 correct: Not bad, but not too impressive, either. How does an all-expense paid one-week trip to the campus on the outskirts of beautiful downtown Worcester strike you???

0-3 correct: You lose. A trip to McDonald's on their bus is your only consolation for being stuck in Concrete City.

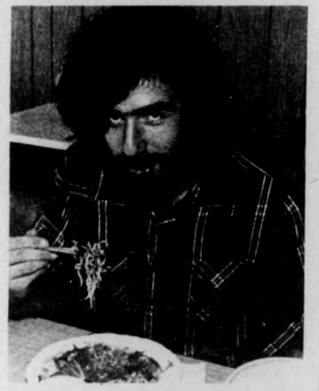
Amherst's Mandarin Menu

by Patrick Coffey & Frederic C. Weiss

If you are the type of person who judges a restaurant by its interior decorating or fancy name, you'd probably overlook Amherst Chinese Food (ACF), located at 62 Main Street, Amherst. Yet, if you did, you'd be making the biggest mistake since the time that you thought that "Chop Suey" came from China (it doesn't). While the place doesn't sound or look luxurious the food is really tasty and the prices are moderate, and reasonable.

The culinary offerings at acf are as numerous as they are delicious. There are 120 varieties of Mandarin style dishes that can personify the minds and the pocketbooks of those patronizing the restaurant.

For those who think basic, and react to the words "Chinese Food" with the thought "Chow mein and egg rolls", ACF can accommodate their humble whims. However if you are in a bolder mood, ACF can offer as much as your budget and your imagination can go for.



Want a quick lunch: From 12:00 till 4:00 Monday thru Friday (except Wednesday when they're closed) Mr. Tso-Cheng Chang, the owner of ACF offers a $.99 to $1.45 luncheon, with an adequate variety. Want to splurge: Try "Peking Duck" (must be ordered two days in advance), expensive ($14) but wow, the duck is yummy.

If you feel like eating something more substantial than a luncheon, Mr. Chang especially recommends his dumplings, fried or boiled. And other dishes tasted by the reviewers and highly recommended by them include: Shrimp with Black Mushrooms and Bamboo Shoots, Beef with Bean Sprouts, Crab Meat with Bean Curd, Moo Shi Pork (with Mandarin Pancakes), and an interesting Hot and Sour Soup.

Lily Huang is the kitchen wizard who has mastered the Mandarin meals on the massive menu. Her experience in the field ranges from Master chef attached to a Taiwan Embassy in South America, to private cook to a very rich Chinese gentleman with discerning Mandarin tastes.

Mr. Chang was asked how his place could attract such a cook. To this he responded with a grin, "because I've promised her eventual partnership in the restaurant."

At a time when there is a great temptation to fill up our tummies and ignore our taste-buds (which has resulted in the big boom in fast food restaurants, that is bringing us a new "Burger King" to compliment the hamburger coterie of "McDonalds", "Ho Jo's" and "Hardees." It is good to know that there is a place where one can go and enjoy tasty Chinese food at a reasonable price; run by a family, rather than a Board of Directors. An average meal for four people would run you between 8-12 bucks including the tip. All of the main dishes are prepared while you wait (between ten to thirty minutes depending on the crowd), and that's not bad at all! If good food is more important than fancy lighting, Chinese Silkscreens, and a statue of a suma wrestler, then ACF is a fine place to spend an afternoon or evening. Check it out; sure beats a dinner or a "Big Mac" and fries.

A Tale Of Two Jacks

by Jerry Lazar

This is the tale of two Jacks. One is Jack Frost; the other Jack Barron.

Jack Frost is sort of an orange milkshake which was introduced in the Campus Center Coffee Shop last week. Jack Barron is the man who invented the Jack Frost. He is a student who works in the Campus Center Coffee Shop.

"I wanted to bring out the Jack Frost last year," Jack Barron told me, "but it took a while to perfect and develop the precise measurements."

What are the precise measurements?

"Oh, about one-third orange juice and two-thirds vanilla milkshake," said Jack Barron.

"That's it?" I asked.

"Yes, hand-stirred," he said. "Very refreshing. The best things in life are the simple things."

Some people accuse the Jack Frost of being an imitation of an Orange Julius; others say it tastes like a melted Creamsicle. Most people say they like it.

Jack Barron is also responsible for the Blue Max, another Coffee Shop delicacy. The Blue Max is an open-faced tuna on rye, topped with melted mozzarella cheese and tomato slices.

"I used to make them late at night at home in Newton," explained Jack, "except I used a bagel."

The Blue Max lost an international sandwich contest last year, to a Canadian bacon with Hollandaise sauce sandwich.

Jack didn't invent the Red Barron, although it's named after him. Franz Stegenbucher, assistant director of Campus Center Food Services, thought of the names Blue Max and Red Barron.

"He's of Austrian background," explained Jack.

The Red Barron is a hamburger, fried egg, onions, lettuce, tomato, and Russian dressing on a bun.

"It used to be called Big Mouth, and it never sold, said Jack. "So we changed the name, gave it a little advertising, and now it's a big success."

Jack Barron has been employed by Campus Center Food Services for a year and a half. He is a Hotel and Restaurant Administration major who will graduate in May.

He plans to be an independent restauranteur someday, with "multi-operations".

What are multi-operations?

"Lots of restaurants," explained Jack. "Since I love food, liquor, entertainment, and just the general pleasure of being around people enjoying themselves, I knew I would either go into show biz or restaurants."

Why restaurants over show biz?

"Well, I tell lousy jokes, and I have a lousy voice. Besides, the restaurant business is more stable. But I still would like to take over the Johnny Carson Show someday," he said.

What kind of restaurant could the Amherst area use?

"A deli-disco," said Jack, "like Ken's of Copley Square, which would serve medium-priced roast beef sandwiches, pastrami sandwiches, omelets, and have a discotheque downstairs and weekend entertainment."

Jack wants to open his own chain of restaurants someday, to be called — The Barron.

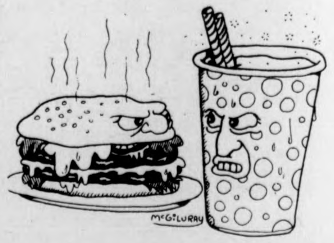
"It will be elegant, very expensive, probably in New York City (or maybe Montreal) and it will cater to the young and rich. And entertainment. It has to have good entertainment."

What's good entertainment these days?

"Oh, you know, Bette Midler, Pointer Sisters, Barbra Streisand, First Choice, Bloodstone. Fine entertainment," said Jack.

"It'll be more in the line of a modern-day El Morocco Club," he added, referring to the now defunct New York City bar and restaurant.

"And to be fair to both sexes, we'll have both male and female prostitutes," said Jack. "That way, even if the restaurant bombs, at least we'll have a good whore house."



Who is Walbridge? (and why he said those terrible things)

by Barbara Voorhees

Timothy P. Walbridge.

That blatantly sexist, male chauvinist pig!

How dare he write such a piece of crap?

And worse yet, how dare he send it to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a paper distributed to a community just loaded with women interested and active in the women's lib movement?

Pig.

I mean the guy has just got to be a twerp. A twerp, weighted down with Freudian complexes whose mother didn't love him and he has acne and wears white socks and chicks laugh at him and he carries a small whip in his back pocket.

And of course you can figure all this out cause you know him — all of ten paragraphs worth.

* * * * *

Letters To The Editor

Respect Yourself, Man!

the initiator...

Timothy P. Walbridge is 24. He comes from Springfield originally and now lives in an apartment in Northampton. He is a cook.

He was a chemistry major at UMass last year but dropped out in the middle of a semester to hitch cross country. He stopped in Atlanta, Kansas, Phoenix, Denver.

He will be back at UMass in January as a journalistic studies major; he thinks he could get into being a journalist 'cause it would mean being able to do something different every day.

He says he's flighty. Likes to move around and can't concentrate on one thing for a long time

He likes Hemingway and Tolkien.

And he smokes a pipe which doesn't stay lit.

If you saw him in the Hatch you wouldn't look twice.

Last year he lived in an all girls dorm on campus for a month. He tells you that it was fun.

He talks fast and as he talks his voice goes from high pitch back to high and his words seem to animate him.

Timothy P. Walbridge just likes to say what he pleases just when he pleases and just how he pleases.

He's just fucking tired of playing games.

* * * * * * *

(The following is a talk with Timothy).

B.V.: What brought you to write your first letter to the Collegian?

T.W.: It was a lot of things. But it was a certain instance which happened that made me go Rrrrrrr and I wrote the letter.

I was in the Hatch. I was sitting at a table with a friend having a beer and a guy and three or four women sat down. And like, all four of them, maybe this guy's a masochist or something, I don't know, but all four of them were fucking with him. Just verbally, you know.

Christ, that's very subjective. Maybe he didn't consider it fucking with him, maybe they didn't, maybe just I did. But I saw it and it really irked me and for awhile I didn't say anything but they were sitting right next to me and beginning to bother me. I couldn't help but hear them.

After awhile I turned around to the guy and said, "Why don't you get up, walk around the table and smack every one of them in the mouth?" and he laughed. And immediately they all turned to him, "What did he say, what did he say?" and they all started jumping on me.

Well, anyway, they left but he stayed, for awhile, but they came back and took him away.

It probably doesn't come across to you and somebody else sitting across the table would probably have a completely different interpretation than mine. But I'm not interested in their interpretation. I'm interested in mine.

B.V.: In what ways were they fucking with him?

T.W.: To tell you that I would have to be able to tell you what was said and I don't remember what was said. I just can't go back and analyze that one situation completely.

You get really abstract and you get really subjective on my part and the same instant analysis I was knocking that the people wrote in letters (replies to his first letter) I'm going to have to tap dance into on my own. It's easier to talk about women's liberation than it is to put that into words.

It's part of like what I said in my second letter when I answered people that wrote in response to the first letter I wrote. The one phrase of all those letters that sticks in my mind is, "positive implications for all people" which is what one of the girls said women's lib is all about. I wrote back and said, "Who decides what positive implications for all the people are?" Women? Don't buy it!

I said women don't like the idea of white male supremacy telling them what role that they're going to fit into. I don't like a large organized group of white or black women turning around and telling the men what's good for them.

and the responses

If they want to work together, fine. It's just the same thing in reverse as far as I'm concerned, at least the aspects of it I've seen. Since writing that letter I've seen other aspects of it that I have empathy with.

But the fucking around shit that I saw before, I just didn't like, so I wrote the letter. I was more interested in the response than I was in the letter.

B.V.: Was that one of your reasons for writing the letter, to get a response?

T.W.: I knew there would be a response and I got just about what I expected.

I expected someone to write in and say, "you're an ass-hole. There's no way I could not expect that.

I expected a queer to write-in. I got that.

And I expected some people to spend some time and think about it. Which three of those women did. Those are the three that I was interested in.

If somebody wants to get a point across they go to an extreme in one direction and then it kind of tapers off. What I saw was women's lib extreme or what I ran into. And I didn't like it. I didn't take it so I wrote the letter and I got responses.

B.V.: Have you just recently come to feel this way or has it built up over a period of time?

T.W.: It's probably built up. It wasn't like I just woke up one morning and said, "Hey, I don't think I like women's liberation."

Political things — job discrimination, things like how hard it is for a woman to get a conviction in a rape case — there's not much arguing you can do on something like that. If a woman does the same job as a man, which in most of the jobs I've worked at, they don't, but if they do, they should get equal pay. If two people sit at two typewriters and both type 60 words a minute, fine, they both get $2 an hour. Bango. I don't care.

I don't want to split hairs but like I've worked in factories where I got paid more than women who worked right next to me but if they had to pull someone off the line to unload trucks or sweep out a warehouse, it wasn't the women but the men.

Which is no reason why the women couldn't do it. But they didn't. So even though we were classified at the same job, we didn't get the same pay, but we didn't do the same work.

I could run around that stuff all afternoon.

It's not the literary or the political or the all-encompassing type of women's lib, their doctrines or their ideology that bugs me, it's just what goes on around me. Like between him and her or her and her or him and him. It's not their political moves, it's not their wanting equal pay for equal jobs, it's not their wanting equal rights and all that bunk. I don't understand it probably as much as I should to even have written the letter. But that's not what I was knocking.

I was more interested in interpersonal, two people, four people, it's that.

B.V.: Do you feel that women act superior in a lot of relationships?

T.W.: That's part of it. Or in control. Do I find that repulsive? Yes.

B.V.: What about men? Don't you ever find them acting superior in a relationship?

T.W.: Certainly. Men having control and men acting superior in a relationship. I see it all the time.

Go back to one of those responses. She says, "maybe you need a woman who believes in male liberation too." Maybe that's it. Just cut out the crap. I just don't like all the bullshit.

B.V.: Do you have a girlfriend?

T.W.: Yes.

B.V.: What did she think of the letter?

T.W.: She thought it was hilariously funny.

B.V.: Would you call yourself a sexist?

T.W.: No. But I can't say the letter wasn't sexist. I'd say the letter was pretty blatantly sexist.

and again... and again...

B.V.: Why did you write a blatantly sexist letter?

T.W.: It wasn't so much to stir up a controversy. I still don't understand what women's lib is all about. Maybe the basics, but not the subtleties of it, and neither do a lot of men. We don't understand it. All right, whose fault is it? Let me know. Nobody wrote back and told me.

If you don't like something or if something's not clear to you, say something. Do something. Don't just stand there.

If I had written a very agreeable, intellectual or pseudo-intellectual letter, I could have meandered around a bunch of little points and people could have read it and put it aside. I didn't want that. I wanted somebody to write back. I wanted some answers. Didn't get any.

B.V.: So you were looking for answers?

T.W.: Did I write it because I got fucked over some time? Or because I'm a blatant sexist? Or cause I wanted to know about women's lib? Or for attention? Or to create a controversy?

Or did I do it for all those things rolled up in a big ball and thrown at the Collegian? Maybe that's it. I mean I can think of things supporting all of them.

B.V.: Do you feel that you can actually define what women's lib is and therefore maybe women ought to tell all and say exactly what it is?

T.W.: I don't want women to tell me anything and I don't want men to tell me anything. I don't want people telling me that this is the way it should be. And I don't want to go through all this bullshit about how women have been fucked over cause they're not the only ones who have been fucked over. They're not the only ones who've been slammed into roles and I realize women's lib doesn't claim that but they center on it.

They say, "Sure, men have been fucked over and men have been role-orientated and women have been fucked over and role-orientated. O.K. Take the men and stick them in a little box and stick them under the table. O.K. Let's go girls!"

Bull shit.

What's wrong with people's liberation?

I didn't write that article for women. I wrote it for men.

Men need a kick in the ass. Maybe the letter was, maybe it wasn't.

Canines On Campus

by

Mark S. Panall

Everyone is saying so. So it must be true. The UMass campus is going to the dogs, in spite of a no-pet policy.

And who's counting?

There are no figures available as to the number of dogs who have found a home here, because they do not have to be registered (after all, they're not supposed to be here in the first place). But an educated guess is that the 20,000-plus two-legged population is supporting a four-legged population of at least 200 animals. They come in various sizes, pedigrees, dispositions, degrees of servitude (leashing) and conditions of fertility. And, as a result, they are posing an equal number of problems.

Just what is a "dog's life" at UMass? It varies anywhere from a snack at the Hatch to a trip to the kennel with room and board for a few days. Since there is no official "dog officer" at the University, our four-footed friends find little difficulty in the pursuit of their educations at UMass. However, if a complaint about him is lodged with the Campus Police and the suspect is apprehended, he is taken "uptown" to Ruder's kennels in North Amherst, where he is boarded at a cost of $2.50 per day.

If an animal is not claimed at the end of ten days, Massachusetts state law provides for the animal to be "put to sleep." However, if the animal looks particularly well cared for, it may be kept longer than ten days in anticipation of its being claimed.

The average of two animals per day taken to the kennel by the Campus Police indicates the great number of pets living on campus. In an average week, at least five animals are claimed by their owners and about two animals are "put to sleep." The cost of boarding an unclaimed animal is absorbed by the Town of Amherst — a substantial amount, considering the number of unclaimed animals.

The rate of abandonment of pets, while significantly lower since the no-pet rule in dormitories came into existence a few years ago, is down to two or three pets at the end of each semester (a marked decrease from the eight to ten average in pre-no-pet years). While the no-pet policy of the University has alleviated the abandonment rate, the kennel still receives many small puppies and kittens during the year that are in poor conditions of health and seem to have no homes or owners (the kennel receives mostly dogs).

The University Public Health Service recommends policies to and advises the Administration on pet policy. Massachusetts state codes do not allow animals in establishments where food is served, but while sitting in the dining commons or Hatch, the diner is still subject to a paw on the shin and a friendly face or the possibility of having his coat "watered."

The Campus Center employs a "dog officer" for four hours per day Monday thru Friday. it is he who escorts unattended animals to the door and informs people who attempt to bring in pets that the animal is not welcome. However, at just about any time, one of man's best friends is to be seen lounging somewhere in the Campus Center.

The Health Service also coordinates complaints on dog bites, dog fights, student fear of animals, excrements and animal related incidents on campus. Since the implementation of the no-pet policy in dormitories, complaints have dwindled.

As a result of the no-pet policy on campus, "Munchies", the campus mini-mart doesn't stock pet foods. The manager says, "We technically don't have a market for them. Right?" Students who shop "Munchies" buy the next best food for their cats — high priced cans of tuna.

Although a no-pets-in-dormitories rule has been established by the University, there is at least one animal living in any dormitory on campus. Complaints from students still reach the Health Service about pets in dorms regarding excrements and pet foods being left exposed on the floor to attract insects. The unsanitary environment created by animals in dormitories is also a problem from the point of view of maintenance. The "dirty duty" of cleaning up excrements and the stains in the rugs are an added inconvenience to the custodians' usually busy schedules of keeping up with people.

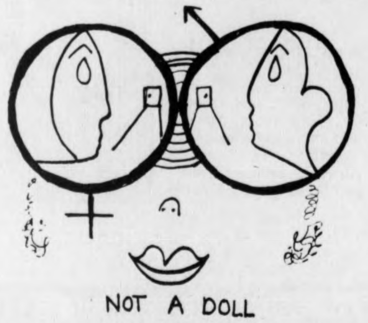
Information from interviews with some pet owners on campus as to why they have pets living with them yield the expected — people just like animals (and of course there are the inescapable cat lovers). Many people are accustomed to having animals around them at home and consequently, they also like to have animals with them at school. Campus pet owners do not think that the University lifestyle is bad for the pets' health or that they are too much of an imposition to others ("Everybody likes him").

A Health Service staff member says that "Residential halls and the University are no place for pets." He went on to note (from the pets' point of view) the long hours that he has seen dogs tied to trees (sometimes all day) and that while they are tied, the animals are subjected to mixed feelings by all of the people who go by (i.e., their likes or dislikes of dogs). The long hours of being handled by many people and the subjection to mixed feelings cause confusion in the dog's mind as to just who his master is, as the animal becomes somewhat "public property." The staffer also went on to say that the University pet is denied any real "territory" of his own.

In an attempt to better train the canine population and make them more easily assimilated into the campus community, a student-run course for dog owners is being offered to the students of the University. As a result, it's happening even more frequently that students will find dogs attending their classes — and even learning something.

One professor tells about the dog who walked up to a fire hydrant that had a sign on it which read "wet paint" ... and he did!

Why A Woman's Center Is Vital



by Carol McBaren

When I first thought of visiting the Everywoman's Center, it wasn't with an oppressive situation that needed alleviation. The only concrete case of sexism I could possibly distill from the academic slop was a class where I had been the only woman and the professor insisted on prefacing my name with a distinct "Miss" where the rest of the class went undifferentiated with a gutteral grunt. But, this being only mildly annoying, I was inclined to disregard it not feeling as though I was letting my oppressor get away with anything too critical.

My working knowledge of the woman's movement combined Germaine Greer on Johnny Carson last year and a glimpse of Jill Johnston in the Colonial Lounge for a rather sketchy view. The intrinsic qualifications of a person who had never seen the inside of a woman's center to write something coherent on the subject might be in doubt, but there are many women on this campus that are also removed from feminism and want a clear definition of what the whole concept might mean to them. Through many instances nebulous misconceptions have decided permanent attitudes.

The Everywoman's Center is a very comfortable place. The pressures I had felt; not having a secure philosophical orientation; not being knowledgeable on feminism and mainly, not feeling an overwhelming kinship with feminism, receeded into the background as I was welcomed into a very tight group of people. For a university that is not given to extended relationships, the woman's center acts as a web, weaving and connecting, getting larger every moment. After doing hard core lip service (plus carrying around a copy of Sisterhood is Powerful for a year and not breaking the binding) the real thing was staggering.

The resources at the Everywoman's Center are geared to the older woman. She is provided counseling, refuge, information on job opportunities, companionship and coffee. Various programs, staffed or sponsored are designed to help women become whole women or just help them fit the pieces that fell out back in. Everywoman's University this January will move towards this goal by art exhibitions, speakers, workshops, movies and music. The center also hopes to initiate later this year refresher courses for the professional women on campus and in the area.

There still remains that large segment of women here that feel either an alienation or an indifference towards the idea of woman's centers or feministic doctrines. What keeps these people unfamiliar with the resources of the Woman's centers? Maybe the very things that feminism is fighting against; brain numbing socialization, lack of opportunity, discrimination, fear, disruption of the status quo? Younger women are less likely to be placed in terribly oppressing situations and now because of the efforts of feminists, are able to cope with it better. If not for the attention and action brought to woman's rights, they might be more inclined towards feminism, but it's being done for them.

Some women feel confident in a male dominated world and are willing to meet the level instead of redefine it. Others can't feel oppression, it being too insidious for them to detect: Feminism isn't an attack on traditional lifestyles, it is bringing women the realization that there are alternate lifestyles. Gail, a member of Northeast Woman's Center says this may be attributed in part to bad press, associative doctrines such as militancy and lesbianism which might, discourage a closer inspection. An ideological problem is also present; some are dissatisfied with the individualistic problem solving approach and want to see a spectrum spanning approach dedicated to the root of the problem, or social change.

A woman has to reinspect her values; but the inherent bias of her socialization in a male oriented world defeats her. That is why a woman's center is vital; it serves as a forum a bit out of the normal perspective and helps a woman to reassess herself through support groups and other activities.

I feel desolation for the woman who dreads the sunrise and breakfast dishes; I anger for the woman who is discriminated against; I hope for the woman who is coming back to school. A Woman's Center, or as the Central Area calls theirs, "A Room of Her Own", is essential as a resource for woman. But loneliness and oppression don't really discriminate male or female. When mutual support aid and understanding is undistinguished between the sexes that is the day Woman's Center can close their doors. But if you don't know if there are doors, how can they be opened? Woman's Centers show you the doors, it's your decision whether or not to go through.

Personality Grounds The God Machine

IN CONCERT:
Mahavishnu Orchestra
Student Union Ballroom
Oct. 26

WELL WELL WELL... I liked this concert. Did YOU?

What Jumpin' John and his heartsome lads are indulging in more and more now is a music that incorporates the earlier stuff that made him palatable to large numbers of people, and adds to this style more of an overall improvisational setting than he'd been using in the past.

On stage, Mahavishnu is becoming looser, with different men in the band being given more solo space. Jan Hammer seems to be getting a bit more of a choice in what he does, and Cobham is as remarkable as ever. Rick Laird, the man who's always in the background playing the bass, managed to develop a lovely sitar-ish bass solo with the aid of Hammer's drone on the Mini-moog. Although I personally dislike Jerry Goodman's violin style (not rough enough for me — Ornette Coleman and Leroy Jenkins are my main men on that instrument), he didn't detract, but added extremely well in his solos and in his texturing of the music. And, although some might consider it gimmicky, I rather liked the lights circling the Student Union Ballroom right in the middle of McLaughlin's set. And I liked McLaughlin, didn't find him loose or repetitive or any such critics' words.

—Uman Gomes

After attending this concert, the second time I've seen them, I'm convinced that a certain someone would like the billing to be Mahavishnu John McLaughlin, His Orchestra, and Jerry Goodman. In fact, I think John would have been a lot happier if Goodman had stayed in the dressing room and had his violin piped in from there. And I'm not so sure Jerry didn't feel the same way.

There was a very distinct tension, not only between McLaughlin and Goodman but between McLaughlin and everybody in the Orchestra. I was sitting in the front row, right at McLaughlin's feet, as it were, having been a hardcore McLaughlin fan when I'd entered the room, and by the end of the first half-hour I was shaken by my inability to reconcile the image that I'd come to the concert with, that of McLaughlin the humble and devout, using his talents for the glorification of God, with the image that was rapidly developing on seeing him close-up for the first time: That of McLaughlin the egocentric, doing his best to steal the show from everybody else.

It's hard to tell whether someone on stage is looking at you when you're in a crowd, but I'm fairly sure that Goodman saw my rapid change from a position of rapt attention to a puzzled head-in-hand one, because when I looked over at him he was (I think) looking at me. He indicated McLaughlin with his eyes and looked back at me with an ironic smile on his face. I got the impression that he'd seen this happen to a lot of people.

As I mentioned earlier, the whole Orchestra seems to have developed the attitude that if John wanted to carry the whole show by himself they'd do their best to let him. As solo artists every member of the Orchestra was exceptional (not counting bass man Rick Laird) but when it came to cooking together, which is really what they're famous for, they were, for the most part, nothing. I've never seen them miss so many cues, especially keyboard player Jan Hammer, whose recorded work I really admire. The only time the band really seemed to get it together at all was in the last forty-five minutes of the concert, which I'll discuss momentarily.

The concert was divided roughly into two segments: The new compositions and the old. As near as I could tell from one listening the new things seem to be a lot more restrained and somewhat repetitious, and naturally supported almost totally by McLaughlin; the rest of the Orchestra has been relegated more and more to back-up work, much to my disappointment. I had judged from the Birds of Fire album that Jerry Goodman and perhaps Jan Hammer were going to become equal partners with McLaughlin. Hammer gets to do some nice work but Goodman is allowed to do almost nothing except underscore McLaughlin's statements and back-up plunking; I think he was given one solo out of the whole first section.

The second section began (and did I hear a sigh of relief?) with "Open Country Joy," one of my favorites. The beginning segment, which is quiet and countryish, went well, but as soon as they broke into the high-energy part, with its cascading refrain and lightning trade-offs, everything fell apart: cues were missed, licks were clumsy, and Hammer's synthesizer quit on him in mid-riff. Things were never the same afterwards.

Next came "The Dance of Maya," rewritten, apparently, into "The Dance of Maya Boogie." It was done in a much more up-tempo manner than the album version and somehow in the rewriting John got a much bigger part. I can't understand it. Goodman fired off an absolute show-stopper of a solo, though; one of the three or four solos he was allowed all night.

"Sanctuary" was attempted, with a fair amount of success considering that this was definitely one of Hammer's off nights. Both he and McLaughlin have a tendency to over-extend themselves in concert, and when they stumble slightly as a result they tend to look worse than they really are, especially McLaughlin, who has a frustrating habit of working himself into the middle of incredibly fast and complex solos and losing his train of thought.

The number that pulled everyone together or at least more so, was their closer, "One Word." I even saw Goodman and McLaughlin look at each other for the first time that night. Everything that went wrong in "Open Country Joy" went right here: The trade-offs were neat, the riffs were tasty, and the whole thing had a good feel to it.

If I haven't said anything previously about drummer Billy Cobham it isn't because I'm ignoring him. In fact, his performance was so consistently amazing that I felt he deserved at least a paragraph to himself. Of course, Cobham is nothing special: anyone with eight arms and four feet could probably do as well. And Keerist, what a solo! It was worth the price of admission for that alone. And please, Cob-ham, not Cobban.

Still, to my mind the hero of the evening was Jerry Goodman. He alone made not one mistake the entire night. He was there to play, bigod, and he played liquid fire.

I know that a lot of you people reading this went to and really enjoyed the concert, and I suppose it was better than I made it out to be. They are all fine musicians. Chalk it up to disillusionment. For me, my whole mood was set when McLaughlin expressed his attitude toward his concert, his music, and his audience at the end of the first number: one forefinger upraised, rotated twice.

—Andrew MacKenzie

John McLaughlin is not God, no matter what those people who idolize him believe. He is at best a second rate guitarist, contrary to popular myths regarding his ability.

Judging by the concerts I've seen him do and the albums I've heard, it would be fair to say that inconsistency is his trademark. He can be sloppy, haphazard and repetitious, and once in a while he can be clean, precise, and creative.

Evidence of the latter came only once in Friday's concert, when McLaughlin did some nice playing totally unaccompanied. His solo was predominantly triplets, though, which are easy enough to practice until you have enough flash.

That's really McLaughlin's problem — too much flash, otherwise known as the diarrhea of notes and constipation of ideas syndrome. Did you ever notice that he does those "bumblebee runs" mainly on his twelve string? And did you ever notice that the notes are coming out in octaves only sparsely, instead of constantly? Apparently, accuracy in picking is not one of McLaughlin's strong points.

His use of tone helps conceal his ability (or lack of it) also. Of his two tones, mellow and gross, his favorite is gross. This is usually reserved for his six string, because he doesn't hit very many of the notes in his runs anyway and the distortion helps munch up what's left.

Oh, well...

INTROSPECTION
THIJS VAN LEER (Columbia)
Time 35:50

Thijs Van Leer, co-mastermind of Focus, has come up with an album which is simply beautiful. Unlike the jazz-freeform rock of Focus, this album soley consists of classical numbers and two slow instrumentals. Thijs plays flute through out the disc and is accompanied by an orchestra. The other two cuts, "Focus I & II" are very good. "Focus II" has been previously released on Focus' "Moving Waves" album. On this disc, Thijs plays the guitar parts with his flute double-tracked. Excellent.

"Into" makes for an excellent effort for him. Don't expect any "Hocus Pocus" crap here, just nice classical material. B

In Concert:
Black Oak Arkansas, Foghat, Brownsville Station
21 October
Orpheum Theater, Boston

Sunday's bill at Boston Orpheum turned a once proud theatre into a pigsty. Brownsville Station played an interminable boogie, all the while threatening to turn the concert into a party — which I could have had at home without spending six bucks and putting up with Don Law's harsh security. Black Oak Arkansas made up in blatant tastelessness what they lacked in melody or musicianship. Both bands spent the evening urging the audience to clap along. The half-full house sluggishly complied. Pavlov's dogs would have been proud.

The true tragedy of the evening was that second-billed Foghat didn't have a different stage to play from. Even so, the assembled dullards were moved to respond without being told. Foghat, consisting mostly of Savoy Brown's best veterans, are technicians of rock excitement beyond the boogie level. Though they had to gear down their songs to their stuporous audience, and though neither of the guitarists could quite avoid playing redundant blooze leads, they played a few asses off in a classic case of pearls before swine.

Reformation: Usher In The Golden Age

In Concert:
Dave Mason
Chapin Hall, Williams College
Oct. 27

by Gary Gomes
and Jon Carr

Dave Mason has put together a group that can only be called super. After having come out of a year's retirement from touring only a few weeks before, Mason played two shows at Williams College Saturday night.

Mason began the set with an unaccompanied acoustic son, "Every Woman", from his new album (which, incidentally, is already out, and includes Graham Nash and other top English musicians). He showed considerable skill in his finger picking and his voice was just as good as from his Traffic days.

Several high and clear spots on the set were the tight, finely wrought guitar work between Mason and Jim Krueger. Krueger seems to have more technical expertise than Mason, but his approach to the guitar is rougher — Mason balanced this by his smoother approach to the guitar, and the harmonic dual leads were quite moving. Another fine song from the set was Mason's adaptation of "All Along the Watchtower", more Hendrix-inspired than Dylan-inspired, and almost awe-inspiring in its execution by Mason and his merry pranksters.

Mike Finnigan, a veteran of Hendrix sessions and the Jerry Hahn Brotherhood, had a chance to show his prodigious talents on the organ and voice in a blues they did for the second set, and when I saw the members of the band actually working at it during the second set, literally sweating out the music, I was very pleasantly surprised. "Look at You Look at Me" had some beautifully conceived and executed organ work, and his piano playing on "Only You Know and I Know" fit the basic funk required by the song. Boogie? Yeah, they did, but there was mind and emotion involved, with the esteemed Charles Fletcher stepping out to take some remarkable improvisations on the bass and bringing it back again. Drummer Rick Jaeger is outstanding, both for the rhythmic thrust he gave to compliment the group and for his powerful inventiveness on drums.

Your correspondents and photographer were lucky enough to talk with the group in between sets.

After Mason fixed us all with cups of tea, to which he is hopelessly addicted, we were able to get his perspective on a few subjects.

Traffic: "Right now they're low in energy, but I really haven't listened to much of their latest stuff."

On the break-up of Family, a group Mason produced on their first album: "I'm surprised they broke up. They were such a good group they should have made it. I really expected them to make it.

The U.S. and England: "I was last in England in April, but there's not much work there. The states are much better for musicians, more openings."

Mason had to split after not too long, and Gary Gomes started getting into Finnigan.

Talking to Mike Finnigan was an experience that would chill the hardened souls around us. The first item I discussed with him was a bit of hearsay from one of the sound engineers (these same engineers who found it within their ability to feedback Mason's voice on the strangest occasions) who said they were having difficulties with Mike's raising and lowering of volume (dynamics is the classy word) on the organ. "Y'see? That's how much they think about the organ!". And I knew I had found my man. After that, names leaped back and forth in front of the piano in the dressing room — Larry Coryell, Blue Thumb records (Finnigan is taking them to task to get out of his contract), Jack Bruce (Finnigan did a great vocal impersonation of Bruce), plus discussions about his former group, the Jerry Hahn Brotherhood, a supremely talented — but woefully neglected — "rock" group, plus gossip about what musicians of the ilk of Jaki Byard and Cecil Taylor were up to. Finnigan's a fine human being, with his 6'4" frame housing a serious leprechaun quality. Before setting out for the second set, he played some lovely blues and gospel piano playing, augmented by his fine voice. And after that, he, Krueger, and Mason gathered around Mason's acoustic and began singing some of the most beautiful harmonies. Earlier, Finnigan asked us if we'd stick around for the second set ... so we did.

Mason himself has been in the U.S. most of the time for the past two years, and he's been operating as a studio musician — and this has allowed him to come into contact with some of the finest musicians from the studio situation. It's also allowed him to develop his playing to a massive state. And his band!

Towards the end of the second set, Mason's voice began to fade, and I only hope that he got it back in time to do the taping for a TV show he had to attend Tuesday — for this group, although headed by Mason, is not restricted by Mason in any manner of form. He lies back, lets the other guys set their solo space in, and forms a tight-knit unit of the group. And Mason's new compositions are as lyrically beautiful as anything he did with that other group (you know, the guys from England — Steve Woodwind or something like that) — probably more lovely, if I don't play my hunches wrong. This is a superb vehicle for Masonry (ouch!) and a superb group.

They'll be on TV November 24 on Don Kirshner's Rock Special and then December 7 on Midnight Special.

By the way, Finnigan was quizzing himself as to the lack of life on the part of the audience. Then, with a look of divine revelation, he exclaimed, "Sopors!" But I think I can promise you that you wouldn't fall asleep at a Dave Mason concert — one helluva group.

Hathaway, Corea, And The Concert That Wouldn't Fit

In Concert:
Donny Hathaway—Chick Corea & Return To Forever
Curry Hicks Cage, UMass
Oct. 28

by Mike Kostek &
Ken Blanchard

Eep hour approached, and things were laxically tense. The coming doom of 8:00 and a quarter-filled Cage loomed very large in the heads of the well-meaning folks of the Concert Committee, who still apparently couldn't understand what went wrong.

At least they were indeed turning a very big page in UMass musical history, and it was sentimentally sweet and stirring to watch Chick Corea and his Return To Forever come out and sweep away the two year old cobwebs. Visions of Steve Winwood, Grace Slick, Ian Anderson, Sly Stone, Bill Cosby, David (no flashbulbs, please!) Frye, Buffie Ste. Marie, Johnny Winter, Steve Miller, Billy Cobham, B.B. King, Jimmy Greenspoon, Peter Newland and Alvin Lee flashed forth as the benign Gary Lewis-look alike Corea led his band above and beyond the Curry Hicks sweatshop.

Chick Corea and Return to Forever opened with material from their latest album, "Seventh Galaxy," and proceeded to perform an hour set of exciting improvisation.

Corea, certainly one of the most important modern pianists, is accompanied by three relative newcomers, each stars in their own right. Stanley Clarke, probably the most dazzling of the three, is truly a giant among bass players. The second song of their set, "Bass Folk Song," was written by Clarke and provided the opportunity for him to display his talents to the best advantage.

Drummer Lenny White adds another dimension to the group with his syncopations and biting off-time stick work. White was awesome throughout, and was an important factor in the tremendous energy generated by Return To Forever.

Chick Corea puts down some crisp, defiantly strange but logical lines, and compliments well. Yet when the guitarist solos, there is an audible mellowing out of piano work.

Backstage I asked Bill Connors how he liked playing with Corea, since he has only been playing with Return To Forever since March.

In reference to Corea and himself, Connors said, "It's weird ... we don't communicate at all."

"We both have pretty high standards," he continued. "When Chick takes a solo I do a lot of comping behind him, but when I solo, there's nothing."

In reply to my claim that despite this, the band still cooks during guitar solos and there are some really intense moments, Connors said, "That's really true, but I still get the feeling that he (Corea) would rather direct me than play with me and compliment me."

Despite the ever-present personality clashes in this group as in all groups, Chick Corea and Return To Forever really got it on Sunday night. They're the closest thing to a super-group I've seen.

After the intricate pyrotechnics of Return To Forever, the mood was immediately mellowed out and yet heated up (on the surface at least) with the arrival of Donny Hathaway and his band.

Bass, congas, drums and guitar set up behind him, Donny peered over his Fender Rhodes piano sitting on top of his amp and looked for life. Right off, as he unfolded his first number, he asked up to clap, told us to dance if we wanted to. But something wasn't there.

The band alternated between a great bouncy funkiness and a full mellow smoothness as the show went on. And, to the dismay of some in the crowd, there was no light show. Well, not much of one anyway.

Despite Donny's entreatments, the crowd stayed down. Donny peered out, his face beginning to harden. His tried and true version of "What's Goin' On" was fine, but didn't ignite the fuse.

The band was playing some fine things, with the drummer flipping out some sharp licks. Donny peered over the piano, his face now registering an almost blank expression. For the first four songs he had a look of 'Well, get this!', and apparently felt his band and his music would move things out. For the last four songs he wore a vague mask of displeasure.

There was some hope for something to break loose as the side bleachers were getting pretty wacky, but it wasn't enough, it wasn't right. Anyway, a dumb, hackneyed guitar solo by Gil Silver seemed to kill that.

Donny still peered out over his piano, but his face now said 'just another show', and off they zipped into a fiery instrumental that was a definite mover. Donny laid in some intriguing echoing, swirling piano, and the band heated up well. But that died too as, for no apparent reason, Hathaway got up, bowed and strode off. The band stayed, and the startled crowd hustled him back with a quick wave of 'What th'?' applause.

The eighth and final song was a fling at "You've Got A Friend". Donny peered over his piano and sang impassively. After the tune he repeated his earlier disappearing act., and split after briefly conferring with his manager. Fifty minutes in all. The crowd stomped for more, and certainly gave an encore-deserving amount of applause, but I got the feeling Donny was done with us. It also seems his voice was hurting, and so the show was over.

Over by 10:30, it seemed like a fitting end to this unappreciated concert that never quite seemed to fit. Some things never do fall into acceptance, never find a place in people's hearts. It was no "Tremendous Concert", as some would have you believe, but the bizarre sort of character it displayed was somehow nothing short of memorable.

4 Ventures Into Creativity

by Steve Ryan

Hard, cross-cutting winds swept across Chestnut Hill on the sun-drenched football field at Boston College on an October Saturday in 1924. The players would huddle in the ritual of calling the play whose destiny shalt not drift beyond the inner circle of those chosen, and so dearly cautioned, to listen in earnest;lest the devastation-hungry opposition overturn the best laid plans to waste!

But these plays were such a shallow secret. Down after down, the command was to get up for another hike to Uncle John. Signals! - 20 - 30 -40 - 50 - 60 - 70 - Hike! Passion play - John straight up the middle - No guarantee of safety. But the odds on five yards forward of new ground were even money; even amongst the silent followers who cast their bets in personal asides, unbeknownst and unspoken to any outer ear. The Twenties smiled muchly upon John. In jealousy some of us ineptly muttered, "We should all have the same share of sunshine."

All the other members of our family bow our heads and humbly, now and again crumpling, fall upon our knees and pray in steadfast grace for moderation in all things and the gracious path of Providence; lest defiant, broken and scattered luck stagger us downwardly on the uncharted path of careworn, Improvidence.

But Uncle John with your big, ever-present grin, you have made it known the listening to wisdom-whispers was not to be your calling. By 1929, you, John, were head football coach at Boston College. Everything was going down for others, but you were going up, maybe too early and too fast for a man newly twenty-eight.

They would say, yes, those who could heft such thoughts, that the Chicago Bears wanted you to play right offensive tackle to poke out holes for everybodys' favorite Cro-magnon, mesomorph, and centaur, Bronco Nagurski. John and Bronco, it would knock the breath out of us just to say it. No, thou, John, Chicago was too far away, besides, coaching was fun, until after four years they removed you like the changing of mothballs in a storage chest that were no better than the ones previously there, although some cheered, "New and fresh".

Boston College had punted you out-of-bounds, but in the thirties Boston had such fine golf courses and race tracks. Good friend, Doug Jugger would never drive one out-of-bounds. He could golf so well that he won the Club Championship at Brookline links five times. But, John, you were so very good too. Your twosome of straight-shooting hustlers kept you both in pocket money and more new golf balls than would rightly fit in any bag.

No, thou, John, a gamble of bigger stakes was the race track. Those compulsively fascinating horses were a fine place to ride your wildest dreams. In the thirties so very many said you gambled big - so very big. They all mentioned that you won $150,000 in five years. Only a few babbling indiscreet mouths mentioned that you lost $250,000 in eight years.

Like a tote board with awaiting numbers to flash on, the Forties came. Time heals all wounds, banks can reopen mortgages, and some setbacks along the backstretch can come streaking out of the red-ink into the victorious pink of things. Yes, pink cotton yarn in your three small factories. Early in the Forties, John had the quick hand-off. "There is big money in the right underwear." Underwear, yes underwear could cover any unsightly butt-end of past misfortune. The Forties called John a gentleman manufacturer of foundation garments. Surely it was an honorable profession.

But the undercutting Fifties, John, stripped you naked. Carter's had its hands in underwear, too. Carter's in Boston was a huge factory, but only a tentacle in the agglomeration of the corporation superstructure. What that octopus of a business did to your underwear was below the belt-line of all fair play.

In the Sixties, John, you were well known, no one would ask you to pull down your pants for collateral. Boston needed taxicab drivers, and they would say you can never keep a good man down.

Now in the Seventies you still haven't come to a stop, John. We ask why you don't retire and put aside some years of long sought for leisure on your path.

John grins and says, "If I quit, I'd just be bored. Besides, something new happens every day. Last Friday, I picked up a young man who was acting like he was on top of the world. He said he was smoking on a Havana cigar. 'Outlandishly expensive these days,' he said. 'If you can find somebody willing to sell you one.' The fellow wanted a ride to Providence, Rhode Island. I think he knew a bus trip would have been under $10, but he wanted it his way. He paid the $35 fare and tipped me a twenty bucks. It was quite a day; I had never been to Providence before."

"I talk like people. I look like everybody. Who do I look like?"

"Bernie Carr."

"Who?"

"Bernie Carr?"

The windows, black mirrors, reflect a hundred pinpoints of light.

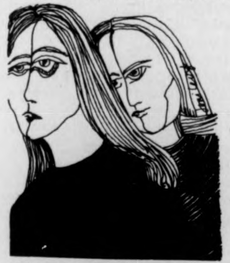
"Honest, you look just like this kid I used to know."

A hundred voices, a thousand sounds, babble and hum. I eavesdrop.

Opposite me a smooth-looking young man in a purple turtleneck strokes his moustache.

Overhead, piped in music, like a voice from the heavens, croons " ... what everyone expected of me, man was I deceived ... "

A pair of legs do their stuff into the Bluewall.



Purple Passion eyes me. Hey, baby, you wanna boogie?

A blur of colors, spinning wildly between barber pole stripes. Round and round and round she goes ...

" ... hey let's be what we ~~are~~ ... "

Actually P.P. isn't too bad-looking. Ah, but do I want your .. " ... hey let's be what we are ... "

Hum, hum, babble, hummmm.

The candy arcade spins, slows, stops, at cashew chews and peppermint rounds.

Coffee-flavored kisses are nice I think. Toothpaste ones are the best.

Hum, babble, hum. Reminds me of when I was a kid, waking up to the buzz of the other childrens' voices and the Saturday morning cartoons. How sad and how painful to have been such a shy and beloved child.

But the bed in which I curled fetal-like was warm and it comforted me and the gentle buzzing comforted me.

Now I am grown and a Saturday morning guest.

Comfort is a lot harder to find.

They even tell me that Rex Trailer's Pablo has died.

"A Plea"

No, no, no, my lusty darling,
Don't say that word again—
Even enrapt in your brawny arms,
That would only cause me pain;

Say, rather, that you only like me,
Like the glitter of flashing eyes—
The velvet luxury of silken flesh,
The delicious melting of supple thighs;

For I am no more than that to you,
A tender couch to gently recline upon—
To catch elusive Delight while you may,
And kiss her once and then begone;

So, before you drift to tranquil slumber,
This I implore you to heaven above—
Don't tarnish the word with your handsome lips:
Profane not the Name of Love!

The Great Concert Clash

by B. J. Roche

Where were you last weekend? Some caught John McLaughlin, others saw Women in Love or Dr. Zhivago, or possibly the Diana Ramos performance Saturday night, still others went to hear Donny Hathaway and Chick Corea on Sunday night. As a result of this infrequent abundance of weekend "happenings" on campus, students lost between ten and fourteen thousand dollars. What happened? To blame the situation on one group would be unfair as well as inaccurate, scraping the surface of an issue with many political and financial ramifications.

Friday night's performance of John McLaughlin and the Mahavishnu Orchestra marked the first event of the weekend, playing in the Student Union Ballroom. The concert, sponsored by the Program Council and Entropy, a non-profit production corporation, did not sell out as expected. Twelve hundred of the thirteen hundred tickets were sold. As a result, the two organizations lost a total of $3,600. Many questions arise regarding the matter, the first being who are the sponsors?

The Program Council was formed when the Student Union was built, and after the Campus Center was built, enlarged its duties. It was formed to provide entertainment at the Campus Center. In turn, it gives a two fold advantage to students. First, the council provides students the option of seeing many diverse forms of entertainment at reasonable prices. Secondly, through its profits, it helps support the Campus Center, thus keeping the Campus Center fee at a minimum. The Program Council opened the Crafts Shop, and shows about 45-50 movies a year. It also sponsored the Clean Living, NRBQ concert recently held in the CC Auditorium. It has an annual budget of $50,000, which is provided through the Campus Center Fee paid by students. The Council answers to the CC Board of Governors, which runs the Campus Center. Entropy, a New Haven and Cambridge based organization, is a non-profit corporation which produces rock concerts in order to benefit various grass roots organizations. It was started through grants and private loans, and under law, must give its profits away.

The last case of involvement with the group was with the Bonnie Raitt concert of last February. The majority of proceeds were understood to be going to various western Massachusetts projects. In actuality, $500 went to this part of the state, with $1,800 going to Boston. This left somewhat of a sour taste with the Concert Committee officials, but spokesmen from Entropy explained their end of the situation.

In order for them to donate money to a group, the group must first present a proposal, stating its objectives, needs, etc. Last winter, nine groups presented proposals citing needs for funds. Of these nine groups, two submitted proposals too late, five were already being funded through the state, OEO, or student funds, and two, the Women's Film Co-op and Our House, a Greenfield residential youth center received funding. Spokesmen feel that Entropy is a statewide project, and since money is so tight, it should be allocated to the places with the most need. They also noted that there had been no guarantee that the money would be spent in this part of the state.

The group has also been criticized for its lack of "professionalism". In its two year existence, through the production of twenty concerts, it has not had one arrest or injury. It has its own security people who train volunteers as well as work themselves.

Another question involved is that of why the concert was not held in the Cage, where it could have handled more people, allowing for better publicity. A concise policy regarding the use of the Cage has not yet been established. The Cage was closed down to concerts three years ago, when a Traffic concert drove students to $5,000 worth of damage. Throughout last year, the Concert Committee (not to be confused with the Program Council), after much negotiations with Boyden officials, finally gained the Cage for five dates. Through misinformation and misunderstandings the Program Council assumed they could have the Cage for that night. Entropy went ahead and signed McLaughlin, and it was later found that the Cage could not be used, due to basketball practices and the fact that the Concert Committee needed a day to set up for Sunday night's concert. As a result, the SUB was used.

And what of publicity? Walking to the Student Union, on Wednesday morning, one could note students putting up blue sheets announcing the concert Friday night. There were some announcements over WMUA, and that was about it. Since the final arrangements had not been made until Tuesday afternoon, it was fairly difficult to get good coverage. One of the aims, however, of this low amount of promotion, was to discourage a large crowd which the SUB just would not have been able to handle. Nevertheless, the McLaughlin worshippers knew. The point is, could they afford it: Four-fifth is a very reasonable price for such a concert, but what if one had already planned to attend Sunday night's concert?

This brings us to one of the main complaints about the situation. Why was the concert scheduled for that weekend? It was the best of times for McLaughlin, but the worst of times for UMass. There were three popular music events last week. Bob Shoo Bop review, McLaughlin, and Donny Hathaway, Chick Corea. Though they were of diverse styles, each represented a musical activity and it was thought that the McLaughlin concert offset attendance at both of the other events. Entropy stated that it had deliberately kept promotion at a minimum in order to keep this from happening.

On the whole there seemed to be a lack of coordination of activities, as well as an overlap of duties. The Concert Committee, whose sole purpose is to present concerts on campus, felt that it had been infringed upon; the Program Council and Entropy felt they had been deprived unfairly of the Cage.

The Concert Committee, which runs under a budget of $17,000 allocated by the Student Senate, lost about $9,000 on Sunday night's performance. One of the objectives of the Committee was to present "low keyed" entertainment at first, working up to bigger names and bigger crowds. It has its own corps of specially trained student martials to aid in security and prevent a repeat of the Traffic concert.

It is difficult to say whether the turnout for the Hathaway-Corea concert would have been that high, even without McLaughlin, as many students complained that they had never heard of Donny Hathaway or Chick Corea.

To lose $13,000 on one weekend of rock concerts is unnecessary. It is not only a waste of money, but a waste of time, energy, and effort put forth by a lot of people. Weekends at UMass are either so full of activity one must choose among many things, or they are so dull that one must resort to studying for entertainment. When it rains, it pours, and all that, all I know, is I'm going home this weekend ...

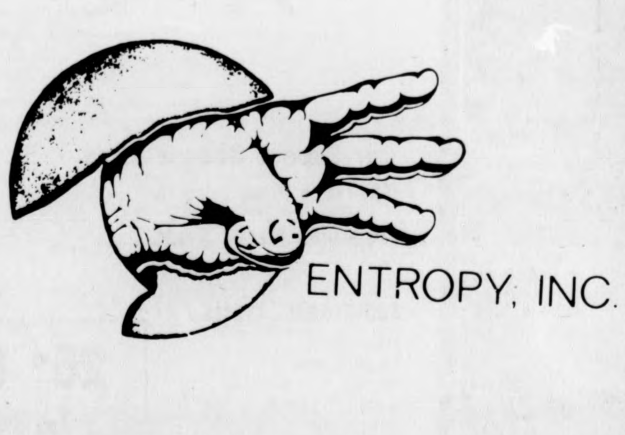
Fear And Loathing In The Campus Center

ENTROPY INC.

Entropy is a non-profit concert production corporation which distributes all profits to grass-roots community organizations with little chance of receiving funding elsewhere. The organization is run by two collectives, one in Cambridge, Mass., and the other in New Haven, Conn. These two collectives are a fusion of men and women with both extensive experience in the area of concert production and in working with the types of community groups that Entropy funds. Members of the two collectives receive annual salaries ranging between two and three thousand dollars according to their individual needs. Entropy, which has been in existance for almost two years, also draws on a volunteer force of over two hundred people. These volunteers contribute skills gained in the music industry in the areas of concert promotion and production, as well as functioning as an Entropy trained security force.

Entropy is obviously a different type of concert promoter and they are unique not only because they redistribute their profits. Entropy prefers to work with people who view the concert experience as an opportunity to develop media skills, and to cultivate a sense of community through providing quality entertainment for folks in the area.

Entropy distributes its profits through statewide funding boards made up of representatives from grass-roots community organizations.



ENTROPY, INC.

Fundings are made according to a strict set of guidelines. They fund community groups who have no chance of receiving federal, state or foundation money. Efforts are made to insure that these groups do not become dependent on Entropy as their sole source of revenue. Each group must present, as part of their proposal, evidence that they will utilize Entropy seed money to attain financial self-sufficiency. To date 95% of the groups receiving these grants have continued to function positively in their respective communites.

Last year Entropy and the U. Mass concert committee co-produced Bonnie Raitt and Chris Smither in concert at the Worcester dining common. Although Entropy realizes a statewide funding obligation, preference is given to groups in the immediate concert area, in this case the five college area. With the help of the U. Mass concert committee, Entropy was able to solicit applications from nine groups in this area. Five groups failed to meet the guidelines, having already received state or federal funding, while two groups, Our House in Greenfield, and The Womens Film Collective in Northhampton, received funds. Two other groups sent their applications too late and will be considered in the next round of funding.

This year, Entropy approached the concert committee with the possibility of presenting the Mahavishnu Orch. and Taj Mahal in a pair of concerts. After receiving a negative reply from the concert committee, Entropy was approached by the Program Council of the Campus Center Board of Governors. They were promised the use of Curry-Hicks Cage for both these shows. Due to an incredible amount of bureaucratic hassle and mis-communication Entropy and the Program Council were forced to present Mahavishnu in the Ballroom at a shared loss of 3600 dollars. Use of the Cage for a Taj Mahal concert on Nov. 9 is still in question. Entropy and the community organizations it benefits stand to take an even further loss of over 3,000 dollars in contractual obligations surrounding this concert.

Entropy perseveres in the hope of producing concerts at U. Mass. Hopefully U. Mass. students will prefer to continue to enjoy quality entertainment with the additional bonus of knowing that the money they pay will be used to help people in communities all over Massachusetts.

The Best Of LIFE

BOOK REVIEW: THE BEST OF LIFE
EDITED BY David E. Scherman
Time-Life Books, New York p. 303
$19.95

by Frederic C. Weiss

Until December 1972 three things seemed as certain as the sunrise; Walter Cronkite would be heading CBS News: The New York Times would be published daily; and Life magazine would appear weekly, sending a vision of lifestyles and events into many homes throughout this country.

Then the shock came. Due to financial problems and projected rising mail rates, Life decided to discontinue publication. After 36 years of diverse reporting Life died. To someone who had grown up with Life the shock was great, perhaps even a bit traumatic. Before I could read I was a fan of the magazine; thumbing through the pages and gazing at the pictures. To me, Life was more than just a magazine, it was sort of a friend.

Now the publishers of Life have come out with a memorable book: The Best of Life. The emphasis of the book is visual. The written material is limited to descriptions of the pictures. Therefore The Best of Life, is really "The best photographs from the history of Life Magazine." None of the feature stories from the history of the magazine are included. Nor the advertisements, which in retrospective provided as much of a cultural insight into lifestyles, as it did comic relief.

In commenting on the difficult task in publishing such a book, and his pride in its accomplishment, Ralph Graves, the last Managing Editor of Life wrote: "This book is a selection from more than 18 million images in Life's picture collection, the largest indexed treasury of its kind in the world. Choosing the best of these was a nightmare — and a privilege. The result is of course incomplete. It is also, we think, splendid."

Mr. Graves has just reason to be proud. The selection is a moving monument to the magazine that captured and in turn affected American Cultural patterns for over three decades. From Presidents to pygmies; tragic moments and warm rejoices. They are all here in this book. Of course, it has the obvious photos; The assassinations of the two Kennedy brothers and Martin Luther King; The Marines raising the flag at Iwo Jima, and the Astronauts walking on the moon; The sailor picking up and kissing a young woman in Times Square on V-J day.

However the book is also filled with pictures of regular people, living out their lives their own way. I feel that the most beautiful pictures are of people whose names are unknown: A Russian man trying to comfort his hysterical wife, after the discovery of their son's body, who was slain by the Nazis; A piano recital in a rural town, with all the anxious participants; The tragic yet heroic split second as an Austrailian pilot waits to be beheaded by a Japanese soldier, sword in the air; and a little boy walking with his younger sister through an opening in the woods.

These photos are indicative of the type of photographer that Life attracted. A person with the courage to go into war zones (two of them were killed in action), but also the creativity to catch a young girl's bashful smile, or a little boy talking to a policeman. These are just a few examples of the many different views, of so many different things saved forever by the photographers of the magazine. There is a sense of timelessness in these photos; the expressions of pain and joy live on forever, as fresh today as they were when first photographed. Some of the photos (the more recent) are in color; yet those in black and white are so poignant that they lose nothing in terms of realism.

Not all the pictures are of the United States. Much coverage is given to the international scenes; also the animal kingdom, and the world of science.

The pictures are so intense in so many ways: They're visually stunning; emotionally moving, intellectually prodding; educationally filling; and nostalgically fulfilling.

While I still miss the corney ads, and some of Life's features, I realize that there is just so much you can put into a book. And while it is fun to look through old originals with their chronological coffee stain that no re-publication can match, nevertheless I love this book in every way. The price is pretty steep ($19.95), but it is worth saving up for. While the age of electronic media is forcing many publications out of business — this book can always serve as a reminder to the time when there was a different way of living; when the "picture" magazine was waited for each week in anticipation. It will take you back over thirty years through the days of Life. It's one hell of a trip.

Where Were You In '62

American Graffiti
Starring Richard Dreyfuss and Ronny Howard

by Kathy Podesky and Steve DeCosta

Where were you in '62?

American Graffiti puts you in a small California town at the real, if not chronological, end of the '50's.

The film is a dusk-to-dawn portrayal of the charm and tribal energy of the teenage 1950's along with the listlessness and resignation of the incessant lines of the rock-n-roll songs of the period.

The viewer is cast in the epoch of the drive-in. The sequence of events revolves around Mel's, an all-night neon temple, featuring waitresses on roller skates. The drive-in food has names like the "Double Chubby Checker" that seem to feed the patrons as much as the food itself.

Director George Lucas has picked a moving medium for the film. Most of it takes place in and around cruising automobiles on the town streets. Teenage boys and girls drive slowly up and down the main street all night, in couples or in crowds, honking at each other or sometimes stopping to talk at stoplights, just flowing and cruising for hours. The automobile becomes the focus of other adolescent implosions; the broadcast music, drive-ins, and the romanticism of the time.

The roadsters are followed everywhere by the voice of an admired disc jockey. Wolfman Jack admits to knowing all and seeing all that transpires from his post. When one of the characters visits him in his lonely, early-morning studio, he denies his identity, saying he only plays the tapes of everybody's idol. Wolfman is black, and Lucas implies that it's not yet time for a black deity to reveal himself.

Mel's, the all night neon temple with drive-in food.

The characters Lucas creates are absolute beings of their time. They are portrayed with a sense of humor and detachment that allows them to easily become figures of nostalgia.

The film centers on four high school buddies, and focuses mainly on two who are planning to head east together to school. At the outset one is reluctant, the other eager to handle their prospective independence. By morning, the roles are reversed, the first boy leaves, and the other is content to stay with his hometown girl and attend the local community college. The reasons for the change, and other plot strands involving friends and enemies make up the story line.

American Graffiti portrays a group of late adolescents pinned to a target for cultural barrage. They are caught in a genre of fear. There is the fear of being too young to buy booze, or even of liking it, the fear of ritual necking, and even the fear of owning a car that looks like a kicked-around tin can. However, they are all involved in obeying the rules which prevent them from admitting their fear.

The characters seem locked in to careers, to the town, to whole lives. Only one escapes. Yet, even as he climbs aboard the plane to begin a new life at a big eastern college, he is still carrying a radio tuned to the favorite local station. As the plane takes off, the signal weakens and the crackle of static is his first indication — though he may not realize it — of his new-found freedom.

Graffiti was shot in Technoscope, a wide-screen process that yields a sandpaper grain, implying that the film relied on quick takes and a low budget. It is reminiscent of the cheap American International Pictures of the early 60's. The vital difference is that American Graffiti was photographed by academy award winning cinematographer Haskell Wexler. Most of the action takes place under harsh light and neon, a landscape that Wexler turns into extravagantly impressionistic images of glaring beauty. He creates, in a sense, a realistic abstraction.

George Lucas is a young film maker whose only other feature was THX-1138, a cool, cautionary science fiction tale that was released in 1970. It established him as a director of great technical range and resource. Lucas reminds his Graffiti audience of his earlier effort by candidly employing the THX-1138 title as the license plate number on the back of one of the jalopies.

Through American Graffiti, Lucas reveals a new and welcome depth of feeling. He recreates in this period piece the eagerness, the sadness, the ambitions, and the small defeats of a generation of young Americans.

The Living Room Art Gallery, 369 Pleasant St., Northampton will be featuring the works of Harriet Reimer during the month of November. Mrs. Reimer, a metal sculptor, has exhibited in numerous galleries in both the United States and Great Britain. Also featured are, paintings by Ned Diffendale, prints and drawings by Jane Miller and original batiks by Jacqueline Bradway. A formal opening will be held this Sunday, November 4, from 12-7 p.m.

WEEKEND

AMERICAN GRAFFITI

Set in a small California town in 1962 this film follows the events in the lives of some teenagers as they cruise around their hometown in their souped-up cars looking for action. The all night odyssey marks the symbolic end of their adolescence as some plan to leave for college the next day, others will stay in the town. The cultural manisfestations are swiftly and flashily portrayed, but the characters are carefully delineated and the film isn't lost in the time warp of drive — in car hops and beehive hairdos, but rather resonates our immediate past. Paris Theater, Springfield.

THE BATTLE OF ALGIERS (1968)

A stirring, brutal recreation of the last days the French occupied Algeria. Gillo Pontecorvo uses the documentary mode with such extraordinary ease that the events seem real. Lecture Room Two, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Wednesday, Nov. 7, 7:30.

THE BICYCLE THIEF (1948)

Victorio De Sica's classic of post war Italian neo-realism. De Sica used all non-professional actors to tell the simple story of a poverty stricken man who, on the first day of his new job, has his bicycle stolen. The film follows he and his son's desperate search throughout the streets of Rome to recover it. De Sica wished the American translation be "The Bicycle Thieves" for it concerns two thieves as Antonio, the man whose bicycle is stolen, attempts to steal it back at the end. De Sica's simple direction matches the story. Bosley Crowther in the New York Times said: "One of the ten best films in 40 years. In its revelation of a lonely man in a complex world it ranks for all-around greatness with any picture made." Herter 227, Tuesday, Nov. 6, 7 and 9.

THE BIRDS (1962)

Alfred Hitchcock's frightening vision of the Apocalypse in which the birds of the Earth turn and prey upon man. A terrifying film, with Rod Taylor, Tippi Hendrin, and Suzanne Pleshette. See ad for time and place.

BOY'S TOWN (1938)

Spencer Tracy's Oscar winning portrayal of Father Flannigan, the man who initiated the midwest sanctuary for bad boys. Soppy and forced, the kind of film one always hated as a child. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Saturday, November 3, 7 and 9:30.

DE SADE (1969)

Kerr Dullea, pretty and made-up like some sort of porcelain doll, plays the historic pervert in his formative years. About as interesting as a Wonder Bread commercial, the film has little to do with the Marquis we know and love. Thompson 104, Fridaa, November 2, 7, 9, and 11.

Katherine Ross and Dustin Hoffman graduate to what?

ELECTRA GLIDE IN BLUE

The director as self-proclaimed superstar. James William Guercio was the man behind those Foster Grants in all those half-page ads in the New York Times this past summer that announced his directorial debut as if a new Orson Welles was suddenly upon us. That's hardly the case; the film concerns a motorcycle cop in the Southwest who is a victim of sociological circumstances. The picture is something of a mystery, something of a comedy, something of youth message picture, and all a bloody bore. Robert Blake plays the motorcycle cop and the bloom of method acting certainly has wilted. Mr. Guercio should stick with managing Chicago, that commodity is much easier to handle. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

FRITZ THE CAT (1972)

R. Crumb's comic character was turned into the main character of a full length cartoon by Ralph Bakshi. An outrageous, often affecting comic satire filled with wonderfully funny characters and situations. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, November 7, 7 and 9.

GODSPELL

Jesus as a hippie flower child playing in that wonderful play-ground called Manhattan singing insipid songs with his idiotic cronies. Stephen Shwartz's songs are like malted milk balls: they stick to the top of your mouth after you've heard a few. The Gospel According To St. Matthew is played all over skyscrapers, plazas, and parks; the best place for this tripe would have been the sewers. Palace Theater, West Springfield.

THE GRADUATE (1968)

A very fine satiric film about the foibles of young love. Benjamin Braddock, recently a graduate from a fine Eastern college, has an affair with the wife of one of his parent's friends. He then falls in love with the woman's daughter. The film is a comic strip with the balloons removed. Mike Nichols is good at portraying the awkwardness of perfunctory dialogue and has a good sense of the absurd. The script, by Buck Henry, is almost a direct replication of Charles Webb's novel, and is quite funny until it turns about midway through into slick sentimentality. Nichols had the ingenious idea of casting Dustin Hoffman in the lead role, his presence completely jars the mental image one has of the character and gives the picture a sense of comic momentum. Anne Bancroft is tremendous as Mrs. Robinson. The songs are by Simon and Garfunkel. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, November 3, at 7, 9, and 11.

HEAVY TRAFFIC

The second full length cartoon feature by the makers of "Fritz The Cat". A brutal, often offensive cross-section of urban living whose gritiness is compensated by its strong evocation of city living. Striking use of interplay between real life situations and its cartoon complement. The adventures of a young Jewish boy in New York with no social type rudely presented. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

HOLIDAY (1938)

It is difficult to find Katherine Hepburn in a more radiant role than that of Linda, the unpredictable heiress who secretly yearns for her snobbish sister's plebian beau. The picture is the last of a kind of comedy that flourished in pre-World War Two America. Philip Barry's social comedy has a grace and wit which pivoted itself upon the differences between classes. George Cukor's direction is smooth and engrossing and transitions between comic and dramatic elements are seamless. Katherine Hepburn gives one of the three or four best performances in a career of unbelievable breadth. Cary Grant also is at the peak of his early career, the pairing of these two stars is inspired. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, November 3 at 7:30.

PAYDAY

A tough, semi-documentary drama about a religious con man in the South with exciting performance by Rip Torn in the central role. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

Divine knows her problem, and it sure isn't dandruff.

THE HOSPITAL (1972)

A frantic black comedy about the grisly misadventures of a large New York Hospital. George C. Scott plays the administrative surgeon who is on the verge of insanity, as it turns out so are most of his colleagues and patients. Paddy Chayevsky's script occasionally lays its message on a bit too thick, but is so swiftly written and hysterically funny that the film's hammy quality is easily forgivable. Scott has never been better and Diana Rigg plays the crazy young women with whom he has an affair so well that it is easy to understand why she is one of film's least appreciated talents. Sage Hall, Smith College.

KING OF HEARTS (1935)

Philippe DeBroca's lovely gossamar fantasy about the illusion of sanity in the world. It all takes place in a lovely French village during the First World War and stars Alan Bates. The film has an unbelievable rapport with college audiences — it has been running for more than two years at a Cambridge theater and often is discussed as one of the finest films ever made by students, certainly a good deal of fun. Academy of Music, Northampton.

MAYTIME (1935)

Jeanette McDonald and Nelson Eddy in an operetta which revolves around the consequences of unresolved love. A great finale where the two dance through a grove of flowering magnolias. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, November 6, at 9.

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1968)

Perhaps the best film ever made in Pittsburgh and one of the most frightening bits of trash ever conceived of on celluloid. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, November 6, at 7, 8:30 and 10.

THE PASSION OF ANNA (1968)

An unrealized Bergman film about the impossibility of fulfilling human relationships. The central tension between the inadequacy of the central characters' inability to relate and the illusion of tranquility in the outer world isn't very well drawn, and the Brechtian device of having the actors talk to the audience about the characters they are playing tends to delineate the plot line. The film, though, is superbly played by Liv Ullmann, and Max Von Sydow. The Globe, Northampton.

MY DARLING CLEMENTINE (1946)

Wyatt Earp becomes Marshall of Tombstone in order to avenge the death of his youngest brother. This John Ford western is taken from the true story of the famous gun fight between Wyatt Earp and his brothers and the Clanton gang, which took place near the Arizona mining town of Tombstone in 1880. Ford embodies most of the myths of the West in the paean to loyalty, courage, and gallantry. Many consider this to be the most classically beautiful Western of the Forties and it contains scenes, such as the traveling theatrical troupes arrival to town, unlike any others found in Westerns. With Henry Fonda, Linda Darnell, Victor Mature, Walter Brennan, and Ward Bond. Lecture Room One, Amherst College, Wednesday, November 7, at 4 and 8.

SWINGTIME (1937)

The most elegant and certainly the best of all the Astaire-Rogers films is this George Stevens musical about the romance of a dancing gambler and a nightclub performer. The design of the film is breathtaking; filled with huge shimmering black and white linoleum nightclubs nestled high in New York skyscrapers. Astaire and Rogers prove themselves the stuff legends are made of when they dance "Pick Yourself Up" in a dance studio and "Never Gonna Dance" on the nightclub floor. The score is by Jerome Kern and Dorothy Fields and includes such songs as "A Fine Romance" and "The Way You Look Tonight." Astaire has a mesmerizing solo called "Bojangles of Harlem", where he dances with three opaque representations of himself. With Edward Everett Horton. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, November 6, at 7 and 11 p.m.

PINK FLAMINGOS

What do you say about a two-hundred and fifty pound drag queen who eats dog feces? Nothing, except that she's hilarious. Perhaps the funniest picture of the year, most assuredly the filthiest. The plot concerns the battle between Babs Johnson and Connie and Raymond Marvel for the title of filthiest person alive and it's as exciting as any gang war can be. A supporting cast you will not believe. Director — screenwriter John Waters has a gift portraying for insanity that is really something else again, as is the performance of Divine in the title role, the neatest piece of character acting in a year where character is direly missing. See ads for time and place.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE — FIVE (1972)

George Roy Hill's shallow and slick attempt at portraying the never-never lands of Kurt Vonnegut Jr. The time tripping odyssey of its hero Billy Pilgrim centers around the horrors he experienced during the bombings of Dresden, but the film seems more concerned with making nasty caricatures out of every character but him and the picture loses much of its validity as a result. It is very well photographed and edited, with Michael Sachs. (See ad for time and place.)

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS (1937)

Adapted from the Rudyard Kipling novel, this respectable sea saga concerns the come-upins of a spoiled rich boy put on a fishing boat with a tough sea captain. An example of the competent, fine craft of Metro-Goldwyn Mayer films in the Thirties, the film has good action sequences, fine acting and a central character relationship that's difficult to resist. The locale is Gloucester. Tracy is magnificent; directed by Victor Fleming. Lecture Room One. Amherst College, Friday, November 2, 7:30 and 10.

Marathon Intercollegiate Session

"Good Turnout" To Impeach Nixon

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Nick Apostola, President of the UMass Student Government Association, and moderator at Saturday's second regional meeting in two weeks of the newly-formed New England Student Conference for Impeachment of President Nixon, described the meeting as, "a pretty good turnout of 35 schools. It's a good beginning."

In a marathon five-hour session in the Campus Center Auditorium, student government and newspaper representatives drew up an impeachment resolution and created plans to begin an eastern seaboard impeachment drive. Speeches were also made and workshops were held to acquaint students with organizational techniques.

Although most schools were not informed of the Conference until late last week, about 70 students from 35 schools were able to attend. Eighty schools had been contacted by letter during the week. Some of the colleges that were represented include: UMass, Smith, Hampshire, Amherst, Yale, Mt. Holyoke, Boston College, Boston University, Northeastern, Queens, Trinity, Wesleyan, Middlebury, Windham, UMass-Boston, Rhode Island Jr. College, Johnson and Wales, University of Vermont, American International College, and Barrington.

Representatives from Common Cause, a grassroots organization petitioning for campaign contribution reforms were present to show their support. Norma Beit, American Civil Liberties Union Director of the Impeachment Campaign in Massachusetts, counseled students on mobilization tactics.

The Conference began at 1 p.m. with an introductory speech and reading of the impeachment resolutions by Nick Apostola.

He said, "The purpose of this meeting is to formulate plans for November 10th through the 17th. We want to force congressmen to respond to the grassroots outcry against President Nixon."

Apostola presented the five impeachment resolutions which were adopted by the Conference after an hour-long debate over amendments. The resolutions include:

RESOLVED: That we, the New England Student Conference for Impeachment call for the impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon for high crimes and misdemeanors against the American people.

RESOLVED: That we, the New England Student Conference for Impeachment demand that new presidential and vice presidential elections be called following the impeachment and conviction of Richard M. Nixon.

RESOLVED: That we, the New England Student Conference for Impeachment call for the Congress to appoint an independent special prosecutor for the Watergate affair and related crimes.

RESOLVED: That we, the New England Student Conference for Impeachment demand that the confirmation of any person for the offices of the vice presidency or attorney general be delayed until such time as impeachment proceedings have been implemented and the President has been tried by the Senate.

RESOLVED: That we, the New England Conference for Impeachment demand that together with its investigation of the Watergate affair and related crimes, the Congress include the following within the impeachment proceedings:

--the ITT scandal

--the misspending of campaign funds

--the illegal bombings of Southeast Asia and other war crimes.

--the military take-over of the Allende government in Chile

--the establishment of a secret police force for five days in 1970

--the harassment and imprisonment of political dissentors

Copies of these resolutions will be sent to some eighty New England colleges.

The four guest speakers expressed a common feeling that students must band together with all groups of Americans to urge impeachment.

According to Larry Magid, director of the Student Center for Educational Research at UMass, the Conference represents an "opportunity for the student movement to reach out to the American people."

He said, "Whether Nixon is impeached or not is not the crucial issue. The issue is to let the American people understand what's going on and to realize their oppression."

Nesta King, Chairwoman of the Florida State Committee to Impeach Nixon, felt that her presence at the Conference "proves this is a national movement."

She added, "This is a revitalization of the student movement. We know how Americans feel. This is not a sophisticated, large-city movement by any means."

She said that she had received encouraging responses from schools in Iowa, Idaho, Colorado, and Kansas.

Ron Rosenblith urged students to circulate the Common Cause petitions which call for the reform of campaign election laws.

D.C. Stuffs Portions

By SUE ADLEY

Recently, there has been much controversy and student dissatisfaction over the dining commons. The result of the September Food Services referendum was to have a multi-selective menu (which would stay within the budget), with no seconds on main course items, but with an option of purchasing seconds if desired. Also, portions on some menu items were to be increased wherever possible from a physical and financial aspect. Most students feel now that portions are not being increased.

Joel Stoneham, director of the University Food Services, has held his job here for seven years and has been in this type of work for 15 years. "Seventy-seven out of 200 items have been increased on our menu...things like casseroles, stews, and others. It was only these items that were increased because by doing so, we could still remain within our budget allowance. Another reason is that some things, like cube steaks, already come in sufficient ounce form. Cold plates, too, are sufficient as they are," he said.

Stoneham added that it was the first servings that have been increased, not the seconds, as some students think. "Portions were increased beginning in the second week in October. I belive the students feel that they are being cheated because in the past they left the dining commons full due to the fact they they could go back as many times as they wanted. Now, not many get seconds, and they 'fill up' on salad and dessert," he said.

So the students could see exactly what menu item portions were increased and by how much, the Food Services printed yellow "table tents" that were placed on all the tables last week at dinner. Marie Cappadona, the Assistant Director of Menu Services, said, "The entrees listed on the tent were increased by one third. The gram protein percentage per serving ounce for several times was also listed for those students who feel they aren't getting enough protein from the dining commons food."

"I try to do as good a job as I can," Stoneham said. "I have to understand what the students are upset at. The food I've eaten in the dining commons is good. It's the atmosphere that's 'lousy'. It's crowded, noisy, and confusing. It's not a relaxing place to eat, and it's as close to army feeding as you can get. It's something we have to accept. We just have to realize it's not a downtown restaurant where everyone gets personal attention."

How does he feel about the results of the referendum? "I believe the best choice is what we have now. No longer is the small young lady subsidizing the big eater. He can buy more to eat if he wants it. It all balances out in the end. I think the majority of the students are satisfied. It's costing us something to institute this, but it's the only fair thing. He who eats the most pays the most," Stoneham said.

Rick Savini is the chairman of the Student Senate Rents and Fees committee, and one who helped draw up the referendum. "Joel Stoneham can say what he pleases about portion increases and we can't really prove it. It depends largely on how much trust is put in what he says," he said.

As far as the referendum is concerned, Savini agreed that what we have now is the best deal. He expressed concern, however, over student opinions. "I, myself, don't have a meal ticket, but from those who do, I've heard that the food tastes bad, the portions are small, and various other complaints. People are really dissatisfied and unhappy. The importance of the Food Services is to keep peoples' stomachs happy, but obviously they aren't. I've heard that the problems may be linked to a management problem, and the Rents and Fees committee will have to investigate and come up with something on that. All I know is that there is definitely a problem somewhere, simply from the number of complaints," he said.

Final Committee Report On Rhetoric Program Passed

By CHRIS WALTER

On Saturday, Nov. 3, the Faculty Senate Committee on Communication Skills passed by unanimous vote of the members present (not all members attended), a final Committee Report listing the Committee's recommendations with regard to the structure of the Rhetoric Program. The report recommends nine changes in the structure of the existing Rhet. program, some of the most important of which are: institution of a Rhet. exemption exam; establishment of a Communication Skills lab and tutoring service; alteration of the hierarchical structures of the program with the establishment of a Rhet. Board which would serve in an advisory capacity to the Director by suggesting policy, deciding upon exemptions and setting standards for instructors. The most controversial recommendation is the institution of a competency exam. This exam which would replace the current six hour Rhet. requirement would be given at least twice a year and would have to be passed in order to fulfill the requirement.

The CCS report was supported by SGA President Nick Apostola who also sat on the Committee, with the revision of two points: first, that the competency exam would not have to be both written and oral; and, second, that a student could opt to leave a Rhet. course and take the exam at any time without the recommendation of the course instructor.

Although the report was passed easily by the Committee, parts of it, especially the section recommending the institution of the competency exam, drew sharp criticism from other sectors.

At a stormy meeting on Nov. 1 called by the Organization of Rhet. Instructors, and attended by Joseph Frank, Head of the English Dept.; Malcolm Sillars, Director of the Rhet. Program; C.K. Smith, Course Director for Rhet. 100; and John Muller, Ass't Director of the Rhetoric Program and Chairman of the Faculty Senate Committee on Communication Skills, on Nov. 1, Frank came out very strongly against institution of a competency exam. Frank declared at that meeting that the exam constituted a "Monumental step away from liberal education."

Frank feels that such an exam would take the emphasis away from learning in a course and place it upon one exam. This type of atmosphere would make the course a "ram session" geared for one performance. At an interview with Frank on Nov. 2, he re-iterated and clarified his objections. "A competency exam would severely limit the variety in a course...A competency exam as procedure is phony, there is no conceivable way to give an exam that will adequately test speaking and writing skills," said Frank. It was also pointed out by Frank in the interview that, "There are as many different ways of expression as there are situations." Another problem which Frank feels is serious lies in the evaluation of the exams. "A person being paid by the hour to read and judge exams cannot do a good job," said Frank, "I can tell much more about a student by having him in class and seeing a variety of his work." Frank described himself as being "passionately" in favor of liberal education. In a note to the CCS meeting on Nov. 3, he stated that if the recommendations of the committe are passed, "I would be in favor of killing the (Rhetoric) program."

Frank was supported in his position by C.K. Smith, Course Director of Rhetoric 100. "The competency exam lowers the level of a course and makes students minimum conscious," said Smith. Competency exams were used at many colleges during the 1940's and 50's and "they didn't work then and won't work now," said Smith. He was also critical of making a student take the exam until it is passed. "Forcing students to take the exam over and over makes them minimum aware, and makes the minimum the maximum," said Smith. It was stressed by Smith that the program as it now stands is very good, and the institution of a competency exam would decrease its effectiveness.

A number of Teaching Assistants were also critical of parts of the CCS report. In a printed "Response to the Faculty Senate Rhetoric Committee" which will appear as an appendix to the CCS report it was stated,

> "We are opposed to the competency exam as an exit on pedagogical grounds. We are afraid that it will not be a valid index of a student's ability, and that it may tend to discourage, if not preclude, the intellectual experimentation we have found necessary to acquire language skills. It will also inevitably reduce the content of courses to a minimum level."

The T.A.'s also felt that "course syllabi should be optional," and that an "Executive Committee made up of course directors and an equal number of graduate students elected by fellow instructors" should be formed. The Executive Committee would handle matters concerning "curriculum, course content and requirements" and would be chaired by the Director of Rhetoric.

Malcolm Sillars, Director of the Rhetoric Program opposed Frank's position that the recommendations of the CCS were "meaningless and a contradiction." Although Sillars believes that some of the objections to the competency exam are valid, he described the CCS proposals as, "Something we can all live with." Sillars also pointed out that there are some laudable recommendations included in the report such as the establishment of a Communication Skills Center and Rhetoric Board. Sillars also felt that after the committee had worked for so long on the recommendations, it would be wrong to simply reject them. At the T.A.'s meeting on Nov. 1, he stated, "Considering the people on the committee and the time they have spent, I think this is something we can all live with." Sillars also stressed that this report was a recommendation of the committee and could be revised. Contrary to the opposition who criticized the limited nature of a standardized exam, Sillars saw the exam being given and judged by the Rhetoric instructors themselves.

The strongest voice in favor of the CCS report as it stands is John Muller. Muller chaired the committee, and is Assistant Director of the Rhetoric Program. According to Muller, the competency exam would contribute greatly to the "flexibility of the program." Said Muller, "No one who didn't need Rhetoric would have to take it." If a student didn't pass the exam, he would "see additional training," said Muller, "which isn't necessarily confined to classroom courses." A student would be allowed, "to simply exist at the university, and when he felt ready, the exam could be taken again." The exam would be given, "at least twice a year," according to Muller. If a student desired help, anywhere from one to six hours of Rhetoric could be taken.

Muller also stated that he feels the objections to the competency exam from the English Dept. are more political than idealistic. Muller said that Rhetoric in the past has been used as a "dumping ground" for English professors whose courses were cancelled for lack of enrollment. Muller said that this produced a less than enthusiastic, and therefore uncooperative staff, "who didn't want to teach Rhetoric." Muller feels that the new structure is making the Rhetoric Program an "independent entity" and that the desire to control the Program is what the English Dept. wants.

While Muller was sure on Nov. 2 that the recommendations would pass the Rhetoric committee, which it did easily on Nov. 3, he was also certain that it would have little trouble later on in the Academic Affairs Committee. Said Muller, "support for these recommendations is very widespread. Frank is the only one opposed to it." Muller aso pointed out that since the Rhet. Committee has members from a very wide variety of departments and fields, and all but one member is in favor of it, there is good reason that the Academic Affairs Committee and Faculty Senate will pass it.

Although not available for an interview, Nick Apostola stated that while he doesn't especially like the competency exam, it is "the best political compromise" and the best solution short of abolishing the Rhet. requirement. Apostola feels that this will at least allow students not needing Rhetoric to avoid it.

The recommendations will now go to the Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate appendicized by the T.A.'s objections and a minority report which is being prepared by Prof. Gadlin.

Finast Picketed: Unfirm Commitment

By JERRY LAZAR

Over two dozen pickets, mostly students from the five-college area, persevered strong, gusty winds Saturday to urge prospective shoppers not to patronize Finast on Route 9, Hadley, because of the supermarket's "unfirm commitment" to selling only United Farm Workers, AFL-CIO lettuce and grapes.

Robyn German, UFW organizer for the five-college area, told the Collegian that Finast had previously agreed to stop stocking non-union produce several weeks ago, but recently the store has been "fluctuating", she said.

Ms. German said that she discovered "scab" lettuce in the store several times last week, and when she brought it to the attention of the manager, Val Vivenzio, "he excused it as a mistake," she said.

"A commitment is no good to us unless it's a strong commitment," she said.

Vivenzio told the Collegian that he has not stocked grapes "for six weeks" because, he said, "union grapes are not available. We have union lettuce," he added. "I don't know why they're picketing out there."

Vivenzio admitted that the store has received non-union lettuce recently, "but we shipped it right back," he said. He conceded that some non-union lettuce was sold before returning it, but did not indicate how much.

There were no grapes in the store Saturday, and the lettuce shelf had a sign stating that "This lettuce was grown and harvested by members of the United Farm Workers, AFL-CIO.

"They're clean now," said Ms. German, "but they've been fluctuating. We want a straight commitment from them," she said.

Approximately twenty pickets were at Finast Friday night, also.

The leaflets distributed by the pickets Saturday described "the poverty and suffering of 3 million farmworkers":

"-----over 800,000 children under 16 working full time in the fields;

"-----$2,400 is the average yearly wage of a family working together;

"-----49 years is the average life expectancy of the farmworker (70 years is the life expectancy of the average American);

"-----90% of farmworker housing has no toilet, sink, tub, or shower."

In other UFW activity, the Stop and Shop supermarket chain agreed Wednesday to cooperate with the non-union grapes and lettuce boycott at a meeting in Boston between UFW representatives and Sidney Rabb, chairman of the board of Stop and Shop.

Atkins Fruit Bowl, Route 116, Amherst, was picketed Sunday as part of an ongoing attempt to get the fruitstand to remove scab products from its shelves.

The Other Side Of The Coin

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — An estimated 1,200 persons gave a standing ovation when Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., called for an end to the "vendetta" against President Nixon.

In a press conference before the "Support the President Rally" Saturday night, Thurmond challenged congressional critics of Nixon to bring impeachment charges against the President.

"If they really have grounds, let them bring them the charges and quit talking about it," Thurmond said.

"I expect to support President Nixon until he proves he is not worthy, which is not the case now," Thurmond said. However, he added, "I don't think he has been entirely blameless."

Thurmond said the President had been misled by some of his advisers and that he should have kept a closer eye on things. But the senator said the President's preoccupation with efforts on behalf of world peace was easy to understand.

Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., said at the rally: "I am convinced that the vast majority of Ameircans do not want our President swept out of office in a great wave of emotion.

Quality Of Living To Change At Belchertown

By JERRY LAZAR

Beryl W. Cohen, legal counsel representing parents of Belchertown State School residents, told the Belchertown Friends Association Sunday that he expects an unspecified sum of money will be appropriated by the state legislature this week to be used for restructuring the buildings at the state institution.

"The money will be used in a way which we (Belchertown Friends) will help decide, with the aid of professional architects," said Cohen. "We will change the whole quality of living in Belchertown State School."

Cohen indicated that the renovations will not be of a "fix-up, paint-up" nature, but rather the school will adopt what he emphasized as "accepted community standards of living."

The Belchertown Friends filed a suit in February, 1972 against the state in U.S. District Court, essentially protesting the allegedly inhumane conditions at the institution, and demanding that residents there be permitted to live a normal life, limited only by their handicap of retardation.

"The residents here should be able to live the same way you and I do," said Cohen. "We won't settle for less."

Cohen also indicated that "a mixture of about one hundred professional people", including doctors, psychologists, and educators, will be hired at the school next week.

"We've reached the point this week where the issues are so well-defined that, within one week, we will be able to provide some documentation of a decree or order coming from the court," said Cohen.

"This does not mean we're going to conclude the case," he added. "The case is just beginning. We are at the end of one stage and at the beginning of another. There's a great deal more to be done," he said.

The 21-month-long court case has been highlighted by "legal maneuvers to dismiss it or water it down," according to Cohen, who said that he was continuously "faced with a definited uphill battle."

Cohen cited the retirement of three judges, the re-appointment of a fourth judge, and motions to dismiss the case or remove it to state court as major obstacles.

Cohen will soon be meeting with U.S. District Court Judge Joseph L. Tauro, who has been handling the case since May, to discuss other areas in which improved conditions will be requested. These include: the record keeping system, dental program, prohibition of seclustion, review of rehabilitation plans, food services, exploitive labor, recreation program, and safety and hygiene.

In other business at Sunday night's meeting, the University Women, a service organization of UMass female faculty and wives of faculty, requested help in establishing a non-profit general store at the school, for the benefit of the residents.

A spokesman for the organization indicated that they have received the full support of the school's staff and Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of Belchertown Friends Association.

"It will be a chance for the community to get to know Belchertown better," said the group's spokesman, "as well as being helpful to Belchertown's residents."

University Women said they are requesting donations of clothing, jewelery, cosmetics, plants, radios, records, etc. to get the store off the ground.

Dr. Ricci announced that the second annual Superbowl of Music, an international drum and bugle corps competition, held August 13 for the benefit of the school at UMass Alumni Stadium, was responsible for contributing almost $10,000 to Belchertown. Last year, he said, the Superbowl of Music brought in $2,000.

A slight logistics problem arises on the way to a 9:05 class. There is a formal and an informal education to be learned.

It is going to be a long, cold winter according to many of the experts. There is no doubt any longer as to whether or not there will be a fuel shortage in the coming months. It has already been felt in many parts of the world, even in our small hide-a-way here in Amherst. People are being urged to conserve their use of fuel in any way possible. Don't drive your car unless it is really necessary. Turn the temperature down in your house or apartment and wear warmer clothes. We are going to have to learn that we can not keep bleeding the earth of its resources without putting something back.

...Impeach Nixon

He said, "You can't talk just about impeachment. You haven't won until you've changed the whole system, including the laws."

Doug Phelps, a Harvard law student, stressed concentration on local activities involving all groups of people--students, religious groups, civic groups, and business groups.

He felt the campaign to impeach should focus on two issues: 1.--to pressure Congress to demonstrate the feeling that Nixon should be impeached; and 2.--to keep the pressure on even if Congress doesn't respond.

He also suggested a national moratorium to be held on February 18, Washington's birthday.

He explained, "A moratorium on this day would dramatize the contrast between everything Washington stood for with everything Nixon stands for. For example, Washington never told a lie, and Nixon never tells the truth."

Phelps' suggestion was met with enthusiasm, although some students questioned the validity of holding a moratorium on a holiday. Many felt that since a moratorium included work stoppage, the moratorium would lose its effectiveness if held on a day no one works.

The suggestion was tabled to be discussed at the next meeting.

At 3 p.m., three workshops were held. Two hours later, reports were issued by the spokesman of each group.

Mike Silard, a student at Hampshire College, reported his committee's suggestions on how to bring a congressman home.

He said, "Contact local political, business, religious, and civic groups for their support. Set up a meeting in the form of a hearing in which citizens would testify their cases against the president before the congressman."

Mimi Beit, also from Hampshire, described different petitioning techniques. She said, "Personal letters and mailgrams are the best way to push. Hit the shopping centers with petitions."

She added that postcard campaigns can also be effective.

Norma Beit of ACLU suggested that, "Students assess the most effective way of getting the most signatures in a community. Do most petitioning off-campus."

She recommended a door-to-door campaign in smaller communities.

Garth Miano, a student at Queens College, announced a city-wide demonstration which is to be held in New York City on November 10. He urged all present to attend, and suggested that rallys and demonstrations be held throughout New England on a more local level.

At 6 p.m. an exhausted conference voted to hold a follow-up conference at UMass on Saturday, December 1. Progress reports will be given at this time, and plans for the moratorium will be discussed.

Gallup Poll

...Join A Growing Club

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The latest Gallup Poll shows an increase in those who think President Nixon should be impeached and a decrease in Nixon's popularity.

Twenty-seven per cent of those polled approved of Nixon's performance in office — the lowest since he took office five years ago and the second lowest of any president since Gallup began the popularity poll during the Franklin D. Roosevelt administration.

The poll said 33 per cent believed Nixon should be impeached and compelled to leave the presidency.

The poll was taken Oct. 19-22, the weekend that Archibald Cox was fired as the special Watergate prosecutor. The polling organization noted a marked difference in replies before and after Cox's firing.

The three-quarters of the survey completed before Cox's dismissal Oct. 20 showed 31 per cent approving Nixon's performance. In the interviews after the firing, 17 per cent approved of the way Nixon was doing his job.

Before Cox was fired, 30 per cent of those polled favored impeachment. After the firing, 45 per cent favored it.

The 1,583 adults surveyed were asked: "Do you approve or disapprove of the way Nixon is handling his job as president?"

In addition to the 27 per cent who approved, 60 per cent disapproved and 13 per cent had no opinion.

Those interviewed were also asked: "Do you think President Nixon should be impeached and compelled to leave the presidency or not?"

Thirty-three per cent replied that Nixon should be impeached and forced out of office, 52 per cent said he should not and 15 per cent had no opinion.

In an Aug. 3-6 poll asking the same question on impeachment, 26 per cent favored it, 61 per cent were opposed and 13 per cent had no opinion.

The latest presidential popularity percentage is only four points above the lowest figure ever recorded by the Gallup organization. That was the 23 per cent approval given President Harry S. Truman in 1951 during the Korean war.

Both Sides Warn

Mideast War Could Rise Anew

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel and Egypt warned simultaneously Sunday that the Middle East war could explode anew over the Egyptian demand that Israeli forces pull back to the Oct. 22 cease-fire lines.

The warnings came as the Tel Aviv military command said Israeli and Egyptian soldiers blazed away at one another with small arms fire for about an hour near Ismalia in the central sector of the Suez Canal and near Bur Taufiq at the waterway's southern end.

The Israeli defense minister, Moshe Dayan, said Egypt is concentrating its forces and can "definitely" be expected to renew fighting because of dissatifaction with the Oct. 24 truce lines.

"We have to realize the war is not yet over," Dayan declared in an interview on the Israeli state radio.

Egypt warned meanwhile that it might resume the war unless Israel withdraws to the Oct. 22 lines as required by the U.N. truce resolution.

And in Damascus, the Syrian radio said Arabs will accept nothing less than complete Israeli withdrawal from the Arab land occupied in 1967 and during last month's war.

"Any continuing fooling around by Golda Meir will only lead to a resumption of the fighting," the Syrian commentator added.

The talk of possible renewed fighting came amid intense diplomatic activity in several capitals and was perhaps aimed at the big-power officials trying to arrange a peace settlement.

Efforts to reinforce the cease-fire and get negotiations started have stalled so far on Israel's insistence on getting a prisoner exchange before moving back, and Egypt's equally adamant insistence that the pullback must come before anything else.

U. S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger departs Monday for a trip that includes a tour of Arab capitals as part of his efforts to bring the Arabs and Israelis together in some peace formula.

Against this background, Egyptian government spokesman Ahmad Anis was asked at a Cairo news conference whether Egypt had set a deadline for the Israeli pullback to the Oct. 22 lines.

"The withdrawal to the lines of Oct. 22 is supposed to be carried out immediately," Anis said. "The evasion of the implementations of the resolution do constitute a very serious situation, the results of which could again indeed be very serious with regards to the peace of the area."

Asked whether this meant Egypt might go back to war, he replied: "It could of course mean that Egypt will go back to war. We cannot sit with our hands tied in face of these violations."

But Anis avoided setting any deadline or time limit after which Egypt would resume the fighting. His comments were interpreted as signals to U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, due in Cairo Tuesday night on a peacemaking mission.

Kissinger's visit is eagerly awaited in Cairo, in official circles and among people listening to their radios, in anticipation that his renowned negotiating skills will come up with something that can be turned into an acceptable peace.

Israeli Premier Golda Meir prepared to leave Washington on Sunday after her intensive secret talks with Kissinger, who also was discussing settlement terms in the American capital with visiting Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy.

Anis said Egypt expected Kissinger will talk with President Anwar Sadat about how to carry out the U.N. cease-fire resolution, including its pull-back provisions. The resolution was sponsored in the United Nations by the United States and the Soviet Union.

The Oct. 24 Security Council truce called on both sides to return to positions they held as of the Oct. 22 cease-fire that was never respected.

Egypt claims that Israel grabbed a large chunck of Egyptian land between the two truces. Israel claims no one really knows where the Oct. 22 lines lay, and insists the pull-back cannot be considered until its prisoners of war are returned in some exhange with Egypt and Syria.

Egypt's top military spokesman, Gen. Izzedin Mukhtar, said at the Cairo news conference that Egypt began four days ago to honor an agreement with Israel on the exchange of wounded prisoners. But he charged that Israel failed to live up to its side of the bargain.

He and Anis said an unspecified number of Israeli wounded had actually been handed over under the auspices of the International Red Cross. They declined to give the total number of Israeli wounded in Egyptian hands.

Prisoner Issue Unsettled

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel headed for home Sunday with no indication of progress in her bid to win the release of prisoners held by Egypt and Syria.

Briefing Israeli reporters at Blair House on her talks with President Nixon, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and other U.S. officials, Mrs. Mier said "some things are clearer and others have to be clarified yet."

Mrs. Meir said she raised the prisoner issue during "every single conversation." The Israeli leader said a public report of the results would be made after she returns home.

Congress Calender Surprisingly Slack

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House plans action this week on a Social Security increase, while the Senate concentrates on its inquiries on Watergate, Rep. Gerald R. Ford and the firing of Archibald Cox.

For the fourth straight week, the Senate calendar is virtually bare as it awaits conference reports on bills passed in different form by the two houses and for the appropriations bills that must be passed before adjournment.

Despite the light schedule, the Watergate controversy, delay on the money bills and the Ford nomination have assured that once again the congressional session will run close to Christmas.

The House last week announced a 12-day Thanksgiving recess, to start a week from Thursday.

This week, however, it plans floor action on several important bills, including a six-month extension of the Watergate grand jury Tuesday, overriding President Nixon's veto of the bill limiting his war-making powers Wednesday and a $1.4-billion measure to save East Coast railroads Thursday.

Monday, the House Ways and Means Committee hopes to put together a Social Security benefit package that, unlike one already approved by the Senate Finance Committee, will likely include a payroll tax hike.

The seven percent increase voted by the Senate committee would cost $2.7 billion a year. Acting Ways and Means Committee Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., said he favors increasing the Social Security tax and the amount of income to which it is applied.

A House judiciary subcommittee, meanwhile, will start hearings Monday on the recent firing of Watergate prosecutor Cox. The first witnesses are acting Atty. Gen. Robert H. Bork and Cox, who spent three days last week before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

That panel is expected to hear this week from former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson, who resigned rather than fire Cox after Cox's refusal to yield to President Nixon's directive to limit efforts to get White House tapes and documents.

The Watergate hearings resume Tuesday with the first witness on campaign contributions, the third and final phase of its public hearings. It hopes to finish completely by Thanksgiving.

Ford testifies Monday for a second day on his vice presidential nomination before the Senate Rules Committee. The House Judiciary Committee may start its hearings on Ford later in the week.

Fighting On In Indochina

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-North Vietnamese tanks and infantry attacked two government camps close to the Cambodian border Sunday, the Saigon command said.

At the same time, the Viet Cong issued a new order to its forces threatening a further escalation of fighting in South Vietnam.

The North Vietnamese assault, spearheaded by at least 20 tanks, touched off one of the fiercest battles since the Jan. 28 cease-fire, the Saigon command said.

The command's spokesman, Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, said it was the largest number of tanks the North Vietnamese have committed to a single battle since the cease-fire. He claimed that nine of the tanks were knocked out in eight hours of fighting.

The Communist-led forces occupied a Montagnard tribal village lying between the two hilltop positions, but the government camps still were holding out, Hien said.

The site is two miles from the Cambodian border and 125 miles northeast of Saigon.

The two government positions are defended by about 300 troops with armor and artillery, the spokesman said.

Government artillerymen destroyed several tanks at a range of 500 yards while other were knocked out by air strikes, Hien said.

Increased Communist activity was detected in Quang Duc several days ago, and as a result government reinforcements were dispatched to the area, Hien told a news briefing.

"Government troops were not taken by surprise in this battle," Hien said. "We believe the enemy will take heavy casualties, but the defenders also cannot avoid heavy casualties."

The battle coincided with an order to Viet Cong forces in the central provinces of South Vietnam to launch counterattacks to regain territory lost to government troops since the cease-fire.

WARNS OFFENSIVE IMPENDING--South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu charged that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong are preparing for a new offensive and said his own forces might strike first. Thieu spoke during a National Day visit to the Bien Hoa military cemetary near Saigon.

Nixon Team Plans Next Move

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP)-President Nixon worked at the Florida White House yesterday while his lawyers charted the next moves in the case of the presidential tapes.

Nixon's top two legal advisers, J. Fred Buzhardt and Leonard Garment, arrived here Saturday, but a spokesman said at midday Sunday they had not met with the President.

Indications were that the two were conferring with White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr., who often acts as a middleman in relaying presidential views to other White House aides.

The lawyers return to court Tuesday to present more evidence in the case of the two Watergate-related conversations that the White House says were not recorded and thus could not be furnished in compliance with a subpoena.

In Wichita, Kan., Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., and columnist William F. Buckley, Jr., said Saturday they expect a startling development in the Watergate affair in the next few days.

They indicated they expect it to come from the court investigation into the missing tapes. The two were having coffee together at the Wichita airport and talked to a television news crew.

A White House spokesman said Nixon was working Sunday on the Middle East situation and on future moves to ease the energy crisis. The President talked during the day with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who leaves Monday on a diplomatic trip.

The President, who arrived Thursday for a long weekend in warm and sunny Florida, has been kept posted on suggestions in newspaper editorials that he resign, an aide said.

Administrative Freeze Hits Federal Housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic efforts to overturn President Nixon's freeze of major housing programs appear to have bogged down in confusion and delay for this session of Congress.

The delays, the Democrats concede, play into the hands of the President. They say the administration is comfortable with congressional inaction, since this allows the freeze to continue.

But the casualties of congressional failure to act, they say, are poor families hit by a virtual stoppage of the major subsidy programs designed to enable them to buy homes or move into low-rent apartments.

Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., chairman of the Senate housing subcommittee, originally set as his goal the passage of an omnibus housing bill in the 1973 session.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., No. 2 Democrat on the subcommittee, contends that Congress must mandate the President to go ahead with the subsidy programs for low-income families and community development programs such as urban renewal and model cities.

But Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., argues this would inevitably lead to a Nixon veto.

The administration's housing proposals seek to end the present subsidy programs in favor of direct cash payments to the poor.

Democrats contend the administration has killed a section of the 1968 Housing Act designed to make it possible for low-income families to buy homes.

They say the low-rent apartment program is dying.

And the third major subsidy program, public housing, is moribund, with no big new projects now being funded, they claim.

The administration argues that all of these programs have serious deficiencies.

The Senate subcommittee's staff expects pressures will soon generate to liberalize programs such as FHA mortgage insurance that chiefly benefit the middle class.

They point out that housing starts dropped in September to an annual rate of 1.7 million, the lowest for a long time.
